Lifters

Steve Dinneen, an employee of Crane Rental Inc., Salina, leans across a crane which he and co-worker Doug Losey, left, were preparing to use in an effort to install the unit onto a boiler. The crane is used to lift an economizer, a device which helps increase energy-generating efficiency, through the roof of the University Power Plant.

Author of 'Peter Principle' expresses humor in lectures

By MIKE HEDGES
Collegian Reporter

Dr. Laurence Peter is concerned about the state of education in the United States today. But he likes to be happy, and that is why the author of "The Peter Principle" and his most recent book, "The Laughter Principle," uses humor to emphasize what he thinks is a very serious matter.

Peter, professor emeritus of the University of British Columbia, was at K-State Wednesday to deliver two public lectures.

He told a group of about 140 students, faculty and administrators that he has been teaching for 40 years, and has devoted a good deal of that time to studying teacher competency.

"When I first began teaching," Peter said, "I got into it for three main reasons: the hours were good, you meet a lot of nice people and there is no heavy lifting."

"Since I've been studying competency in education and in business, I'm not sure whether the world is run by idiots that are sincere, or by wise guys putting us on."

Peter, whose book "The Peter Principle" was met with much criticism as well as praise, passes off the critics saying, "I believe as an outsider I have a completely objective view of the human race."

The book's main premise is that "in a hierarchy, individuals tend to rise to their levels of incompetence."

Peter used an example of this from the book about a teacher he worked with who he called Miss Ditto. "I've changed the name to protect the guilty," he said.

It seems that Miss Ditto was a great student in college and absorbed material very well — like a "ditto" machine. But when she began her teaching career, she didn't have any idea how to communicate what she knew to other people.

"She was so dull, she could light up a room simply by leaving it," Peter said.

Peter, now living in California and once an instructor at the University of Southern California, said even he has experienced rising to his level of incompetence.

"In British Columbia, money is given to teachers for research, but in the United States you have to write people and ask them for money for research grants."

"All of my colleagues got grants. I wrote everyone that I could think of and never got a single grant."

Peter, who gave numerous examples of incompetence in business, education, manufacturing and the military, says he doesn't expect people to be perfect.

"Some of the most competent people of all time goofed up once in a while," he said.

Peter said he is concerned with what he sees in society as more people than ever become incompetent in their jobs because of trends toward computerization and automation.

"It scares me to think that someone might be working in a nuclear power plant who isn't competent for the job. If that someone makes a mistake, a lot of people could be killed," he said.

Peter said the state of education in the nation's high schools is in serious condition.

"I live near a high school in California, and the traffic going in and out of there is incredible. I am appalled at the little bit of work that students are doing in California. And it's (California) supposed to have the best educational system in the United States," he said.

Peter is working on a project of humor in education. He said the worst thing educators can do is keep doing what has been done.

"Nobody has the answer on how to educate kids today, but some of us are working in the right direction. Humor is one of the finest coping mechanisms we have," he said.

Peter is now traveling the lecture circuit, speaking at colleges all over the United States. He said he is traveling because no one wanted to promote him after the publication of "The Peter Principle."

"Administrators don't like anyone (who) they think is making fun of them," he said.

He related this to his book "Peter's Academic Principle," which states, "academics are so vicious because they are so small."

At the end of his hour-long lecture, Peter gave this advice to the audience.

"If you can go through life and the wrinkles that you acquire are bookends of a lot of smiles, that's good, because you can't take things too seriously. Just remember, nobody is going to get out alive."

Groups win donor competition

Living group winners in the bloodmobile donation competition have been announced. Totals were based on the number of blood donors and the number of volunteer workers based on the total number in the living group.

Goodnow Hall won for large residence halls and Smurthwaite Cooperative House for small halls. Phi Gamma Delta won the greek division for the seventh consecutive semester with 100 percent donations.

Hispanic high-schoolers to visit

The Mexican American student organization, MEChA, is sponsoring a weekend for Hispanic high-school students from around the state Nov. 19-20 in conjunction with the fourth annual Gatos Bravos Basketball Tournament.

Visiting high-school students will be housed at K-State and will be given tours of the campus. They will attend information sessions about the University.

The weekend information session is planned so the students may attend the basketball tournament in the City Auditorium at 9 a.m. Nov. 19 and 20.

The team fee to participate in the tournament is $75 and teams wishing to compete may contact MEChA President Eddie Rodriguez at 532-5642 or 776-1990 after 5 p.m. The tournament is free and open to the public.

Prof joins spectroscopy committee

W.G. Fateley, professor of chemistry, has been appointed to the four-member executive committee of the first National Center for Biomedical Infrared Spectroscopy at Battelle Memorial Institute in Columbus, Ohio. The high technology center will provide state-of-the-art spectroscopic facilities and expertise to researchers in all aspects of the biological and medical sciences.

Fateley will advise in high technology projects and will assist in determining future plans for the center. His participation during its formative period was instrumental in obtaining a $5 million grant from the Division of Research Resources, National Institutes of Health, for funding the new center.

Man seeks powerlifting presidency

Nate Foster, graduate student in computer science, has been nominated by the United States Power Lifting Federation Committee to be its candidate for president of the International Powerlifting Federation. The election will be later this month.

If Foster is elected, he will serve a four-year term and will assume worldwide administration of powerlifting in 30 countries. He will oversee world powerlifting championships, rule changes and other obligations.

Foster, 43, is still in training and plans to participate in the Region 8 meet in April. He hopes to qualify for the next world championship in September.

Lecture focuses on Nobel winner

"Who is Barbara McClintock and Why Did She Win the Nobel Prize?" will be the subject of a public lecture by Robin Denell, professor of biology, at 4 p.m. Nov. 16 in Farrell Library 502B.

Denell will answer this question by talking about McClintock's research in genetics. There will be a reception preceding the lecture at 3:30 p.m. A display of articles about McClintock is on the fifth floor of Farrell.

Home ec adds two new programs

Two new programs have been announced in the College of Home Economics.

The Ruth Hoeflin Forum on Family Issues is in honor of the woman who served the college as dean for the past eight years and associate dean for the previous fifteen years.

The Home Economics Alumni Scholarship is designed to offer special assistance to students within the college.

The Hoeflin forum will feature one or more outstanding speakers on current topics and future ideas concerning family-related issues. Funds for the forum will be solicited annually by the college, in cooperation with the KSU Foundation, from alumni, faculty and friends of the college.

The alumni scholarship is supported by an endowed fund established by alumni and friends of the college. Started with an initial amount of $75,000, this program is designed to encourage or maintain enrollment in the college of students who show promise of academic excellence.

Burglars steal firearms

Sometime during the daylight hours of Oct. 24, person or persons unknown burglarized a residence six miles west of Keats on Riley County 412.

Entry was gained by removing a basement window from the house. Once inside the residence, the suspect went through the house and removed several items.

Some of the items taken include a Marlin 22 caliber semi-automatic rifle, serial number 06023448225, a Sears 12 gauge semi-automatic shotgun, serial number Q 131126, and a Marlin 30&30 lever action model 336L complete with sling, pad and Bushnell scope.

Also taken were numerous rings, coins, and other cash. The suspect then fled through an east door.

A neighbor to the east observed a vehicle parked just over the hill from the victim's house at approximately 1:30 p.m. The vehicle, possibly a pickup truck, did not belong to any of the neighbors and was described as light in color.

Anyone with any information on this or any other crime is urged to call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777. Your call will remain anonymous and you may qualify for a cash reward of up to $1,000.

Clark concludes testimony

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Interior Secretary-designate William P. Clark, concluding two days of testimony before a Senate committee, said Wednesday he hopes to be remembered as one who "kept the trust of the American people" as manager of the nation's natural resources.

Clark finished his testimony before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee as he had started it, making no firm commitments on policies or personnel.

But committee chairman James A. McClure, R-Idaho, said Clark had shown knowledge of and appreciation for the problems facing the department.

"Based on that record, I foresee no problem" in Clark's confirmation, McClure said. He said after the hearing that he hoped the committee could vote on Clark's nomination Friday, which would make Senate floor action possible next week.

Student aid increase forseen in new federal budget plan

By The College Press Service

After months of wrangling, Congress has passed a new federal education budget for the 1983-1984 school year that, if President Reagan agrees to it, will mean more federal funding for most college programs, including student aid, for the first time in three years.

"The overall picture (for federal student aid) is much more favorable for 1984," said Charlie Saunders, governmental affairs chief for the American Council on Education.

"Congress has approved at least $500 million more than the administration asked for, and more than $400 million more than last year's financial aid budget," he said.

Funding for Pell Grants, for instance, will increase from $2.4 billion for fiscal year 1983 to $2.8 billion this year. Under the new budget, students' maximum Pell Grant award will increase $100, from $1,800 to $1,900.

Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants funding will increase by $14.6 million, and State Student Incentive Grants will increase by $16 million.

Not all aid programs got more money or escaped cuts.

College Work Study funding will decrease from $590 million to $550 million this year under the new congressional funding package.

National Direct Student Loans funds will decrease nearly $18 million, from last year's $178.5 million to $161 million.

"We're very pleased we came out with higher figures in the areas we did," said Dallas Martin, executive director of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators. "The increase in the Pell Grant awards to $1,900 was very much needed."

Saunders added, "And the SEOG and SSIG programs are at last restored from the previous cuts they suffered. On the whole, it's a very good budget compared to past years."

Congress has repeatedly cut college funding during the last three years, though often not as much as President Reagan asked for in his annual federal budget proposals.

The president recommended shallower education cuts in his most recent budget proposals last February. The new budget will cover the fiscal year that started Oct. 1, 1983, and will end Sept. 30, 1984.

But "it doesn't put us where we should be," Martin said. "We're just back to our old 1980 levels. As costs have gone up, we still don't have any more money. But at least we're level."

Aid officials stress they're ready to start lobbying for more.

"The nation is concerned with the present education system, especially with all the national reports pointing out some of the problems we have," Saunders observed.

"The administration itself seems to be changing philosophy from making big cuts to at least holding the line on student aid."

With an election year ahead, Reagan is trying "to shed the blame" for student aid cuts and is "running for cover" by boosting some of the same programs he's tried to cut over the last few years, Saunders said.

"I think we've finally passed the cut-cut philosophy," agrees Martin. "There just wasn't the fat there (in financial aid programs) that many people suspected."

Martin doesn't foresee "any major infusion of money into financial aid like we saw in the '70s," but rather "a slow, gradual rebuilding" of aid programs.

For now, though, the new 1984 budget, which Reagan is expected to sign soon, means "there will be significantly more aid money available next year, and that awards will be made more promptly and notification will be made earlier," Saunders said.

"For a change, instead of having less money we now have more," Martin said. "For students it means it's worth struggling through (the aid process) because there's some money in the end now."

Castro greets wounded prisoners; U.S. troops hold Cuban diplomats

By The Associated Press

PORT SALINES, Grenada — Fifty-seven wounded Cuban prisoners and 10 Cuban medics were flown from Grenada to Havana Wednesday and greeted on the airport runway by President Fidel Castro.

The Cubans wounded in the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada were flown from here to Barbados on an American military cargo plane, then transferred to a Red Cross jet for the flight to Havana.

Castro stood at the foot of the gangway while the Cubans were taken from the plane and transferred to ambulances. He said a few words to each, but made no speech.

Cuba claimed earlier that U.S. forces on Grenada had arrested two Cuban diplomats and were holding the Cuban diplomatic corps inside its embassy in St. George's.

Gaston Diaz, first secretary of the embassy here, said the Cuban diplomats were being held "virtual prisoners." He said no one was allowed to leave the embassy except when guards twice took him and Ambassador Julian Torres Rizo out Wednesday to meet with State Department officials.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said in Washington that U.S. forces surrounded the Cuban Embassy in Grenada in cooperation with Governor General Sir Paul Scoon's orders.

Scoon, the British-appointed governor general who is trying to establish a temporary government in Grenada, on Tuesday gave the Cuban diplomatic corps in Grenada 24 hours to get out.

Cuban has said it would not withdraw its mission in St. George's until all Cuban prisoners were evacuated, and U.S. troops would have to use force to get them out sooner. An estimated 600 prisoners remained on the island by Wednesday afternoon.

Scoon's expulsion order also applied to Soviet and Libyan diplomats. There was no word from those countries whether they would leave.

The U.N. General Assembly voted 108-9 with 27 abstentions to adopt a non-binding resolution calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Grenada. Those opposed included the United States and some of the Caribbean nations that participated in the Oct. 25 invasion.

The Pentagon said 18 U.S. servicemen had been killed and 91 wounded in Grenada. It said 599 U.S. citizens and 121 foreign nationals have been flown off the island.

The Pentagon said 1,800 Marines were being detached from the Grenada operation to head for Lebanon. Occupation of Grenada has been taken over by about 5,000 soldiers of the 82nd Airborne Division.

The Pentagon also said Marines on Carriacou Island had been "relieved of duty" by troops of the 82nd Airborne.

The Marines landed on Carriacou Island, about 20 miles north of Grenada, on Tuesday in search of Cuban and Grenadian holdouts.

The planeload of Cuban prisoners boarded the Army C-130 transport plane shortly after noon at the airport the Cubans had been helping build before the invasion.

Fighting environmental dangers

Warnings about our health and environment are nothing new. We are subjected to warnings of deadly cancer causing agents with the potential to kill us if we use enormous amounts of the agent. One of the most recent cases is called the greenhouse effect. Unfortunately, people have dismissed it as a danger of the far future, a problem for others to worry about.

However, that attitude is a very dangerous, and selfish, one. The post-college age generations have been blamed for the shortages we have now, for the problems they were aware of but failed to address before they got out of hand. But our generation is guilty of the same crime: a selfish attitude.

The greenhouse effect would not be felt, according to projections, until the late 1990s or the early 21st century. For that reason, we have chosen to ignore scientist's warnings.

The immediacy of the greenhouse effect, if it remains unheeded, will only worsen. We must face our responsibilities now and take measures to halt it.

The major cause of the problem is a buildup of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere stemming from a lack of trees and the burning of fossil fuels. As the buildup destroys earth's ozone layer it acts as a blanket, raising the surface temperature of the earth and reducing precipitation.

The problem has been caused by irresponsibility on the part of man toward nature and it will only be solved by an immediate attitude change and a commitment to action.

The earth may now have the resiliency to recuperate from all the damage man has done, but that cannot continue much longer. Soon, the damage will become irreparable. A temperature change of only a few degrees could be deadly. A minute change could produce obvious effects on the vegetation and surface water levels.

The Environmental Protection Agency has predicted that by the year 2040, temperatures will increase by about four degrees Fahrenheit and sea level will rise by about two feet. The numbers are small but the consequences are great.

Now, while the problem is not at crisis proportions, is when we must tackle the problems the greenhouse effect presents. We can no longer ignore the urgent message being sent. Our responsibility to future generations is at stake. Pay heed to the implied warnings — the effects of our lack of concern may be seen sooner than we suspect.

Rules are rules?

The following is a story or several "stories." The names have not been given to protect the innocent...and perhaps the guilty.

The place: K-State. The time: about two weeks ago.

The story: One day, Professor A posted a computer printout of some test grades on the wall outside a lecture room of Denison Hall. The next class day, Professor A discovered that the grades were missing. The professor called the custodial office and they knew nothing about the grades.

Suspecting that they were taken by a student, the grades (which had taken 10 hours to process) had begun to be reprocessed. At the same time, Secretaries A and B were asked to investigate "the case of the missing grades."

Keenly, Secretaries A and B traced the grades down through the maintenance department to the office of University Facilities. It was discovered that "all the things were taken off the walls" in Denison.

Secretary A called Administrator A in the office of University Facilities, but said that Administrator A "refused to release the grades" and said "she wanted to look over" the material collected from the walls.

Now, according to Administrator A, the grades were "never denied" release.

Secretary A said that the administrator read her the rules from the "Student Governing Association Literature and Notice Regulations Handbook" over the phone.

It seems that Denison had had a buildup of material on the walls. Administrator A said that she had given instructions to clear "only the windows" of materials which were "causing hazards" but that the custodians had "got carried away."

Professor A said that she had then personally called Administrator A to regain the grades. At this time, the administrator suggested that the professor pick up the grades and that if the grades were to be posted, "the department" should buy a bulletin board. The professor said that it is not his department's building.

But, Administrator A claims she said that University Facilities needed to provide bulletin boards.

Professor A said it was suggested that Administrator A make apologies to the Secretaries A and B, but was told that "no apologies would be made" and that "if it happened again (grades posted on the wall), they would be taken right down."

But, Administrator A said "we're as sorry as we can be" and that "amends are being made." She said that they had "acted wrongly by not contacting them beforehand."

All in all, grade sheets were taken from three classes, affecting 750 students.

Administrator A said that Denison was not the ONLY hall affected by the actions. She also said that no other calls were received in reference to taking down things from halls.

But according to Professors B, C, D, and E; Eisenhower Hall was also hit. And Secretary C said that she also had called Administrator A about the actions in Eisenhower and was also "read the rules over the phone."

Professor B said that a history honorary club had "worked really hard to make and put up posters the night before an event. They always posted them in 'approved places' and had always taken them down after the event. The next morning, the posters were gone and it was reported that custodians had taken them down 'under orders.'"

Professor C said that around midnight five janitors were seen taking down things from the halls, but said the posters were attached to tile which is not affected by tape. The posters were taken and the tape was left stuck to the walls. The action was described as "total contempt for the faculty."

Administrator A said it has "never happened before."

But Professor C said it's "NOT the first time this has happened."

Secretary C said that at about 7:20 a.m. custodians were found taking down posters from Eisenhower. Things were also taken from the office doors. Professor D confronted them and confiscated the material. The posters were torn apart. There had been no notice, no warning. Professor E called it an "act of vandalism" and the University Police were called to the scene.

Professor E said that a witness to the removal said it was NOT the custodians but someone from the office of University Facilities (who had not stuck around after the material was confiscated). The police said there was nothing they could do about it so they "just took the report."

The professor called it "harassment of faculty." The professor also said that one other night a security person had been found taking things down and said he had "orders to do it."

It all makes one wonder, is the administration supporting faculty or just trying to show them who's boss?

It was said that Administrator B was sending letters of apologies to the outraged faculty; no letter had been received at that time.

Secretary C said that students won't know about upcoming events now and that there is not enough space on the bulletin boards right now. Bulletin boards cost $100 apiece and the department can't afford it. What is the faculty to do? The hall, clear of all the posters, was compared to a morgue.

Department Head A, Professor C, and Student A have written letters to University President A. These letters voice many other angry faculty and students.

Why? For the sake of following rules?

Which rules? There ARE exact rules of how, when, and where to post anything on campus described in the SGA Literature and Notice Regulation handbook.

What rules were broken?

Tape was used. Posting of grades, or articles of general interest, do NOT "pertain to a future event." A "poster registration sheet" was not submitted to SGA for some of the things taken down. Outside a classroom door or on ANY wall or window is not an "approved location." In fact, according to regulations, all of the professors who have ever "abused posting privileges" are supposed to be "referred to the student judicial system." This means ALL the professors that have ever hung anything on their doors or a wall are due for judicial actions, right? — since "rules are rules."

As for the custodians (if any were involved), they were "just following orders." What, are they in the military? — question authority.

As for the administrators in University Facilities, they were "just following the rules." Until this University is named after you, "Ms. A and Mr. B," remember it's not yours.

As for the professors, if any of you are missing anything you've posted, save yourself a lot of time. The office of University Facilities still has a "whole trash bag full" of things that were taken down.

As for Student Senate, if University Facilities finds it their duty to follow the rules this rigidly, senate needs to review and amend the regulations for academic postings or allocate some money for bulletin boards to our pushed-around faculty, (they have enough to do without having to track down things all over campus.)

As for the students, remember; "rules are rules." So I guess this means if the building is on fire, and there is a "no running" sign posted, you walk. Right?

Here and now briefs

WASHINGTON — At the GOP's 1980 national convention in Detroit, about 500 sanguine young Republicans rallied in support of Ronald Reagan outside his hotel. From the decibel level of their roars, one could easily sense an unquestioning enthusiasm among youth for Reagan.

Yet the din could not drown out at least one concern voiced by many of the young Reaganites: Would their man ship them off to war, and, if so, would the cause be justifiable?

Recollection that fear of dubious battle often knows no partisan lines prompted us to survey college newspaper editors for the campus reaction to last week's escalation of U.S. military involvement overseas. While the sentiments were mixed, we found them hardly enthusiastic.

At Ohio State University, Gretel Wikle of The Lantern (daily circ. 35,000) said that students generally and the newspaper's nine editors in particular had approved of last Tuesday's U.S.-sponsored invasion of Grenada, but not simply for the purpose of "saving" American lives. "We're convinced" that Grenada posed a military threat to the United States, Wikle said on behalf of The Lantern's editorial board. Yet last week the same editors voted to call for the immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Lebanon.

Reaction at the University of Massachusetts took a more negative tack. "This campus as a whole would tend to be very against the invasion," said Joel Myerson of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian (circ. 17,000), which devoted three pages to the story. "There is some fear of the draft (coming back)...and of some kind of war because of our involvement in different parts of the world." Myerson said the invasion would "spark not only more general awareness but also action on the part of the whole student body."

Sentiment at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville was more representative. Roger Bryant of the UT Daily Beacon (circ. 15,000) conceded, "Most people don't know what to think" but that they "have some reservations." In an editorial published Oct. 26, the Beacon contended that "the explanation of our government should be approached with great skepticism" and that "the specter of imperialism hangs over us today."

Though Bryant said he hadn't sensed an increased fear of a draft, he added that there was evidence of gallows humor among students. "Some people," Bryant said, "have made joking references, things like, 'Now we have a choice of trouble spots to see), what with the Middle East, Central America and now the Caribbean.'"

Yale University's Wendell Bell takes exception to the administration's version of events in Grenada. A sociologist who specializes in Caribbean affairs, Bell suggests that operatives of the Central Intelligence Agency could have encouraged subordinates to overthrow Grenada's last prime minister, Maurice Bishop, and to establish a far-left government. A brutal regime, Bell noted, would help to make U.S. intervention appear politically palatable.

In an interview last Wednesday, Bell described as "inconceivable" claims by members of the Organization of East Caribbean States that Grenada posed a threat to their security. Bell speculated that the organization's weekend plea for help could have come at the suggestion of the United States.

Bell cited two precedents to support his theory: CIA financial support for civil servants, police and labor unions involved in the overthrow of a leftist leader in Guyana; and the infiltration of student anti-war groups during the 1960s by FBI agents posing as radicals. (Though not mentioned by Bell, another example would be the CIA's successful efforts to destabilize the moderate-left Guatemalan government of Jacobo Arbenz Guzman in 1954.)

"Knowing such things...and knowing (Washington's) attitude toward Grenada had hardened recently, I have to believe the CIA was active," Bell said. "I suppose it's an unpopular thing to say, and...since such actions are covert, unprovable at the moment."

Professor questions accuracy of quotes

Editor,

While I appreciate the extensive coverage the Collegian gave my talk, I am concerned that several statements were sufficiently misunderstood that they reflect just the opposite point I had hoped to convey. Let me clarify my position.

I do not expect the U.S. to "invade the Philippines." (However, I didn't expect us to invade Grenada either.) I merely pointed out that the interests of the United States are much greater in the Philippines because of bases, investments, cultural and political ties than they are in any of the several countries in which we are presently militarily involved. However, if we use non-democratic regimes which suppress human rights and sometimes murder political opponents as a criteria for invasion, the Philippines could qualify as a target.

I maintained that the United States acted as if we had no other options to supporting President Marcos if we wanted to maintain our bases. Actually, as I demonstrated, we have alternatives to both the location of those bases and we have economic and political leverage that make it unlikely the bases would be removed. The security and usefulness of the bases is, however, jeopardized by our increased identification with the Marcos government.

President Reagan did not visit the Philippines as reported. That he even contemplated doing so, however, betrays an insensitivity and lack of information about how it would be perceived by the Philippine moderates opposed to President Marcos and how it could be exploited by Marxists. What I did say was that the state visit of President Marcos to this country was a political "coup" for him, a public relations fiasco for the U.S. and a reversal of the efforts of President Nixon, President Ford and President Carter to distinguish our support for the Philippine people from our endorsement of the repressive Marcos government.

K-State boasts lowest crime rate in Big Eight

By KARRA PORTER
Collegian Reporter

A recent survey of crime reports from Big Eight campuses indicated K-State had the lowest crime rate of the Big Eight schools in 1982.

K-State Police Director Art Stone has the results of a study comparing crime statistics with Big Eight schools and the University of Colorado at Boulder and the University of California at Berkeley. The study was released by the University of Colorado in March 1983.

"The only one (category) we were up in was theft, and six had more thefts out of 10 universities," Stone said. "In all others, we were either low or next to low."

Theft and burglary are the most common crimes at K-State and also the most common type of felonies, Stone said. Any theft or burglary involving more than $100 is a felony.

Among the felonies on campus in 1982 were three arson fires — in the Veterinary Medicine Complex, Denison Hall and the greenhouses. Although the suspects were never apprehended, Stone said K-State still ranks low among Big Eight schools in arson. One institution in the survey had 22 arson reports the same year.

K-State also had fewer assaults than the Big Eight average last year.

"The 'typical' assault, if there is such a thing, involves individuals that have disagreements," Stone said.

For classification purposes, assaults are divided into two categories, he said. The first is the touching of another individual without that person's consent, and the second includes verbal threats and domestic disputes.

K-State had 23 assaults in 1982. Of these, five or six were assaults on women but not rapes, Stone said.

"We ask questions to determine whether there was an assault or battery or if the intention was something else, such as rape," he said. "Those are classified as assaults, but they serve as an alert to us that it (rape) could have happened."

K-State had no reported rapes last year, and hasn't had any for the past several years, Stone said.

"There's always a situation where people say 'You don't know what's going on,'" he said, "but we can only rely on what's reported to us."

Rumors may spread, but can't necessarily be believed, he said, because stories tend to get progressively worse with each telling.

"If something happens to you, unless you come and tell us, we have no way of knowing."

Overall, K-State students and faculty and staff are very concerned about crime prevention, Stone said. He credited much of K-State's low crime rate to that involvement and the willingness to take an active role in reducing crime.

"The majority of students, faculty and staff are concerned, and that concern flows out," he said.

Hostilities 'cease' in island incident

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger told President Reagan on Wednesday that "all hostilities have ceased" in Grenada and ordered a reduction in U.S. ground forces on the island.

Meanwhile, the Pentagon sent some of the Navy and Marine forces that had participated in the Grenada invasion to duty in and near Lebanon.

"The secretary of defense, Caspar Weinberger, has informed the president that the military commanders in Grenada have informed him that in their determination, all hostilities have ceased there. The secretary has directed that U.S. forces begin a pull-out within a few days," according to a statement issued by Pentagon spokesman Cmdr. Fred Leader.

Pentagon sources said they expect elements of the Army's 82nd Airborne Division to start pulling back to Ft. Bragg, N.C., within the next few days. No orders have yet been issued, said officials who spoke on condition they remain anonymous.

Five plane loads of equipment left Grenada Wednesday for Ft. Bragg in apparent preparation for the reduction in the U.S. ground troop strength on the island.

There was no immediate word on how many of the roughly 5,000 82nd Airborne troops will remain on the island, which Army Rangers and Marines stormed nine days ago.

Counting support personnel, officials said there were about 6,000 American servicemen on the island Wednesday morning.

Word that preparations were under way to return some of the 82nd Airborne troops to Ft. Bragg came after the Pentagon announced that the aircraft carrier Independence and five escorting ships as well as 1,800 Marines aboard a five-ship amphibious force, would be detached from duty off Grenada and sent into the Mediterranean.

Meanwhile, the aircraft carrier America and eight other warships sailed from the U.S. east coast for the Caribbean in what the Navy called the end of any possible Cuban military reaction, the movement of the powerful nine-ship force into those waters assured the United States of a continuing fleet presence there.

The six-ship battle group headed by the 79,000-ton Independence and the 22nd Marine Amphibious Unit were headed for the Mediterranean in late October when they were diverted to the Caribbean following the bloody coup on Grenada. That coup by radical leftists was cited by the Reagan administration as the trigger for its invasion of the small Caribbean island to prevent harm to some 1,000 American citizens there.

CBS president claims U.S. 'censored' media

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — CBS News President Edward M. Joyce told Congress Wednesday that the U.S. government resorted to "unprecedented censorship" in barring the news media from covering the initial days of the invasion of Grenada.

Joyce, whose views were supported by David Brinkley of ABC and John Chancellor of NBC, called the government's policy a new relationship with the media — "a relationship virtually unknown in U.S. history."

The news executive testified before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice. The panel is beginning a series of hearings on the conflicts between civil liberties and the need for national security.

Subcommittee chairman Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., said he was concerned that "the pendulum has begun again to swing back towards restrictions on civil liberties."

He cited government actions of the last five years, including directives making it easier to classify documents, to force government workers with access to sensitive information to undergo lie detector tests and requiring workers to submit materials they may later write for pre-publication review.

Joyce told the panel, "I want to emphasize that the American press is a responsible press. We are not seeking to report military secrets. We are not seeking to jeopardize lives. But those interests could have been protected without resorting to the unprecedented censorship that the government imposed in Grenada."

Rep. Carlos J. Moorehead, R-Calif., defended the administration's decision to bar initial coverage of the invasion, comparing the military effort to the unsuccessful attempt to rescue U.S. hostages in Iran. The press, he noted, wasn't invited to go along in that instance.

Brinkley said that "everyone in our business understands the risk and danger in covering military operations. Security could have easily been controlled as it had been in the past."

"In a Democratic society it is essential that the people have access to information. This is particularly true in the case of military operations when men and women are asked to support or at least to understand a policy that may lead to the loss of their own lives..." Brinkley said.

Added Chancellor, "at moments of historic importance, it is the responsibility of the press to be there."

Baby flies out door of moving pickup on Oklahoma road

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Corrections officer Johnny Hawkins thought he was swerving to avoid a doll that sailed from a pickup truck ahead of him. When he stopped, he discovered it was a 3-month-old boy.

Hawkins, a lieutenant at the Joseph Harp Correctional Center in Lexington, and his wife, Donna, also a corrections officer, were on their way home from a concert Friday night when they saw the infant fall onto the blacktopped roadway.

"The door came open on the passenger side, and an article of clothing came out," Hawkins said Wednesday.

"I told my wife, 'It looks like someone's getting ready to get out of that truck.'"

Then the baby, wearing only a diaper, went flying through the air. Hawkins estimated the truck was going 40 mph.

The baby "didn't fall. It flew as high as the bed of the pickup," he said.

The baby's parents, Tilden and Barbara Dawson, both 31, were held in the Cleveland County Jail on complaints of child abuse and public intoxication.

The baby, Nathaniel Gary Dawson, was released from Norman Municipal Hospital on Tuesday and is in the custody of juvenile authorities. He suffered abrasions and bruises, but no broken bones, said Cleveland County Undersheriff Neal Grover.

Hawkins said when he and his wife stopped, the baby's arms were extended and it was pale under the abrasions and cuts that covered most of his body.

"It didn't cry then, I think it had the breath knocked out of it," Hawkins said. "Then it started to shake real bad and then it started to cry."

"I looked it over as best I could for serious injuries, and then I picked it up, gave the baby to my wife and we started for the hospital in Purcell."

"The first thing that was on my mind was getting that baby to the hospital."

Hawkins said the pickup truck stopped about a quarter of a mile up the road, and he saw a staggering man nearby.

"We didn't stop. I was so angry that I wouldn't stop," he said.

While the infant was X-rayed at the hospital, Hawkins telephoned Purcell police, who notified the Cleveland County sheriff's office. The child then was taken to the Norman hospital to be examined by a pediatrician.

A Lexington prison unit out on other duty heard the police radio call, identified the pickup from Hawkins' description and arrested the Dawsons.

Go-go dancer may become sheriff

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — A 27-year-old former go-go dancer is expected to become Belfast's high sheriff, a city council spokesman said Wednesday.

Councilwoman Pauline Whitney would become the youngest person and second woman to take the city's second-highest ceremonial post.

The nomination has yet to be approved by Northern Ireland Secretary James Prior, but the council spokesman said "that is really a matter of courtesy."

Whitney, who gave up go-go dancing shortly before joining the Rev. Ian Paisley's hardline Protestant Democratic Unionist Party, was elected to the council in December 1981.

Group bakes cake to save statue

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Gov. George Deukmejian, nibbling bake-sale cake from a campaign to preserve the Statue of Liberty, said the monument has "special meaning" in his family, which is of Armenian origin.

At ceremonies Tuesday in his office, the Republican governor was speaking for himself and his wife, Gloria, when he said, "Our parents came into Ellis Island, and saw this grand lady when they came into this country."

He was presented the cake by a group that is joining a national effort to raise $230 million to restore the statue by 1986, its 100th birthday.

The group, Telephone Pioneers of America, wants to raise $3 million. It plans to hold bake sales at 120 to 150 locations statewide next Tuesday.

The group consists of Bell System employees and retirees with at least 18 years on the job. Originally a social organization, it has become a community-service group with 600,000 members nationwide and 64,000 in California, said Don Rizzo, regional vice president.

Judge dismisses suit against guru

OLATHE — A Johnson County judge has dismissed the suit of a woman who claims that followers of an East Indian guru persuaded her husband of 19 years to divorce her.

Associate District Judge Janette Howard agreed Tuesday with attorneys for the Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh and his foundation that Kansas courts did not have jurisdiction over the religious group, which is headquartered in Oregon.

H. Ken Desselle, an attorney representing Lorna Jean Barnum, said he would appeal the decision.

Mrs. Barnum, of Shawnee, filed the suit against the guru and his foundation after her divorce became final last January.

Her husband, Bill Barnum, had been a successful businessman earning more than $100,000 a year. But last year, he changed his name to Satya Pradip, began wearing the bright red clothes that are the uniform of the group and moved to its ranch commune near Antelope, Ore., according to court papers.

Rajneesh, who is fighting deportation, received national attention last year when the 40 residents of Antelope tried unsuccessfully to disincorporate their town to keep the guru and his disciples from taking political control. Known for the 27 Rolls-Royces his followers have given him and his philosophy of uninhibited sex, Rajneesh is believed to have more than 800 followers at the commune.

Mrs. Barnum contends that her ex-husband was convinced by his former business partner, who is a member of the religion, and by other Rajneesh followers that he must get divorced and pay them $125,000 to prepare himself for the "truth."

Workshop to present students' plays

By The Collegian Staff

Tonight in the Purple Masque Theatre, the Department of Speech will present the Playwright's Workshop.

The workshop is free and begins at 8 p.m. Seven plays written by students in play-writing and advanced play-writing classes will be presented.

The plays are directed by students and are acted with scripts in hand. John Crego, junior in journalism and mass communications and a member of an advanced play-writing class, said the group has been rehearsing for two weeks.

Fourteen students are involved; all but two are in a play-writing class. The classes are under the auspices of Norman Fedder, professor of speech.

For most of the playwrights, these are the first plays they have written. John Foote, freshman in business, enrolled in the play-writing class because he was looking for another way to express himself.

His play, "Mouse Play," is about a man who goes through a mid-life crisis and quit his job to become Mickey Mouse, he said.

Christopher DeYoe, sophomore in theater, said the workshop is a major production for the student playwrights. DeYoe is directing three plays and reading minor roles in two others.

His play, "Opening Night at the Masque," is about students who try to discover what's behind a ghost who haunts the theater.

"I started about the first week of school," DeYoe said. "I got interested in the idea last semester when a bunch of us were sitting around telling ghost stories."

Marcia Sullivan, junior in journalism and mass communications, wrote a play this semester but didn't get the rewriting finished in time for the rehearsal deadline. She plans to finish the play next semester and hopes it could be presented in the spring Playwright's Workshop.

Sullivan is directing a play and reading in another. This is her first play-writing class, she said.

The workshop runs Thursday, Friday and Saturday and will present a different bill of plays each evening. The audience is invited to participate in an informal discussion which will end each evening's workshop.

Grenadians mourn coup's casualties

By The Associated Press

ST. PAUL'S, Grenada — The parents of Marxist Prime Minister Maurice Bishop and Education Minister Jacqueline Creft, who were killed in the coup that sparked the U.S. invasion of Grenada, have welcomed the American military forces.

"I don't know about what Maurice would have said. But we were very happy," Alimenta Bishop, mother of the slain prime minister, said Monday night. "We didn't know what was going to happen — all these guys running around with guns killing people."

Mrs. Bishop, a widow, also spoke for her daughter, Ann, and Bishop's brother, LaBernard. Another daughter, Maureen, lives in Barbados with her husband.

"We don't consider it an invasion. It was a rescue operation," said Allan Creft, father of Ms. Creft, 36.

Ms. Creft and Bishop, 39, had a 5-year-old son, Vladimir.

Vladimir knows his father is dead, but his grandparents haven't yet told him about his mother, who was also killed Oct. 19 along with two other cabinet ministers.

As Creft and his wife, Lynn, reminisced about their daughter, the boy ran into the living room.

Wearing a football T-shirt, Vladimir talked about his plans to be Superman.

After he scampered off, Mrs. Creft said, "We're not going to send him back to school just yet. The other children will ask him too many questions."

"He knows his father was killed, but we're just now telling him that his mother is away," she said.

Sitting in their modest home leafing through photo albums, the common refrain from the families was delight at the U.S. invasion and arrest of those responsible for the Oct. 19 bloodbath and a continuing indignation that they have been unable to claim their loved ones' bodies.

"The Friday after the shooting, I called the fort and told them I want my father's body," said 22-year-old Patrick Bain, one of six children of the Housing Minister, Norris Bain, who was slain at Fort Rupert with Bishop.

"The woman on the other lines says 'Oh, Norris Bain, hmmm.' And I can hear soldiers in the background laughing at this. They were all jolly," the young man said bitterly.

Most of the relatives gave up two or three days after the slayings, and they can only speculate about what happened to the bodies. On this island, Christian burials are important.

Mrs. Bishop said she has heard that soldiers aimed heavy weapons at the bodies, blew them up and buried the pieces.

Merrydale Bullen, 72-year-old father of slain insurance man Keith Bullen, said he had heard the bodies were buried behind one of the island's prisons.

"My son wasn't a criminal. He doesn't deserve to be treated like a criminal," said Bullen, his voice catching.

He shook his head. He remembered his son, who left a wife and three daughters, as a man who had little interest in politics or government.

Mrs. Creft had gone up to Fort Rupert to bring Bishop and her daughter cheese sandwiches and bottles of Coca-Cola because they had eaten little for several days while under house arrest.

"I almost had two victims," Creft said.

"When we were inside, the army sent three of those armored personnel carriers up the hill and they started firing," Mrs. Creft said. "Maurice said 'Hit the ground,' and we all fell down. A little girl was hit by a bullet in the head."

Anna Bain, wife of Norris Bain, carried the little girl out to seek medical attention. Then, Mrs. Creft said, Bishop asked a soldier to go outside and tell the other troops that he surrendered.

"Jacqueline walked me down to the bottom of the hill. Then a soldier pointed a gun at her and said, 'Jacqueline Creft. You stand up there and don't move.' She looked at me and I looked at her and that was the last time I saw her," Mrs. Creft said.

Cancer cell research may aid in transplants

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Certain cancer cells suppress the chemical signals that would cause them to be rejected by the body, a surprising finding that may suggest ways to prevent rejection of transplanted organs, researchers said Wednesday.

Researchers have theorized that cancer tumors may be forming in the body all the time, but are normally rejected by the immune system, in the same way transplanted organs are often rejected.

Now for the first time researchers have found that this function of the immune system can be turned off. If they can learn how the cancer cells avoid rejection, they may be able to use that knowledge to prevent transplanted organ rejection.

"This is a completely new way to induce a cancer — by circumventing the immune system," said one of the researchers, Rene Bernards, of the State University of Leiden in The Netherlands. The research, directed by Alex van der Eb, professor of tumor biology at the university, is reported in the current issue of Nature magazine.

The findings grew out of an effort to discover why there are such great differences in certain viruses' ability to cause cancer.

One virus studied by van der Eb, adenovirus 12, is an extremely potent cancer-causing agent in animals. But a very similar virus, adenovirus 5, is not.

Van der Eb infected animal cells with both types of virus. He found that the cells infected with the dangerous virus lacked a critical substance, one of the components of the so-called class I major histocompatibility (or MHC) antigens.

These antigens are what animal and human immune systems use to recognize invading cells. If the antigens are missing, the immune system cannot identify — and thus cannot destroy — the invaders.

The antigens are also known as transplantation antigens because they are important in the rejection of transplanted organs. The body recognizes transplants as foreign because their MHC antigens are different from the body's own MHC antigens. The foreign cells are then attacked by white blood cells called killer T cells.

Van der Eb and his colleagues are trying to determine how the adenoviruses turn off the production of the MHC antigen. If that process could be understood, doctors might learn how to control it, Sharp said.

Proposals address grain elevator losses

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In an attempt to slow the growing problem of grain elevator bankruptcies, members of a special House task force Wednesday proposed three bills that would require stricter government controls and provide insurance against losses.

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., called the package a "comprehensive approach" to the problem, which has grown alarmingly in recent years. Agriculture Department figures show 172 elevators had gone bankrupt in the five years ending in 1980, a 60 percent increase over the rate for the six previous years.

While elevator insolvencies remain at a rate lower than that for comparably sized businesses, they often cause extreme economic hardship for farmers who can lose most of their stored crops and for the small farm communities in which they are located.

Glickman headed a special Agriculture subcommittee which looked into the problem and found that although the nation's grain storage system generally is sound, it has not been scrutinized closely enough by federal regulators.

The issue was highlighted in 1981 when Missouri farmer Wayne Cryts and others stormed a bankrupt Ristine, Mo., warehouse to take back soybeans Cryts said were his, but which had been tied up in slow bankruptcy proceedings.

The legislation introduced Wednesday would:

— Strengthen federal regulation of grain elevators, requiring them to submit annual balance sheets and other financial data to the Agriculture Department. Some of the information would be disseminated to farmers to help them choose the most secure place to store their grain.

— Amend bankruptcy law to speed up determination of ownership of grain stored in a liquidated warehouse and give farmers with stored grain priority in recovering their property over general creditors of the elevator.

— Set up a system of voluntary federal insurance on stored grain to cover losses if bankruptcy occurs. Although some private companies have made such coverage available, the practice has been slow in starting.

Farmers generally recover less than 70 percent of their stored grain when the storage facility goes bankrupt, with some losses even more severe.

The outlook for Congressional passage of the bills remained unclear. Revisions in grain elevator bankruptcy law have passed the Senate several times, but have been repeatedly blocked in the House Judiciary Committee, whose chairman, Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., believes the changes are not needed.

Glickman said he had heard from Rodino's staff that the committee may be "less opposed" to the legislation now than it has been in the past. He scheduled hearings on the insurance measure for Nov. 17, and said the regulatory and bankruptcy law issues probably would not come up before next year.

Equal rights aim of new bible version; controversy looms as probable target

By MICHELE SAUER
Staff Writer

(Editor's note: This is the second of three articles which deal with a new translation of Bible readings.)

A new translation of Bible readings, which minimizes male terminology, has been released by the National Council of Churches.

The new translation not only changes language about humanity but also advocates female imagery in the metaphors used for God. The readings are for voluntary, experimental use in services by some Protestant churches.

In one reading of the new lectionary, the prayer Jesus utters on the night he is arrested is translated: "God, my Mother and Father, the hour has come; glorify your child that your child may glorify you."

Altering the language in the Bible has proved to be controversial because of the high value Christians place on the Scriptures as the revealed word of God.

The readings were prepared over a two-year period by a committee of 11 biblical scholars and pastors from several denominations, including the Roman Catholic Church, although it is not a member of the National Council of Churches.

The council is the largest ecumenical organization in the United States, and one of its achievements is the publication of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible, a widely used translation.

Where the Revised Standard Version reads, "Then the Lord God formed man of dust from the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," the new version says, "Then God the Sovereign One formed a human creature of dust from the ground and breathed into the creature's nostrils the breath of life."

The new lectionary also uses the phrase "children of God" instead of the former "sons of God."

Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father and Mother hath sent me, even so I send you.

— John 20:21

Carolyn Cummings, senior in family life and human development and president of Newman Ministries, said the addition of "Mother" to "God the Father" is the change which bothers her most.

"I am used to saying brothers and sisters in Christ, but not using 'Mother' for God," Cummings said. "By saying father and mother, it sounds like two personalities or like he's bisexual."

It may help some people relate to God as a mother figure, but the Catholic Church has Mary as a mother figure and Cummings said this translation may take some of the special attention away from Mary.

"It seems a little ridiculous when we make the sign of the cross to say, 'In the name of the Father and Mother and Child and the Holy Spirit,'" Cummings said. "Throwing more things in makes it more difficult to decipher, and we end up focusing on the technological aspect instead of the theological aspect."

There is a lot of time and trouble involved in changing the language of the Bible, Cummings said. It won't please everyone and puts dividing lines on who uses it and who doesn't.

"If someone knew the original (of the Bible) it would be great," Cummings said. "But there are some expressions in any language that we can't say in English. You have to compromise. The Bible was written in a male-dominated society and our translations reflect that."

Cummings said it would be hard for her to think of God as "Mother" when praying because she has been brought up calling him "Father."

"It's awkward to say, 'Our Father and Mother who art in heaven,' because I was brought up to say 'Our Father,'" Cummings said. "I don't take offense at the word man when it's used to denote mankind. Some women get irate when you call them chairmen."

Cummings talked to other students, mostly female, about the new lectionary and most hadn't heard of it, but said it didn't bother them. Several had heard of saying 'children of God' instead of 'sons of God' but not 'God, the Father and Mother.'

"It will make people more aware, and they will either accept or reject it," Cummings said. "I think a lot of people will reject it because it's easier to stay the way it is. I don't know if it's worth it."

Among those who have said they do not approve of the new translation is Bruce Metzger, a Princeton Theological Seminary professor who is chairman of the committee planning future editions of the Revised Standard Version.

"It is necessary to tell people that God is not an old man, but to explain that God transcends differences of gender is the work of the religious educator, not the Bible translator," Metzger said.

He said the alterations in the language about God in the new lectionary were "tantamount to rewriting the Bible," adding "such changes are in my view altogether unacceptable."

Metzger said coming editions of the Revised Standard Version would avoid using "man" when "human-ty" or "humankind" might be appropriate. "But to remove the patriarchal setting is to change the Bible."

The new lectionary has extensive footnotes and markings to indicate where the translators have altered the original language to eliminate male bias. For instance, to show the reference to a heavenly mother is inserted in the text, the words are put in brackets.

But Metzger, in disagreeing with the translation, finds this inadequate. "If this is used in public worship as intended," he said, "what is a minister to do? Do they really expect the minister will read 'father parenthesis and mother close parenthesis?'"

"My first reaction is that it isn't even necessary to work so hard to use inclusive language," said Beth Royall, graduate in piano and member of St. Francis Episcopal Campus Ministry. "I agree with (Metzger) where he says it's the role of the religious educator to teach that God's roles transcend gender. God's role is so much greater than we can understand."

"I'd hate to think it was a waste of time (to translate), but I don't know whether I would like to hear it used in a service. I'm uncomfortable with adding words to the Bible that don't clarify that much."

"If the Lord's Prayer were changed, that would be unsettling because I've learned it by rote, but changing old standards is not necessarily wrong because it helps draw your attention to the words," Royall said.

Changes include the substitution of the words "Sovereign" or "God the Sovereign One" for "Lord" or "King" and the addition of women's names to the text in such verses as the one in the Gospel of Matthew that reads, "We have Abraham as our father."

To that verse, the phrase "and Sarah and Hagar as our mothers" has been added to include the wife and servant of the Old Testament patriarch.

government and the rebels."

After two days of deliberations, the bishops Tuesday night called for a day of national protest. They urged that churches remain closed and that the faithful stay home and fast and pray.

"Our Church is being persecuted," the bishops' communique said.

Several priests have been harassed or roughed up by government sympathizers. At least four foreign priests have been expelled from Nicaragua since the Sandinistas took power in 1979, overthrowing the late rightist President Anastasio Somoza.

Nicaraguan priests protest harassment

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Priests refused to celebrate Mass on Wednesday, All Souls' Day, to protest the deportation of two priests in what they claim is a harassment campaign of the Roman Catholic Church by the Sandinista government.

A tour of the city showed that some worshippers remained at home, praying and fasting. Others crowded cemeteries in the capital to lay flowers at the tombs of friends and loved ones, a tradition on All Souls' Day throughout Latin America.

The protest call was also heeded in other parts of Nicaragua.

A growing dispute between the church and the Sandinistas intensified when a conference of the country's bishops criticized a military draft law enacted by the leftist government. The government says the law is in response to an "imminent" U.S.-supported invasion of Nicaragua by rebel exiles and troops.

The law ordered all youths 17 to 22 to register with the military authorities by Oct. 31, and men and women between 23 and 40 by Jan. 1. About 220,000 people are being mobilized, but only 15,000 will be called up immediately and the rest inducted as needed.

On Sunday, mobs of government supporters beat up a bishop and a priest in the capital and attacked churches, forcing eight of them in the capital and a number of others in the provinces to suspend Mass.

A government communique Tuesday announced that two foreign priests were being deported for criticizing the law. The communique accused the Rev. Luis Corral Prieto and the Rev. Jose Maria Pacheco of "urging people to ignore the Military Service Law and supporting the counterrevolutionaries by demanding a dialogue between the

Rabbi studies for doctorate to help entertainers cope

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — As the assistant producer of an off-Broadway show, John Krug regularly sees actors assume a variety of personalities.

As an ordained rabbi and a student at Yeshiva University's Ferkauf Graduate School of Psychology, Krug wants to help those same actors who may face confusing cues in their personal life roles.

So, even while he continues to work with the world's longest-running musical, "The Fantasticks," the 31-year-old Krug is studying for his doctor's degree in clinical psychology.

Krug says he wants to increase his understanding of the special problems actors face in a world where acceptance — by the audience, the director, the critics and fellow actors — is of such dramatic importance.

"Performers spill their guts out every day in front of total strangers," he says. "They can't see individuals out there in the audience and they don't know them. It's analogous to a washcloth that is wrung out. The tremendous intensity, concentration and energy required take a toll."

Actors have other unique problems, he adds. The perpetual transient state of the profession — traveling companies, auditions, short-lived productions — makes it difficult to establish roots and foster a sense of security.

"And their constant performance and projection of other personalities blur the boundaries of self and stage characters," Krug notes. "It's difficult to sustain interpersonal relationships when an actor doesn't know where he stops and the next person begins."

Krug now works with actors in informal ways, helping to maintain a sense of family among the troupe and getting performers to talk and work out their anger, depression and other difficulties.

"We are in very close quarters backstage, and tensions between people can arise," he explains. "Actors can't bring their personal problems on stage. They must cover up. The audience is not going to feel sorry for them."

In addition, people who have left the show call him for advice. Krug is not yet licensed as a therapist so he gives referrals and arranges for appointments for emergency and ongoing treatment.

Krug first became involved with "The Fantasticks" when he was in charge of the technical crew for a student production at the university. Then he went to see the professional group.

"It became so alive for me because I had already studied the play. I just fell in love with the show," said Krug, who began working with "The Fantasticks" as understudy to the lighting director after a chance encounter with producer Lore Noto during Krug's 12th visit to see the show.

Then "things just happened. I sat in on auditions just to see how they were done and, one day, someone asked what I thought of the performers. Then I became a regular at auditions." By 1975, "I was involved in almost every aspect of the production," said Krug, who has been assistant producer since 1977.

Krug is scheduled to complete work on his Ph.D in 1985, and then, "would like to continue to combine my three careers — in psychology, in the rabbinate and in drama."

New business starts in hot water; couple plans to rent mobile spa

By BRENDA ROME
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan residents Gary and Becki Dick have discovered a fun way to earn extra money: Roamin' Spa Rental.

Visiting a friend who had once rented a spa gave them the idea to start a part-time spa rental business.

The spa can be rented one weekend night, all weekend, weekdays, or even for an entire week. No one has rented the spa yet, Becki said, but last weekend was the first time it was completely ready to be used.

The spa unit is decked with redwood and completely enclosed. It is mounted on a 16-by-8-foot trailer, allowing it to be moved.

"We will transport it by truck and leave it wherever they want it," Becki said. The spa will fit in a yard or driveway.

"It is high enough off the ground that it's private enough. All that anyone could see are the top of the heads," Becki said. "It's a little chilly getting there, but once you do, the water is nice and warm."

"We have an instruction manual typed up to help renters," she said. A standard 120-volt, 20-amp circuit is necessary to keep the spa operating.

The spa has adjustable hydrojets and air jets which together can provide up to four different whirlpool functions.

The pump circulates water by taking it out of the spa, pushing it through the cleaning filter and sending it through the heater and back into the spa.

"There are tiny holes in the seats of the spa where the air is pushed out, and there is a 25-gallon propane tank to heat the water," she said.

"There is a low-pump action which just circulates water. There is high-pump action and (air) blower, which does both air and water. You can also have on just blower or just high pump," she said.

"It is basically kept up like a pool with a few extras since the spa is made of acrylic instead of cement," Becki said.

When the spa is used for several days the chlorine level and pH balance must be checked.

"Chlorine may have to be added, but we will try to come check and make sure everything is okay," she said.

"We've spent close to $6,000 on everything, including redwood, the trailer, the spa and advertising, to date."

Jury indict men in civil rights case

By The Associated Press

DETROIT — A federal grand jury, after the intervention of the Reagan administration, returned a criminal indictment Wednesday against two men who beat to death a Chinese-American and were originally sentenced to probation.

One of the men, an autoworker, apparently thought the victim, Vincent Chin, 27, was Japanese, witnesses said. One held down Chin while the other beat him repeatedly with a baseball bat after an argument at a bar, they said.

Indicted were Ronald Ebens, 44, and his stepson, Michael Nitz, 25, both of East Detroit, Mich.

They were charged in a two-count indictment with conspiracy and violation of the civil rights of Chin because of his race and because he was patronizing a place of entertainment open to the public.

Each count carries a maximum penalty of life in prison.

The June 23, 1982, slaying attracted attention after Wayne County Circuit Judge Charles Kaufman placed Ebens and Nitz on three years probation and fined them each $3,780.

The pair originally were charged with second-degree murder. Ebens pleaded guilty and Nitz pleaded no contest to reduced charges of manslaughter.

Chin died four days after the beating, which occurred outside a bar in the Detroit enclave of Highland Park.

Witnesses told authorities that Ebens and Nitz made a racial slur and Chin, celebrating his coming marriage, invited them to step outside the bar. Later that night, Ebens and Nitz saw Chin on the street and chased him with baseball bats, witnesses said.

Detroit's Chinese-American community petitioned Kaufman to review the sentences, claiming the slaying was racially motivated.

Gill leads nation's top scoring attack

By KEVIN DALE
Staff Writer

When the University of Nebraska's offense takes the field it sports a variety of talent that delivers a scoring punch unequalled in the world of college football.

Turner Gill, the leader of that offense, is a quarterback of rare ability who would be a No. 1 choice to win the Heisman Trophy if it weren't for the rest of the Nebraska backfield.

Gill has the speed and agility to run as good as most running backs in the Big Eight Conference, but he also possesses a deadly accurate throwing arm.

Although Gill's own statistics weren't very impressive against K-State, it was the threat of what might happen that allowed Mike Rozier to cut loose on the Wildcats.

"It's a great thrill to be involved with something like this," Gill said. "If one of us is having a bad day, someone else will come through. We really complement each other. Against K-State, Irving (Frayar) didn't really get a chance to contribute too much, but Mike and I got the job done."

Rozier and Gill were responsible for 332 of the 'Huskers' 429 total offensive yards. Rozier rushed for 227 yards while Gill rushed for 43 and threw for 62 more. They each had three rushing touchdowns.

In the fourth quarter, with the score 38-25, Gill guided the 'Huskers' down to the 4-yard line. Twice, Nebraska sent Rozier up the middle and twice, the K-State defense stopped him. On third-and-goal from the 3-yard line, Gill faked the handoff to Rozier and ran the ball in himself to slam the door on a courageous K-State comeback.

On Nebraska's next possession, Gill again led the team down the field and with third-and-two from the 5-yard line, Gill scored his third touchdown of the afternoon to put the game out of reach at 51-25.

"We expect our opponent's best effort when we play and that's what we got from K-State," Gill said. "I knew we were going to win but I started to get a little nervous when we couldn't get the ball away from them. I knew when we got the ball we would have to score and that's what we did."

Gill said there is no clash among Nebraska's offensive powerhouses — all they want to do is win.

"There has never been any animosity between us," he said. "Sometimes statistics are important but we all want one thing — a national championship. We don't need to score a lot or run another team into the ground as long as we're winning."

Winning is something the Cornhuskers have been doing for a long time as they own the nation's longest winning streak at 19 games. Gill is no stranger to victory celebrations either — with Gill at quarterback the 'Huskers' are 25-1.

University of Nebraska coach Tom Osborne and quarterback Turner Gill confer on the sidelines during last Saturday's football game against K-State.

Gill and teammate Mike Rozier are considered two of the nation's top contenders for college football's prestigious Heisman Trophy.

OSU deserves rank

Call it "Chip on the Shoulder University," but Oklahoma State University football team and their fans are becoming extremely upset each week The Associated Press' Top 20 comes out.

Jimmy Johnson, head coach of the Cowboys, has been breaking the coaches' cardinal rule of not paying attention to the Top 20, but he has a good reason to do so.

The Cowboys have lost twice in eight games — on consecutive Saturdays — by a total of five points to Nebraska and Oklahoma. They've beaten North Texas State, Cincinnati, Texas A&M, Tulsa, Kansas and Colorado.

Their defensive statistics throughout the season have been among the best in the country. They're No. 1 in the Big Eight Conference and No. 13 in the National Collegiate Athletic Association in points allowed — giving up an average of 13 a game, which is less than two touchdowns. In total defense, the Cowboys are 21st among all Division I-A teams.

Yet, for the ninth consecutive week, voters in the AP Top 20 poll have decided the Cowboys do not belong among the nation's elite. Johnson is wondering why?

"I don't think it affects our players that much," Johnson said Monday during the Big Eight's weekly telephone news conference with league coaches. "But it is a concern when I look at teams that are in the Top 20 above us that have lost to unranked opponents, who have been unimpressive in some of their wins."

"I feel like if you look at our schedule and what our opponents have done in other games — and the only teams that have beaten us — you've got to be impressed."

Who could blame Johnson for his attitude concerning the poll? No. 20 Notre Dame has lost to Michigan State, while beating

SEAN REILLY

Purdue, Navy, South Carolina and Colorado. No. 19 Boston College has lost only to West Virginia, but the Eagles' schedule does not include any other ranked team to date.

Most coaches agree that the reason the Cowboys are not cracking the Top Twenty list is lack of tradition. Oklahoma State has spent the last 10 years building and rebuilding, compiling a 57-52-2 record and have been to only three bowls.

"Oklahoma State is not a household word as far as a power in college football goes," Johnson said. "And so when people start to vote, they think about the same teams they thought about 10 years ago."

"It (college football) has evened things out. But the respect people have for schools and teams has not evened out."

Top-ranked, unbeaten Nebraska slipped past Oklahoma State by four points, and NU Coach Tom Osborne would like to see the Cowboys get some respect.

"I thought when we played them they were an awfully good football team," Osborne said. "I would say Oklahoma State should be ranked. Why they're not, I don't know."

No longer should the AP voters kid themselves, it has become evident that Oklahoma State has commanded the respect they deserve.

Agility, strength key Rozier's success

By HUEY COUNTS
Staff Writer

When Nebraska's senior I-back Mike Rozier swings outside on the 41-pitch play, more times than not, it's all over for the opposition — much like this year's Heisman trophy race. It's Rozier all the way.

K-State fans got a look at this year's probable Heisman trophy winner Saturday afternoon as Rozier ran inside and outside of the Wildcat defense on his way to three touchdowns and 227 yards on the ground.

"He's the best back I've seen. He's better than anybody in the nation," said David Ast, K-State's free safety.

Although his performance against the 'Cats produced his best rushing total of the season, Rozier didn't think it was his best game.

"I consider the Penn State game (won by Nebraska 44-6) as my best. I only got 73 yards, but I earned every one of them. I'm happy with the way I played, but I made a couple of dumb mistakes."

The most obvious mistake was bringing the game's opening kickoff out of the end zone, then retreating back in, giving the 'Cats the first two points of the game.

"I didn't realize I couldn't come back in the end zone," he said, "but I came back. The whole team came back."

Rozier's "comeback" performance made him the Big Eight Conference's second all-time leading rusher behind Terry Miller, who starred for Oklahoma State University.

He also became the 16th player in NCAA history to top the 4,000 yards career rushing mark.

"I go out (each game) to make yards and score touchdowns, Rozier said. "We (the team) aim to go out there and put everyone away."

One of the most highly recruited players in the nation in 1979-80, he spent his first college season at Coffeyville Community Junior College in Kansas.

Rozier's speed (he ran a 4.5 in the 40-yard dash and was a sprinter for the NU indoor track team in 1982) and strength makes it difficult to bring him down once he breaks into the open field.

"He nearly killed two or three of our defensive backs," said Jim Dickey, K-State head coach. "He's low to the ground, quick and shifty. He's strong and fast, and even when you get a hold of him, he's tough to bring down," Ast pointed out.

The combination of the Cornhuskers' downfield blocking and Rozier's own running ability have led to him being the nation's leading rusher.

"It's fairly easy to block for him," said Mark Schellen, the 'Huskers' fullback. "He reads blocks well, but at the same time, he gets a lot done on his own."

Schellen has the answer to the Heisman question.

"No problem. Mike will win it hands down."

"I'll just keep punching it out every Saturday and see what happens," Rozier added.

Coach transforms losers into winners

By The Associated Press

WORCESTER, Mass. — Rick Carter found himself in a strange place — a Midwesterner in New England, a winner among losers, a coach with players he never met.

He didn't take long to transform new surroundings into something more familiar. His reputation as a master architect who turns crumbling football programs into sturdy successes is secure.

When Carter, 39, became Holy Cross coach after the 1980 season, the Crusaders have had winning years in two of their last 14 campaigns.

In his first year, they were 6-5. Last season, they were 8-3. Now, they are 8-0, ranked second in Division I-AA and headed for the winningest season in the 88 years football has been played at the Jesuit school west of Boston. His .733 winning percentage is the third best of the 23 coaches Holy Cross has had.

In 1966, his first season coaching Earlham (Ind.), he was 2-5-1. His remaining five seasons there were winners. He took over Hanover (Ind.) in 1972 and was 4-5. He was 32-5 in the next four seasons.

Dayton's last winning mark was in 1970, but Carter, taking over in 1977, racked up 8-3, 9-2-1, 8-2-1 and 14-0 in 1980 when he won the NCAA Division III title and was named Coach of the Year at that level.

This season, Carter's squad is in excellent shape for a playoff berth in I-AA, which the Crusaders joined after being in I-A in Carter's first year.

"The new classification — gave us a chance for national recognition and a chance for a playoff berth," Carter said.

Carter is keen on setting immediate goals for his players.

In the "October Crusade," Holy Cross aimed to win their last three games of the month to remain undefeated. That accomplished, the independent is into "what we call the money games," Carter said. "Each game means something special."

Beating Harvard Saturday would make the Crusaders only the second team in school history to win nine games. After that, beating Delaware would give Holy Cross its first 10-victory season and a virtual lock on a playoff berth. And beating Boston College, ranked 16th in Division I-A, would send shock waves through the state and into the offices of bowl committees who are considering the Eagles.

Holy Cross is unbeaten despite losing its two top rushers and three leading receivers from last season, which the Crusaders finished ranked 13th.

Quarterback Peter Muldoon has completed 61 percent of his passes. The defense has allowed just 15 points per game. And tailback Gill Fenerty has run for 14 touchdowns and 979 yards. He got six of those touchdowns and 337 of those yards in last Saturday's 77-28 whipping of Columbia.

aren't done (all except last-minute details), then it is too late, he said.

Kleinau's relationship with the players is important to him.

"I have a part in recruiting a kid and a part in them when they get here. I listen to their complaints."

The reason Kleinau thinks that this is important is because when he was at Oklahoma State as a student manager, there was no one the players could talk to.

"We didn't have a head manager. Students handled the job and the players need someone to let loose to."

Kleinau said it is his responsibility to listen and understand where the players are coming from.

"Shorty cares about what we are thinking," said Bob Kerr, senior in marketing and a linebacker. "He does a great job in both the technical and personal part of his job."

Manager's duties range from turning on lights to buying equipment

By BRENT BAYER
Collegian Reporter

The "behind-the-scenes" responsibility that an equipment manager for a football team has is a lot.

From buying equipment to washing clothes, from preparing for games to preparing for off-season activities, K-State equipment manager Jim "Shorty" Kleinau does it.

"The fans only see what goes on during the games. There is much more to the job," Kleinau said.

Kleinau said that he has eight student managers working under him now as compared to four when he took the job five years ago.

"There was a need to increase the number of student managers as the number of players we had increased," he said. "We had 80 players five years ago and have 115 this year." The student trainers are paid between between $100 and $140 per month out of the athletic budget for 10 months, Kleinau said.

He said that forming a manager's staff is just like making a team.

"I have to coordinate my people just like the coaches do a team," he said. "Sometimes it works better than others — just like a team."

Kleinau's main job is the upkeep and operation of all football equipment.

When the season ends, all of the ordering of equipment is done, and if it is not ordered, it is too late, he said.

"When the season is over, I go through and decide what to order," he said. "I order all equipment used for football before spring practice."

Estimates from various sporting good stores within the state are submitted to K-State and equipment is then ordered, Kleinau said. "We try to keep the money in the state. We buy from in-state stores.

"We don't want to get into the problem that KU (the University of Kansas) is in by spending money outside the state when the same product could be bought in the state," he added.

The University of Kansas has accepted bids from Missouri businesses.

There is a coach that is a go-between for the coaching staff and the manager, Kleinau said. "Coach Davie is kind of a liaison for the coaching staff, players and myself. Though, if Coach Dickey has something to tell me, he does it himself."

Equipment is changing so much you have to keep up on it, Kleinau said. "Today's equipment is designed to prevent injuries. You can be as strong or fast as can be, but without the proper equipment, injuries can't be prevented. For example, all our quarterbacks wear flak jackets to prevent rib injuries."

"Shorty has the best equipment available for us," said Jeff Koyl, junior in general business administration and an offensive tackle. "He does a great job and cares about the guys."

There is a difference between road and home games, Kleinau pointed out.

"We bring three people to help on the road. We drive all our equipment that we can to the games before the game and prepare for the games before the team arrives."

Kleinau said that it is actually an easier job on the road than at home. "On the road you only have 60 players and coaches to worry about, while at home you have all of your players, the opposing team, the officials and getting the field in shape. I even turn on the lights."

The work goes on during the week even though the games are only on Saturdays, Kleinau said.

Kleinau's week is as follows:

Sunday — cleanup day. All of the equipment that was used in the game is checked, washed and packed. Sometimes Kleinau said he stays after the games to do some of this work. "I was here until 10:30 p.m. after the Nebraska game."

Monday — Along with regular practice begins preparation for the packing of the upcoming game.

Wednesday — the packing is completed and practice is still dealt with.

Thursday — the driving day to the game site with two student managers. The other managers take care of practice back home.

Friday — the equipment is set up at the visiting stadium, and if the team practices there, practice is being readied for.

Saturday (game day) — if things

Predicting scores for fun

One of the most enjoyable things about being on the Collegian staff is the ability to make predictions about football scores.

Yes, I do enjoy writing columns for the editorial page. But there is something about playing "Jimmy the Greek" each week which brings out the bookie in me.

By the way, I don't wager money after making my predictions. It's illegal. Besides, I'd lose my shirt (and pants and other articles of clothing near and dear to me) if I had to put some green behind my predictions.

Making football predictions can be fun, fascinating, thrilling, infuriating, exasperating, humiliating and challenging — and that's only after making my first prediction each week. There's nothing I've found more of a challenge to my ego than to make my predictions for a week and then have to wait until Monday to find out how many games I picked correctly.

How do you pick games? Well, I've discovered many different ways to make predictions (not including combinations). These include:

— Reading the latest predictions as they come out of Las Vegas. These predictions are usually correct, but seldom do they pick the upsets — the jewels of the predictions.

— Reading and listening to Pete Axthelm and "Jimmy the Greek" Snyder. These guys are good. They analyze each team's strengths and weaknesses, add in variables (e.g. home field) and then make their predictions. I prefer Axthelm's witty, sometimes satirical predictions. He even gives the point spread.

— Checking out the Associated Press and United Press International Top 20 lists. AP has sportswriters vote for the top 20 teams in the nation; UPI selects college coaches to vote for the top 20. UPI doesn't list teams which are on probation, which is the reason I like UPI's top 20 picks.

Brian La Rue
Collegian Columnist

— Grab a couple of sports magazines and leaf through them. Find out which teams are hot and which teams will be looking for new coaches next year. These magazines also tend to give good background information on key games (e.g. which school holds an edge, if any, in the series; past records; reasons why X University will pound Y-State into the ground; etc.) and give a quick glimpse of future opponents.

— "Other factors." I won't pick against K-State, Northwestern, Green Bay or Nebraska, unless they play against each other. K-State and Northwestern will rule in the case of multiple picks (if K-State ever plays Northwestern, I'll pick the Kansas 'Cats 17-13). These are truly teams of destiny.

K-State and Northwestern are almost twins. Both schools use a wildcat (a.k.a. "Mildcats") for mascots. Both schools have purple and white for school colors. Both schools have football teams which have had losing seasons for years; then broke out and won some games last year and have now returned to their shared destiny — losing football teams. Hey, who can buck this similarity?

Nebraska may never lose again, even to many professional teams. Green Bay, a pro team, is stocked with some former K-Staters. And "lowly" Northwestern is better than a lot of people think — they just play in the Big Ten Conference. Move them to the Missouri Valley Conference, and the Illinois 'Cats would walk all over the competition.

"Other factors" may include home team advantage, injuries, walkouts, field condition, the team's colors, karma...the list is endless. For example, when Nebraska traveled to Minneapolis to play Minnesota's Golden Gophers (the doormat of the Big Ten), the 'Huskers could only take 60 players (NCAA rules). They whipped Minnesota 84-13. However, when Nebraska played Oklahoma State (no longer the doormat to the Big Eight Conference) at Stillwater, they took only 60 players — and eked out a 14-10 victory.

— Luck. I don't mess with this factor. Either it works or it doesn't. Who could have guessed that Green Bay would send in their cheerleaders (well, the Packers played that bad) to play against Detroit and Minnesota? How was I to know that Iowa State would come back and beat KU after it appeared the 'Hawks had it sewed up?

Luck works in strange ways. Take the Alabama-Penn State game, for example. A referee watches an Alabama player struggle to make a controversial catch in the end zone with less than 10 seconds remaining in the game...the stuff of legends. Alabama scores, grabs the extra point and wins 35-34, and I'm happy, because I picked 'Bama (24-17) due to each school's record. 'Bama was hot; Penn State was slowly warming up.

Wait, hold the fort. The referee has no sympathy for me, my picks or the Crimson Tide. He calls the catch no good. 'Bama runs one more play, gets to the 2-yard line and time expires. Penn State wins 34-28. Ugh.

Lecturer describes German impact on U.S.

By CAROL BELL
Collegian Reporter

In celebration of the German Tricentennial, Juergen Kalkbrenner, a West German foreign officer, informed a group of about 40 people on the contributions of Germans to American culture. Kalkbrenner lectured Tuesday at Eisenhower 219 on "Germans and America: 300 Years of Immigration."

Kalkbrenner is a director for regional cultural planning for the German Foreign Office. He has a Ph.D. in law from Keil University and did postgraduate work at the University of Washington, Seattle. He has worked with the German Foreign Office since 1955 and was cultural attache for the German Embassy in Washington from 1970-1977.

"The early periods reflect positive, bad, dramatic and traumatic times of our history," Kalkbrenner said.

The people who came to America were more enterprising, more active and all together the best of the land, he added.

"Some people ask me, 'Why do you Germans celebrate this?'" Kalkbrenner said jokingly.

But other immigrants were compelled with no other choice, he said. For example, the oldest son of a farmer inherits the farm, and the second, third or fourth sons can only hope to be hired on as farmhands. If not, they can work in a factory in the city or go to America, the "land of opportunity."

The first group of immigrants fled to America for religious freedom or to avoid starvation. All were suffering under the 30-year war and the armies of Louis XIV.

This wave of immigrants brought such people as Peter Minnewitt, Jacob Leisler and Daniel Pastorius.

Minnewitt came across the Atlantic Ocean and bought Manhattan, N.Y. from the Indians for approximately $25, Kalkbrenner said.

Leisler became the governor of New Amsterdam. He was very outspoken and an advocate of severing ties with Great Britain, Kalkbrenner said. Leisler also pushed for a unity of the British colonies.

"It is no wonder the British hung him," he said.

Pastorius was a church leader who followed William Penn to America and invited all other Germans "to come to the open shores."

He was the founder of Germantown, Pa., and developed the German educational and vocational systems.

More importantly though, he was noted for his stand on slavery, Kalkbrenner pointed out, adding that Pastorius is quoted as saying, "In Europe, people are oppressed because of conscious-suckers; here (in America), they are repressed because of color."

"By the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, the Germans were well integrated into American settlements and took an active part in the war," Kalkbrenner said.

Both men and women fought in the war for America and contributed much to the success of the war, he said. Germans helped create an efficient army, wrote The Blue Book — a training book still used as a basis for military training — and planned the first tactics of secret warfare by recruiting deserters from the German army to help the cause.

The second group of immigrants came over after 1776, studied at American universities and brought about significant changes, such as the idea of graduate school and the expanding of the liberal arts programs.

"The most prominent among these was Carl Schurz, who came to America after fleeing Germany as a revolutionist. He quickly learned to speak English without an accent — something some Germans never do — and became an ardent follower of (Abraham) Lincoln," Kalkbrenner said.

Schurz became ambassador to Spain during the Civil War and kept a number of governments from giving recognition to the South, he said. As Secretary of the Interior, he helped protect the Indians, laid the groundwork for our national parks and argued that people should work on the merit system instead of the spoils system.

"By then, we (Germans) had grown to immense masses," Kalkbrenner said. "Every second immigrant coming into the U.S. was German speaking."

By the second half of the 19th century, industry was starting its growth. The farmers' sons started coming along with musicians, painters, inventors, journalists, cartoonists, tailors and many others, Kalkbrenner said.

Most of the symphonic orchestras were started by Germans, he said.

The famous painting of Washington crossing the Delaware was done by a German painter in Germany. The models were actually apprentice painters standing in a boat on the Rhine River.

The creator of Santa Claus and the political symbols, the donkey and the elephant, was a German immigrant.

The builder of the Brooklyn Bridge, along with the founders of some of the beer breweries — Coors, Schlitz and Anheuser-Busch — were German, Kalkbrenner said.

German tailor, Levi Strauss went west and bought a lot of denim to make wagon covers. He noticed that the cloth was suitable for pants for gold diggers; hence, the blue jean, Kalkbrenner said.

The most difficult time for the German immigrants was World War I, when most hoped that America would stay out of the war. Germans in America were torn between fighting for their homeland or fighting for the country where they now lived — against their homeland.

It was a time when German-Americans found themselves being persecuted by other Americans, Kalkbrenner said.

"With the oppression of Hitler, a new group of immigrants came, the majority of whom were intellectuals," Kalkbrenner said.

"Scientists such as Einstein, painters such as Beckman, along with writers, architects, and the like, all made contributions to the intelligent, creative life of the U.S.," he said.

The last group to immigrate were the several thousand war brides who came over with their husbands after the war, Kalkbrenner said.

"The wave of immigrants form a solid pillar in society that contributes to the growth and success of the United States."

"Thomas Jefferson, when traveling through Germany thinking that the countryside reminded him of Maryland, said, 'These swarms of Germans (immigrating to the U.S.) constitute everything that is not English among us.'"

Large corporate farmers reap dollars instead of crops due to PIK program

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A handful of large farms, some of them operated by corporations, will be paid millions of dollars under the Reagan administration's Payment in Kind program not to grow crops this year, congressional investigators say.

The Agriculture Department "seems to have developed hybrid strains of wheat, rice and cotton plants that bloom with dollar bills, creating a rare new species for the enjoyment of rich corporate farmers," said Rep. Fortney H. Stark, D-Calif., who requested the study.

Results of the investigation were to be the subject of a hearing in Stark's Ways and Means subcommittee on Thursday.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, surveyed 708 farms in nine states where it believed it would most likely find large payments made under the so-called "PIK program," which gives farmers surplus government grain and cotton if they agree to idle some of their land.

It found the average farm in that group — admittedly not a representative sample — would get $175,000 worth of commodities. Thirty-five of the farms were due to receive more than $500,000 each in government-owned produce, and seven farms would receive upwards of $2 million each.

All seven farms in the top category, the GAO said, are in California. Six are cotton farms, and one primarily grows rice.

"Of the farms in our survey, those receiving the largest PIK payments are cotton farms in California," the GAO said in its report. "These are followed by California rice farms and Midwestern corn farms. Texas cotton, Arkansas rice, and wheat and grain sorghum farms will receive PIK commodities valued at lesser amounts."

In a related action, the GAO sent a legal opinion to the Agriculture Department this week, contending that it is against the law to pay more than $50,000 in land-diversion compensation to any single farm.

Such large payments have been criticized before, but the Agriculture Department consistently has responded by saying that it was necessary, because of the mammoth size of commodity stockpiles, to make an unprecedented effort to get land out of production. That meant the nation's biggest farms had to be attracted into the program in order to make it work, the department contends.

Relocation to pose problems for merchants

By LEE WHITE
Collegian Reporter

Eminent domain.
To some downtown businesses, those are fighting words. To others, those words are the sound of more sales.

Eminent domain is what the city may have to exercise to remove more than 80 businesses should work begin on the proposed downtown mall and other redevelopment projects.

With the tentative approval Friday of Manhattan's request for a $10 million Urban Development Action Grant, the prospect of being forced to seek new locations has become more of an issue than ever for some businesses.

When the mall is mentioned to Doug Long, owner of Mel's and Mel's Alley, located just south of Poyntz Avenue on Third Street, the place gets quiet. Then, Long resoundingly registers his opinion.

Long has owned at least one of the drinking establishments bordering the first alley south of Poyntz on Third for eight years. He's not too happy about having to give up the location.

"I don't know just how fair the city is going to be in getting a location for my business," Long said.

Long said he equates the relocation of his business to a baseball game — three strikes and he's out.

"They take me, that's strike one. Then they force me to relocate where they want me to be, that's strike two. And if I find a good location, they won't let me be there, strike three," Long said.

If he does have to move, Long said he wonders where he will go.

He said he looked at two prospective locations, one of which would have suited his needs. The owner of the building offered to sell it to him for $94,000, he said.

Not wanting to borrow money for a building he might not need, Long said he didn't take the offer. The owner of the building said the price would increase to $135,000 after preliminary UDAG approval, he said.

Jan Ray, president of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, has been an avid mall supporter. Long said he thinks Ray, who along with her husband, Terry, owns Kite's and other Aggieville bars, might change her opinion if Kite's was in the redevelopment area.

Still, Long said he doesn't believe Ray supports the mall simply to erase his competition.

"I think they (the Rays) would fight to try and keep me out of Aggieville," he said.

Long said he hasn't joined a coalition of mall opponents that seeks to stop the project or ensure the city uses fair practices in negotiations with businesses in the area should the project proceed.

"I'm just going to have to do whatever I need to do to protect myself," he said.

Around the corner at H&R Block, 221½ Poyntz Ave., owner Gil Gillispie is already planning to move, but not entirely because of the mall.

"It's in response to the fact that I haven't got enough room," Gillispie said.

Gillispie, who doesn't own the building, has operated the tax accounting franchise since 1979. He said he favors downtown redevelopment.

"I think it's necessary to the future of downtown," Gillispie said. "Something is necessary and the mall is the plan that's been chosen."

"I wouldn't go so far as to say I pushed for it (the mall)," Gillispie said. "I would if I had it to do over again."

Businesses in the redevelopment area that aren't financially stable may have problems staying open if they have to move, Gillispie said. He advised business owners to wait and move when the city offers relocation funds.

"I can move for a couple of hundred dollars," he said. "Others have to wait."

Dick Edwards, owner of Dick Edwards Ford Lincoln-Mercury, at the corner of Second and Houston streets, wouldn't say whether he was for or against the mall.

"I'll have to build," Edwards said. "There's nothing around town that I could go into to replace this."

For him it's not so much an issue of whether the mall is good or bad, but a fear of how affordable it will be to build a new facility, Edwards said.

"I do have a good location," he said. "There's no way of having some of the things I have here in another place. I'll stay in Manhattan somehow."

To the west on Poyntz, in the area that won't be demolished to build the mall, businesses are more optimistic about downtown redevelopment than those east of Third.

Renate Bailey, manager of Burger King at 301 Poyntz Ave., is cautiously optimistic about the mall.

"The business is going to climb,"

Bailey said. "I don't know how long it's going to be. Construction will hurt business."

Bailey said customers she has talked to have voiced a need for a central shopping location. With students and Fort Riley personnel in the area, the mall would be a good idea if construction doesn't slow business, she said.

At McCall's Shoes, 313 Poyntz Ave., optimism about redevelopment reigns. And the possibility that more shoe stores might lurk just down the street if the mall is built doesn't seem to bother manager Woody Albin.

"The more competition you have, the better business is," Albin said. "It keeps merchants on their toes."

Albin said she doesn't think business will drop significantly during construction.

"I think we'll be in a good position," she said. "They (mall merchants) will have to work hard. We believe as individual merchants that we've always done that."

Western Kansas water may soon be imported

By The Associated Press

MANHATTAN — The only politically and economically feasible long-term solution to western Kansas' water needs is to import water from regions such as Alaska, state Rep. Keith Farrar, R-Hugoton, said Thursday.

"It may seem awfully wild, but I believe that's the only type of plan that's really going to have potential in the future," the farmer-legislator said.

A U.S. Corps of Engineers proposal to transfer water within the Ogallala Aquifer, which extends from Texas to South Dakota, or adjacent states would be too expensive and would meet stiff political opposition, Farrar said during a panel discussion of water issues at Kansas State University's Ag Media Days.

Farrar said even if the corps' proposal were implemented, research shows water would still have to be brought in from outside the region within 40 years.

U.S. troops prepare to leave Grenada

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, declaring the U.S. military action in Grenada was not an "invasion" as he once called it but a "rescue," said Thursday that all hostilities had ended on the island and that U.S. commanders are being told to start withdrawing their forces within a few days.

"Our objectives have been achieved and as soon as the logistics permit, American personnel will be leaving," Reagan said. His spokesman said there were 5,980 U.S. soldiers on Grenada Thursday.

Reagan, who visited the White House press briefing room at mid-morning to make the announcement about Grenada and disclose that Donald Rumsfeld, a former secretary of defense, would be his new Middle East envoy, said on the island, "the situation is stable. No sniper fire or other form of military resistance is evident."

Reagan, who will visit Camp Lejeune, N.C., today to honor the U.S. Marines who have been serving in Beirut, Lebanon, said the military forces in Grenada "have conducted themselves in the finest tradition of the military."

Reagan dispatched the troops to Grenada Oct. 25, saying their mission was to rescue 1,000 American citizens on the island, including about 650 students at the St. George's Medical College, and to restore democracy. A coup d'etat had overthrown leftist Prime Minister Maurice Bishop and replaced him with another Marxist regime.

Reagan said defense chief Caspar Weinberger told him "hostilities in Grenada have ended and that he has instructed our military commanders to begin withdrawing their forces within a few days."

White House spokesman Larry

Speakes said 18 U.S. servicemen were killed in Grenada and 89 were wounded. He said the 1,900 U.S. Marines and 700 Army Rangers who took part in the early landings and fighting had been withdrawn, leaving elements of the 82nd Airborne Division.

Speakes said that 60 Cubans were killed. The United States sent to Cuba 57 Cubans who were wounded. Speakes said the 585 who remain under detention on the island would be sent home soon.

Speakes also held out the possibility that not all of the Cuban and Grenadian documents reportedly discovered would be made public.

Car bombs destroy Israeli compound

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A powerful explosion ripped through two buildings at an Israeli army compound in southern Lebanon today. Police reportedly said a car carrying 110 pounds of explosives detonated at the site, causing dozens of casualties.

The Israeli military command gave no details on casualties, but an army spokesman said the road along the Mediterranean coast was closed and rescue operations were being carried out at the site.

"A huge explosion occurred this morning about six o'clock in Tyre. Two buildings in which security forces were housed were hit. Israeli defense forces are busy with evacuation and rescue efforts," read the command's communique.

State-run Beirut radio said a massive explosion ripped through a two-story building used by the Israeli army on the outskirts of Tyre, a major port city.

The radio quoted initial police reports from Tyre as saying a bomb-laden car crashed through a barbed wire fence and detonated at the entrance to the yellow L-shaped building, reducing the two floors to a pile of rubble.

The state radio quoted the police reports saying the car carried 110 pounds of explosives.

Inpatient census drop forces hospital lay offs

By WAYNE PRICE
Collegian Reporter

Memorial Hospital announced Thursday that six employees have been laid off due to declining reimbursement and decreased patient census.

According to Anne Renz, Memorial's chief administrator, the six employees were employed in the hospital's business and nursing departments. The nurses who were laid off were nursing assistants and licensed practical nurses, she said.

She said many hospitals have had to make similar adjustments because of declining reimbursement and decreasing numbers of patients. "We've been able to wait a little longer to do what other hospitals have had to do," Renz said. "Reimbursement is changing the hospital industry."

Reimbursement refers to the federal government's recent policy of using Medicare and Medicaid in Diagnostic Related Grouping which charges a specific amount for certain diagnostic cases.

All of the employees laid off worked full-time, Renz said. Friday will be their last day, but in addition to two-week's separation pay, Renz said the employees will be the first contacted as soon as other positions become available. She said the employees were laid off according to seniority.

"We are working with these displaced employees to assist them in securing employment elsewhere in the community as they desire and will certainly consider them first as openings occur that their skills would qualify them for," Renz said.

"These employees have been at Memorial for a number of years in some cases, and their contributions have been many. We certainly wish that other alternatives were available to us to avoid this staff reduction, she said."

Renz said he hospital employed 124.7 full-time equivalents at the end of September. Full-time equivalent refers to an employee who works 40 hours per week. The fiscal year average of full-time equivalents at Memorial is 135.2. Currently 54 percent of Memorial's expenditures are for employee salaries and benefits. Renz said the reduction in the work force, in addition to reductions in other departments, will save the hospital $80,000 in its annual budget.

Because of the drop in the average inpatient census, Renz said Memorial's budget is currently under re-evaluation. The hospital currently cares for 22 to 34 new inpatients per day, but its budget for 1984 is based on an average of 30 new inpatients per day.

Renz said the hospital does not foresee any future lay offs.

'Smitty the Jumper' tells students of 47 years of parachute diving

By MICHELE SAUER
Staff Writer

On Dec. 12, 1928, H.T. Smith, known as Smitty the Jumper, made his first parachute jump and began a 47-year career skydiving across the country.

Smitty, 85, spoke to the K-State Skydivers in the K-State Union Thursday night.

In the early days, Smitty admits, "jumping" was a dangerous pastime. Before World War II, parachutes were only used by pilots and barnstormers at air shows. Many early daredevils were killed performing sensational stunts.

Today, skydiving is closely regulated by the Federal Aviation Administration and the United States Parachute Association, said Doug Schmidt, club member and graduate in entomology.

The first 12 years, Smitty jumped without an emergency parachute. Only later did the FAA require skydivers to wear two parachutes.

One of the highlights of his visit was showing an early parachute to the group.

"Here's how it works," Smitty said. "The canopy was made of bedsheets sewn together and the lines were tied to a Ford Model A steering wheel I got from an automobile salvage yard."

Modern skydiving equipment consists of a maneuverable, high-performance main parachute and an emergency reserve parachute. New equipment can cost more than $2,000, Schmidt said.

Smitty said he decided he wanted to jump after his first ride in an airplane when he was 18 years old. He borrowed $15 from a friend to go flying.

"I wanted to jump out and sail like a bird.

I had to watch myself so I wouldn't do it," Smitty said.

His first jump was made 12 years later from 3,000 feet at Wichita Falls, Texas. It took a while to find both a parachute and a pilot willing to take him up.

"The pilot didn't know anything about flying a jumper, and he knew I didn't know anything about jumping," Smitty said.

They miscalculated the wind drift, and he landed several miles from the hangar.

"I landed bad and splattered all over the ground, but didn't break anything. I didn't have to be embarrassed because, fortunately, no one at the hangar could see me. It was the worst shake-up I'd had in my life. A car came as far as it could, but I had to walk about a mile."

The owner of the field paid him $20 for two more jumps that same weekend. The town newspaper stated, "Amateur will make his first two parachute jumps today." It also stated that he was a sign painter and had never jumped from anything higher than a stepladder.

The first jump had a sloppy landing, but the second one ent flawlessly, Smitty said. He drifted over a flagpole and came down in the middle of the crowd. They moved out of the way and he made a perfect stand-up landing.

"I stood there holding the inflated parachute in one hand, waving my leather flying cap with the other, but there was not a camera on the field."

Smitty said he liked his first weekend so much he kept jumping for the next 47 years.

He also was inspired by Tiny Broadwick, the first person to jump from a Hydroplane into Lake Michigan. Smitty described her as a "very remarkable woman who began jumping from her foster father's hot air balloon."

"In those days, they usually passed the hat around and I'd get around $3."

The most he ever made from a collection was in Okmulgee, Okla., in 1929. Jimmy Doolittle, who later commanded the first bombing raid on the Japanese mainland, put $5 in his own hat and passed it around the crowd.

"I ended up with $35 in change stuffed in my jumpsuit pocket," Smitty said. "Pilots used to rate pretty good (at air shows) until parachuters came along. They called me 'Daredevil Smitty.'"

Local officials did not always welcome parachuting exhibitions. Jumpers were often killed or injured attempting stunts.

A friend of Smitty's did a stunt in which he jumped out of the plane with handcuffs on. He then pulled the ripcord with his teeth.

"And then there was my overcoat jump," Smitty said. "I'd take the mayor, sheriff or some prominent officer up with me in the old Buell Air Sedan to see that I went out with the coat all buttoned up as advertised."

"But I would slit the buttonholes a little larger, and after leaving the plane, all I'd have to do was give a tug and it was all unbuttoned. Then I'd hold my arms out and the wind would practically take it off of me. It was a great act that always worked perfectly."

Smitty made his 211th jump at age 75 and broke his leg. At age 76 he made his final jump and broke his leg, hip and pelvis.

"If I could live my life over again, I would want it the same way," he said. "Only, I would leave out the last jump in Lincoln, Nebraska. I advise all jumpers to quit before they reach the age of 76."

Professors receive design award

Two professors in the College of Architecture and Design were awarded honorable mention and $1,000 in a national energy design competition this year.

Gary Coates and Ifan Payne, associate professors of architecture and design, represented K-State in the "Teaching Energy in Design" competition, a year-long research project.

A panel, consisting of experts in environmental design chosen by the American Collegiate Society of Architects, selected twelve winners. The competition, supported by the U.S. Department of Energy and sponsored by the ACSA, involved students enrolled in environmental systems in architecture and in architecture design studio. K-State's project was started in January 1982 and selected in January of this year.

Throughout the year, 1,700 students from 60 professional architecture schools in North America competed to create a curriculum that would integrate energy design concepts, Coates said.

Engineers sponsor national meeting

Approximately 110 students from 54 universities will meet this weekend in Durland Hall for the annual national convention of Pi Tau Sigma, mechanical engineering honorary fraternity.

This is the first time K-State has been host of the convention. Delegates from as far away as the University of Hawaii, University of Southern California and the U.S. Naval Academy will attend.

Donald E. Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, will open the formal session of the convention at 8:30 a.m. Saturday in Durland's Paslay Lecture Hall.

Stress society names chairman

George W. Eggeman, assistant professor of mechanical engineering, is the new chairman of the Kansas Section of the Society for Experimental Stress Analysis.

The society has an international membership and is concerned with engineering experimental test methods.

Eggeman has been a member of the K-State faculty since 1978. He earned a bachelor's degree from the University of Missouri at Rolla and master's and doctorate degrees from the University of Illinois at Urbana.

Prior to his appointment at K-State, Eggeman was a senior engineer for Continental Forest Industries in Chicago.

Alumnus donates geological display

Six hundred specimens of minerals, rocks and fossils, together with four display cases, have been given to the Department of Geology by Walter S. Mayden of Corona, Calif. The value of the gift has been estimated at more than $20,000.

Mayden, a 1929 graduate in mechanical engineering, was employed after graduation by a subsidiary of Cities Service Oil Co., Indian Territory Illuminating Oil Co. During World War II he served in the U.S. Army Field Artillery and is a retired U.S. Army Reserve Colonel. He was an engineer involved in missile research at the Naval Research Laboratory, Corona, before retiring in 1964.

The specimens contributed by Mayden will be collectively known as the Walter S. Mayden Collection and will become a permanent part of the Geology Museum in Thompson Hall.

Judging teams receive Senate funds

By KATHY BARTELLI
Collegian Reporter

After nearly two hours of discussion, Student Senate passed a bill which will appropriate $3,389.73 in special allocations to agriculture judging teams.

The bill was presented by Kent Jaecke, senior in animal sciences and industry, and Tim Ohlde, senior in agriculture education, both senators for the College of Agriculture, at Thursday night's session.

A roll call vote of 30-26 passed the bill with one amendment. Jeff Gates, business senator and senior in finance, presented the amendment which suggested that any future funding requests from the judging teams be brought up as a separate item from Agriculture Council requests in the budgeting process.

A bill creating a Senate Aide Committee consisting of no more than 20 members who would receive no class credit had its first reading.

Kay Deever, home economics senator and junior in pre-professional elementary education, said the bill would ensure that senate would be provided with 20 aides really interested in working with senate.

This year, for the first time since the establishment of the aide program in 1967, aides are receiving two hours of credit per semester for two semesters, said Steve Line, business senator and senior in finance.

"With this bill, I predict we will get fewer applications and will get a core of people really wanting to do it because they're interested in senate," Line said.

Under the proposed system, the aide committee would serve as a pool from which senators and committee chairs could seek assistance on research.

If passed, the bill will go into effect at the beginning of the 1984-85 senate term.

Also heard on first reading was the Student Senator's Communication Responsibility bill.

The bill, sponsored by Mark Jones, business senator and junior in pre-design professions, and Tina Rather, arts and sciences senator and senior in pre-law, would make it mandatory for each senator to visit at least two student groups per semester during his term.

"Visitation is something that needs to be done. If it were being done now, there wouldn't be a need for a bill," Jones said.

Rather said many of the living groups that have already been visited have said they would like senators to visit once a month.

Both bills will be heard on second reading Nov. 10.

Gates reported that the senate Academic Affairs Committee approved a proposal for instructors to automatically convert a blank grade to a failing grade. A blank grade is often given by instructors when students never show up for class, but do not drop the class.

The committee also voted to change the retake policy for students who have already completed a degree.

Currently, students who have graduated can continue to take courses in their curriculum and add those grades to their grade point average for the degree already earned. Under the new policy, the GPA for that degree could not be altered.

Also voted on by the committee was a move that would change freshmen mid-term grades to a satisfactory/unsatisfactory system. The grade would be determined for all student classifications. If the grade was unsatisfactory, the student would be notified in some manner.

In other action, senate unanimously passed a resolution declaring November as Rape Awareness Month.

The resolution was passed to help educate students and citizens in the hope of preventing future problems.

Also passed was a resolution approving Kirk Porteous, arts and sciences senator and senior in radio and television, as the new Coordinator of Finance.

In addition, senate approved the members of the 1984 Elections Committee and delegated 18 representatives to the ASK Legislative Assembly on Nov. 5-6 at Emporia State University.

Judge orders investigation of CIA action

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A federal judge Thursday ordered U.S. Attorney General William French Smith to investigate allegations that the CIA violated federal law by covert action against Nicaragua.

The ruling came in a lawsuit filed July 8 by U.S. Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif. and others.

U.S. District Judge Stanley Weigel said that if Smith failed to make a determination within 90 days the attorney general must appoint a special prosecutor to conduct the investigation.

Dellums' suit sought an order requiring Smith to conduct an investigation as to whether President Reagan, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr., Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and other officials violated the Neutrality Act, a federal criminal law, by consenting to and supporting paramilitary operations against Nicaragua.

Dellums' suit contended that $19 million was approved in November 1981 by the National Security Council including Reagan, CIA Director William Casey, then Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr., Weinberger and others.

Dellums claimed that Smith's refusal to conduct an investigation deprived him of his constitutional right as a member of Congress to vote on whether the United States should make war on Nicaragua.

Speaker offers summer job ideas, tips

By WAYNE PRICE
Collegian Reporter

The advantage of getting a professionally related summer job is that a student can usually make more money than by working at a fast-food restaurant or similar job, obtain valuable experience and look a career from a new perspective.

These and other ideas were presented at a presentation about summer employment sponsored Wednesday by the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Gail Zeller, administrative assistant and summer employment adviser for the center, said that many times it's who you know and not necessarily what you know when securing summer employment.

"Sad but true, I've seen statistics as high as 50 percent that all the positions found are by who you know," Zeller said. "And it isn't that your dad's uncle or brother has a job and says, 'Hey, hire my kid.' It's that somebody heard over a cup of coffee that they're going to be hiring people over at his company."

Zeller said some summer jobs give students an idea if they can adjust to living away from family and friends.

Internships, Zeller said, are the positions most students are interested in. Some internships last for the summer, while others might continue through a semester or a whole year. She said students should be honest with themselves about how much time they're willing to spend in a summer job because some positions require specific beginning and ending dates.

Firms often hire people during the summer for physical labor. One example, she said, was when Amoco Pipeline recently conducted interviews for engineers. They actually wanted people to work on the pipeline and not in the office. But if an internship is unavailable, this type of job does give students exposure to work in their chosen career and the pay is much better than minimum wage, she said.

"The third thing you might want to consider is volunteering," Zeller said. "There are a lot of internships around that don't pay a cent, but they're worth it for the experience."

To find a job in a particular location, Zeller suggested looking in newspaper want-ads or applying directly to a particular organization. Details such as finances, hours and location should be considered carefully before beginning a summer job search, she said.

Once these things are considered, students should look for the firms they want to work for, she said.

Zeller said there are several ways to do that. One is to come to the center and see what companies are interviewing for summer employment.

Another way is to register for summer employment with the center. This is done by filling out a registration card and returning it to the receptionist.

If neither of these options is taken, the center has other resources available. If a student wishes to work in another part of the country, Zeller said he should use the College Placement Annual to discover what jobs are open. The index in the annual lists firms across the nation which are offering summer employment.

A small world

Amanda Blake, familiar to many people as Miss Kitty in the long-running television series "Gunsmoke" of several years ago, was a guest last Tuesday morning on the program "Open Line" broadcast by KMAN. Mary Hull, hostess of that show, had told me I could meet Miss Blake at the end of the program.

I waited for a few minutes in the lobby of KMAN before Amanda Blake, accompanied by several other people, walked down the hallway from the studio. One man, obviously in charge of escorting her from place to place while she was here in Manhattan for appearances in connection with the 50th anniversary of Sunset Zoo, pointed in my direction and murmured, "This gentleman says he wants to talk to you."

She stepped toward me, shook my hand, then looked at me expectantly. "Do you remember a teacher by the name of Ruth Kegley?" I asked.

A wide smile moved swiftly across her face. "Of course I do," she replied. "Ruth Kegley was one of my first drama teachers. That was in California. Did you know her?"

"Yes," I said. "I went to Chaffey College in Ontario, California, just as you did, except that was a year or two after you were there. Ruth Kegley was my first drama teacher also."

"That's very interesting. So you and I had the same teacher. It's a small world, isn't it?"

"The reason I wanted to meet you was because of Mrs. Kegley. I'll never forget how she always talked about Amanda Blake to her classes."

"Well, that was very kind of her. It should have been the other way around. She did more for me than I ever did for her."

"Do you remember any of the other teachers at Chaffey College?"

"Like whom?"

"Well, do you remember a literature teacher by the name of Shaky Palmer?"

"No, I don't remember that name," she said. "Really, I never went to any of my classes — except the ones in drama. I don't think I even passed the other ones. I only went to Chaffey one semester — just long enough to be in two plays and study acting with Mrs. Kegley. And then I got an agent, and it was tinseltown for me."

JOEL CLIMENHAGA
Collegian Columnist

"Exactly when were you at Chaffey?" I asked.

She bit at her lip. I saw a sudden vagueness in her eyes. "I don't really remember the exact year," she said. "I think it was about 1949. Somewhere along in there."

I realized I shouldn't press this topic any further, even though I knew it had been a few years earlier than that. I was at Chaffey College from 1948 to 1950 and she had been there before me. The memory of a beautiful woman in her later fifties, although keen about other things, often becomes vague about the exact calendar years of youth. Perhaps that was the case with Amanda Blake.

She is a strikingly beautiful woman. Strawberry blonde hair frames an extraordinarily clear complexion and warm eyes. Only a few lines underneath those eyes and along the edge of her nose betray her age.

We talked of several other things for a few minutes. She told me how she now lives in Arizona and I told her about my having been born in Africa. We exchanged several comments about the changed characteristics of Southern California.

The man escorting her around stepped forward to tell her they had to go.

"It was a pleasure talking to you," I said. "Even though I've never met you before, I wanted to say hello because of our both having had the same drama teacher long ago. As you said, it's a small world."

"Yes, it's nice to make connection sometimes with the past. I'm glad to have met you also."

Afterwards I got to remembering some of the answers which I had heard her give on the program while I had been waiting for her in the lobby. And I thought how curious are many of the questions which are asked of a public personality like Amanda Blake. Several people talked about turns of the plot in "Gunsmoke," making suggestions as to how things should have gone. Miss Kitty should have gotten married. Things like that. No one asked or said anything to her about herself!

And I realized that's why I so seldom write about the theater people I've known, even though I've been active in the profession for almost 40 years. The public doesn't think of theater personalities in terms of their own identities! Association is always made with the role the actor plays. Even the gossip columns seldom tell anything about the real identity of the public figure. To write about such people is to write about something which the public simply does not identify to the truth.

I know that I've written about a theater personality here. But that has been only because I was able to talk with and write about Amanda Blake, not Miss Kitty.

Perhaps she won't remember any of this meeting a month from now. That's all right. At least two of Ruth Kegley's former students were able to share some common reminiscences about her as a teacher. That way, Ruth Kegley became alive once again. And Amanda Blake and Joel Climenhaga became alive to each other — even if only for a few minutes.

Answering questions

TOM DOWNING

around campus and step into various offices.

Our art gallery wasn't destroyed by fire or flood, it has never existed. Why not?

If someone can give me an adequate answer, besides saying we don't have the money, I'll quit worrying about it.

But we have the money to build a recreation complex. We have the resources to undertake a campaign to build a $16 million complex for basketball that we don't need. Why haven't we found the money to build an art gallery?

I've talked to a number of administrators on campus and everyone has hinted that in the future an art gallery/museum will be built.

Where are the plans? Currently construction of an art gallery and art building is No. 25 on the priority list.

Every other major university has at least an art gallery; many have several.

Don't we owe it to the students and the community to have a space where art can be displayed in a central location?

The College of Home Economics has extensive research collections of textiles and historic garments but no adequate place to display them. Why?

Every semester, fine-arts degree candidates display their work in three campus locations: McCain Auditorium, Deibler Gallery in West Stadium and Room 6 in the Art Building. They are split into two groups; each group has two weeks to display their work. This is ridiculous.

What place do the arts have in the University? We are the people who are supposed to help determine answers to these questions.

Do you speak out? How many faculty members are enraged about being asked to contribute to a multimillion dollar construction project in the same year they were denied a salary increase? How many have spoken publicly? I suspect that many are unable to voice their opinion because of the fear of political reprisals.

The faculty and staff can voice their opinion by simply not contributing.

But students must pay their $16.50 coliseum bond whether they like it or not. Students have a voice, if only they speak.

Students can make administrators long for a vacation by asking questions until an appropriate answer is given.

Why don't we have an art gallery or museum?

We almost had one. An art gallery was planned to be a part of the reconstruction of Nichols Gym. It got as far as the blueprint stage and suddenly, zap, no more gallery.

What happened? Student Senate has $10,000 dollars to spend which was allocated in 1975 as a symbolic gesture in support of an art gallery in Nichols Gym.

I'd prefer to make a more coarse gesture toward the administration for removing the gallery from Nichols. But let's make another symbolic gesture instead.

Let's keep that $10,000 in an account for construction of an art gallery/museum to show that students are still concerned.

Music should be judged in own light

Editor,
Re: Sue Schmitt's "Trio embraces crowd with jazzy performance," in the Oct. 31 Collegian.

We, as a student and academic community, need fine reviews and criticisms of the cultural events made possible by our University. What we don't need are inaccurate and invalid statements made by persons possessing little or no criteria to make judgments on such art forms.

Jazz educators and promoters have been working hard to reform the misconceptions held by many about the genre. Stating that McShann's Trio "looked out of place in McCain," and that Priscilla Bowman made McCain seem like a bar, does not help the cause.

Although Bowman claims to be influenced by such great artists as Billie Holiday, that was pure Priscilla we saw and heard on stage. What criteria does Schmitt have to make the comparison about Mr. Williams and the violin section of the St. Louis Symphony? The intent was good, I'm sure, but please, let's not compare apples and oranges.

Schmitt is correct in stating that McShann's piano style is different than Basie's, but she shouldn't imply that he plays with more feeling.

In Roger Sessions' "Questions About Music," chapter VI, he discusses criteria. Sessions states that errors in the application of music criticism result from wrong perspectives. Criteria for judgment is drawn from an unprejudiced ear that is familiar with all realms of music, including history, style, etc. Music and its performance should be criticized in this light for itself, without the comparison to any other.

Both theories have problems

Editor,
Brad Gillispie brought to our attention the need to teach creationism alongside evolution. In a guest editorial Friday, Oct. 28, Robert Gendron contested the claim that evolution was in disarray or that creationism was scientific at all to be eligible for presentation.

Gendron, however, made a mistake in presenting the "testability" of evolution. The presence of human and dinosaur fossils in the same geological strata would not disprove evolution. The fact they are not found so is part of a greater geological picture showing extinction of species for various reasons. Evolution does not specifically predict the extinction of any particular class of life. In fact, inability to do so (simulate evolution) mathematically is one of the arguments against it. He is correct, however, in asserting that evidence in favor has been mounting every year (and from unexpected areas that were not even conceptualized adequately when the original ideas were presented).

Creationism has had to accept "natural selection" as a viable mechanism in face of empirical evidence. The emergence of a distinct "species" as a consequence has not been observed nevertheless, and so is a bone of contention. The other major problem with evolution that makes the concept tough to work quantitatively is its statistical nature. And anything to do with statistics is a deep problem for creationists (e.g. the second law of thermodynamics, radioactivity, etc.).

In conclusion, what is really needed in schools is a good dose of required math with lots of probability theory.

Reasons for slow Stray Cats ticket sales

Editor,
Re: "Tickets for Stray Cats sell slowly; initial purchases disappoint UPC;" Wednesday, Nov. 2 Collegian.

We see several reasons why a "top-name" group such as the Stray Cats, with two albums released in the United States, is having trouble selling tickets. First, Joan Jett with two albums released and now, the Stray Cats. Who's next? Even a Kansas City band named Shooting Star has more albums released than the aforementioned groups combined. As for Barbara Burke's notion of concerts being a "dying fad," let's see her try to buy tickets at the door for the Police in Kansas City or Wichita.

But enough of this; on to the real reason for slow ticket sales, according to Burke: the sale of K-State men's basketball tickets. I mean, who would want to miss such national powers as Centenary, Eastern Washington, U.S. International, and that perennial poll-climber, Oral Roberts. We feel we have a real opportunity to knock off some of these highly-respected teams, primarily because we return no double-figure scorers or seniors. These must be the true reasons for the slow sale of Stray Cats tickets.

Thanks for Bloodmobile success

Editor,
Many thanks go to all who participated in this semester's bloodmobile. As everyone is probably aware, this was the largest blood drive in K-State's history, with 1,745 units collected. This is 345 more than the University's goal and 237 more than our previous all-time high.

K-State has many reasons to be proud of its bloodmobile. We are the largest donor for the Wichita Region

Red Cross, which covers all of Kansas, most of Oklahoma, and part of Texas. We provide all the blood that is needed in this region in the four days that the Red Cross is here.

Another reason we should be proud is because of our volunteers. Without them, we could not have a bloodmobile. Many clubs, living groups and individuals were involved in this effort. We would like to thank all of you for your time and effort. All of the nurses told us that this was the smoothest running blood drive ever at K-State, and for this, we thank you. We hope all of this enthusiasm will continue for next semester's bloodmobile, which will be at the end of February.

More to 'real world' than drinking

Editor,
Re: Tuesday, Oct. 25 Busch beer advertisement.

I wish to offer my congratulations to Anheuser-Busch Inc. for being the first major corporation to finally answer the age-old question: "Why go to college?" The answer is so simple that I can't imagine why I didn't see it before! The answer, of course, is to build an aluminum mountain "with a minimum of 1,000 cans..." to drink as much beer in as short a time as is humanly possible.

Why spend $550.50 per semester on tuition and fees and $150 to $300 per semester on books to get a degree in computer science, physics, biology, chemistry, or whatever, when you can spend all that money preparing for the future by drinking a mountain of beer instead? Why spend long hours poring over your algebra, calculus, chemistry and biology textbooks when, instead, you could be pouring cold Busch down your throat?

How stupid of us to think that we should spend $10,000 per year for a degree that will be totally useless once we obtain it. All we need to be prepared for is to guzzle beer all day and we will be able to succeed. We will have the prettiest girls, the fastest, fanciest cars, the most friends, the best jobs — if only we are able to guzzle that beer.

Don't worry about government statistics concerning alcohol and child abuse; alcohol and spouse abuse; alcohol and poor grades; or even alcohol and alcoholism for that matter. It's all a hype put on by the gargantuan "U.S. Propaganda Machine."

Don't worry about meeting such obligations as rent, utilities, phone bills, student loans, or anything else. We just need to make sure that we have enough beer on hand to build the biggest, most original aluminum mountain in Manhattan.

Anheuser-Busch, we thank you from the bottom of our (burp) hearts for educating us on the matter of educational priorities. First thing tomorrow morning, I shall burn all of my textbooks, notes, etc. and buy a truckload of Busch so that I may begin my training for the "real world." We are forever in your "debt."

P.S. The grand prize, I've heard, is a year's membership to a de-tox unit in Topeka. Good luck, guys!

Craft decision was sexist

Editor,
What are the "real differences" in your mind between men and women? Granted there are differences, but I don't believe they include women having an inborn talent for fixing hair, applying makeup or dressing stylishly.

Christine Craft had made it a part of her agreement with the station before she accepted the job that they would not try to make her over. It was not acceptable grooming that they were after but the image of an actress or fashion model. Craft is not an actress as you tried to imply in your editorial. She has been educated and trained as a reporter. Do countless people tune in to Dan Rather to see his "fresh and pretty face?" It is my personal opinion that there is not much evidence to be seen on local or national network news shows that they hire their male anchors for their attractiveness. In fact, several I've seen are balding and/or older. Should they be demoted because their hair is not as attractive? They have reached the upper ranks of TV journalism in spite of their lesser attractiveness without anyone mentioning it. That suggests that women's main purpose is still to look pretty foremost and then worry about being competent.

The claims that this was not a sexist decision are ridiculous. "Not deferential to men" certainly has to be considered sexist. It would be far different if the complaint had been simple impoliteness or rudeness, but that was not the case.

There are "real differences" between men and women, but this is one that has totally been created by a sexist society; not from differences in biological makeup.

KSDB rates third in recent area poll

By PATTI SHIPP
Collegian Reporter

K-State students still choose Topeka's WIBW-FM as their favorite radio station, according to results of an October Manhattan radio audience survey.

The survey was conducted during the week of Oct. 6-13 by the students in the radio-television curriculum of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications. It was performed through a telephone poll of 512 persons called at random in Manhattan.

For the survey, persons called were asked about their favorite types of music, length of time they listen to the radio each day and their favorite stations during different times of the day.

The survey rated KMKF of Manhattan as the second favorite station of K-State students, followed by KSDB, Manhattan and KJCK-FM, Junction City.

However, the overall ratings for Manhattan residents were different than those of K-State students.

WIBW-FM was first in the city ratings, with 22 percent of those polled choosing it as their favorite radio station. KMKF was second with 15 percent, followed by KMAN, Manhattan, with 13 percent. KJCK-FM was reported to have 9 percent of the listenership of those polled, KSDB-FM followed with 6 percent.

Among K-State students KMKF rose from fourth place in the last survey, conducted in April, to second place in the October poll. KSDB-FM dropped from second place to third place.

The change in ratings can be explained by KMKF's change in format and way of broadcasting, said Brian O'Neill, KDSB-FM assistant adviser.

"KMKF started a format change in August 1983. They changed from an album-based format to a top 40 or adult contemporary format," O'Neill said.

The top-40 format doesn't jar anybody's ears by playing hard rock or heavy metal on the air, he said. The listener will be familiar with the music and will know that, when tuning to KMKF, it will be playing a good, popular song, he said.

With the new format, KMKF has a broader-based appeal. It isn't focusing on any particular age group, rather it appeals to those from age 12 to 45, he said.

KMKF recently went to a taped automation system. This allows for live-assist broadcasting in which the disc jockey can either stop the taped music for live announcements or let the tape run for several hours without interruptions.

"This is called the Z format from Century 21 programming in Dallas. It is a very popular automated format around the country. A lot of stations use it and it does well," O'Neill said.

By eliminating the live DJ at certain times, a station can exert more control over the types of music played on their station, he said.

Because of KMKF's consistent top-40 format, some of KSDB's listeners have switched to KMKF, he said.

KSDB-FM experienced a drop in the ratings because "some of our listeners who we had in April listened not necessarily to KSDB-FM because they liked us, but because they disliked the other stations," O'Neill said.

KSDB-FM doesn't try to be No. 1 in the ratings. It provides an alternative program hoping that it will "appeal to enough listeners to justify its existence," he said.

"KSDB-FM's purpose is to provide a good quality service to the K-State community and to train people on the air to be announcers and newscasters," O'Neill said.

KSDB-FM is looking for ways to make its format "more consistent and less distracting to the listener, while at the same time trying to present an alternative to top-40," he said.

WIBW-FM remains in first place in Manhattan as well as with K-State students for several reasons, O'Neill said.

WIBW-FM is located at 97.3 on the radio, which is close to the middle of the dial and "listeners tend to tune to stations in the middle of the dial," he said.

The station has been a tradition at K-State that has "built up through the years, and that's hard to beat," he said.

Club to promote awareness of Central American issues

By LAURI DIEHL
Collegian Reporter

A new campus organization wants to eliminate local apathy towards Central American politics.

The purpose of Citizens in Solidarity with Central America is to support solutions to the conflicts in Central America. The club opposes U.S. intervention, aid to unpopular regimes and efforts to destabilize popular governments.

John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy and the club's faculty adviser, said the idea for a club originated in a group of students and professors with similar political interests.

"A group of people have developed an interest in El Salvador and Nicaragua," he said. "The particular idea arose from an organization at the University of Kansas. It is a very active organization with approximately 30 to 50 students."

Jane Johnson, senior in geography and president of the club, said the purpose of the club is to get students and members of the community involved in political activities.

"Our main interest isn't in educating," she said. "Groups like the Coalition for Human Rights are involved with education. We want to get people to persuade the government to stop U.S. intervention in Central America."

Some possibilities for club activities include petition circulation, letter-writing and examining the records of various politicians, Johnson said.

"We might examine the records of politicians and contact them to get their opinions about El Salvador and other Central American countries," she said. "Are they seeking peace and self-determination for these countries?"

Johnson said the club might rate politicians on the basis of their records.

"More and more people are getting interested in Central America," she said. "But not everyone has time to check each politician."

Exdell said students are becoming more politically aware.

"I've been here for 10 years," he said. "The student body has been politically passive until now, but I sense some changes. There is a real concern about what's going on in Central America."

Students can have an effect on governmental policy, Exdell said.

"Students and faculty have in mind doing some of the things that were done during the Vietnam War," he said. "Students took the lead at that time and had a tremendous effect."

Johnson said the club will begin a membership drive.

"We were waiting for recognition as a campus organization before beginning," she said. "Being a little bit of a radical group, we weren't sure how easy it would be to get approved."

Citizens in Solidarity with Central America was approved Wednesday by the University Activities Board as a campus organization.

Official says media isn't 'dying business'

By LEE WHITE
Collegian Reporter

Agriculture reporting is alive and well in both print and electronic journalism.

That's what Bernard Brenner, press secretary for the U.S. House Agricultural Committee, said in a speech before about 75 participants in an Ag Media Days dinner Thursday night at the University Ramada Inn.

"You run into a lot of people who think agriculture reporting is a fading business," Brenner said. "The fact is, we have seen a lot of changes in agricultural media, but we haven't seen a dying business."

Newspapers have begun incorporating agricultural stories into business sections, and television and radio correspondents from news agencies across the nation frequently seek information from his office about issues at home, Brenner said. In addition, computer access services have opened a new avenue of agriculture reporting, he said.

Issues affecting agriculture also are beginning to capture the interest of urban residents, he said.

As an example, Brenner pointed out three in-depth agriculture stories in The Washington Post. But to keep the interest of urbanites in this area, the news media must be careful not to overspecialize, he said.

"Do they (urban dwellers) want to read about agriculture from a reporter who is facing them as a part of agriculture or as a third person?" Brenner asked. "The weight comes down on impartiality in this situation. You get better reporting if you don't have a partisan interest in something."

Reporters with a vested interest in agriculture may not be best, but neither are reporters with no knowledge of issues, Brenner said.

Editors sometimes assign a story to a reporter who knows little about a topic, Brenner said. This usually brings one of two results: the story contains only opinions of sources and no explanation of the issue by the reporter or the story is slanted in one source's favor, he said.

Fortunately, few of these situations are encountered by his office, he said.

Brenner, a graduate of the University of Missouri with a degree in agricultural journalism, worked for United Press International in several capacities, including Washington agriculture editor for 34 years, before assuming his current post in 1978.

Birds fly south for winter on jet

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Migration will never be the same again for two hummingbirds and a black-headed grosbeak who headed south on a jet airliner for the winter.

The birds left Thursday in an attempt to catch up with their migrating buddies heading south — courtesy of American Airlines. A spokesman for an Arlington bird rehabilitation program said the hummingbirds abandoned their annual flight south about five or six weeks ago when they got caught in the Fort Worth-Dallas area during one of the season's first cold snaps.

George Stewart, a spokesman for Phoenix of Arlington, said the tiny birds can't function in cold weather because of their high metabolisms.

Joan Roberts of Dallas, who accompanied the three birds south, said one was found by a woman in downtown Dallas almost frozen. She said another hummingbird was brought to her the next day, after the cold weather stopped its flight and a cat almost ended its life.

By the time the birds had recovered their strength with food provided by Roberts, they were too late to join the migration south.

Roberts said the third traveling companion, the grosbeak, a large yellow and black bird with a large beak, got into the Fort Worth area by mistake.

Judges use creativity in sentencing

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Judges let their imagination run riot in the first year of Rochester's community-service sentencing program for non-violent offenders.

—One man convicted of drunken driving was ordered to clean the elephant cages at Smca Park Zoo.

—A shoplifter who was also a singer had to do four concerts at senior citizen homes.

—A man who was growing marijuana in his attic had to grow 50 house plants for senior citizens' homes.

—A snow plow operator, convicted of several driving charges, had to plow the parking lot of the American Cancer Society.

The shovel-wielding elephant cage cleaner encountered a little trouble returning home. City Court Judge William H. Bristol said Tuesday at the program's first birthday party.

"He rode the bus to work, but they wouldn't let him on when he got done. He had to walk home."

Humphrey declines Senate bid

ST. PAUL, Minn. — The name would be familiar, especially next to the title U.S. senator, but Hubert H. Humphrey III said Thursday he will not be a candidate for the seat his father held for 22 years.

The decision by the Minnesota attorney general ended two months of intensive exploration by Humphrey into a possible Senate bid next year on the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party ballot.

However, Humphrey, 41, did not rule out the possibility of accepting a draft for the seat held by Republican Rudy Boschwitz. "I'm obviously going to be ready to respond to my party's needs," he said.

Teen pop group signs with RCA

NEW YORK — The Puerto Rican pop group Menudo, considered the hottest teen recording group, signed a contract with RCA Records on Thursday.

The first album under the new agreement, "A Todo Rock," will be released in the United States, Puerto Rico and Mexico immediately and in other countries during the next several months, RCA Records said.

Edgardo Diaz, who started the quintet in 1977, established it with rock music, Spanish lyrics and a retirement age of 16.

KCC blasts phone rate jump

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The staff of the Kansas Corporation Commission widened its attack Thursday on Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.'s proposed $204.5 million rate increase describing its provisions for higher local service charges as "unforgivably abusive."

In addition, commission staffers recommended that Southwestern Bell be required to submit its annual construction budget for KCC review to help hold down costs of upgrading equipment and buildings.

Neel Holler, rate design and depreciation administrator for the KCC staff, urged the state utility regulatory agency to reject Southwestern Bell's proposal to nearly double the cost of basic local service. He warned that dramatic increases in local service rates could force some people to abandon telephone service.

"Now is not the time for drastic changes in rate form or revenue sources," Holler said in testimony prepared for the hearings. "This is very much an interim case. Any changes in rate form, any shift in revenue sources is not called for at this time."

Holler said there may be no "painless way" to implement a rate increase for Southwestern Bell, but he described the company's proposal as "unforgivably abusive" for increasing local service rates.

Southwestern Bell is asking that its rates be raised to provide an additional $204.5 million in annual revenues. About half of the revenues would come from higher charges for local service.

If fully approved by the KCC, the company's proposal would nearly double the cost of local service. It would add $7 a month to the cost of one-party local service for residential customers and $16 for one-party business customers.

In Topeka and Salina, for example, the company's proposal would mean a 75 percent increase in local rates for residential customers. The monthly cost would go from $9.35 to $16.35.

Customers also might be required to pay additional access charges for long distance service. The amounts will vary depending upon actions by the KCC and the Federal Communications Commission.

David Brevitz, a KCC staff economist, proposed that the commission review and approve Bell's construction budgets. He noted that some modernization of equipment benefits only a small group of customers using sophisticated services yet all customers must pay the costs under the company's methods.

"Ratepayers would gain some protection from rate increases designed to pay for a level of company investment which is driven by other classes of customers," said Brevitz of the KCC budget review proposal. "As monopoly ratepayers, that is the type of protection they need."

The company originally requested a $213.7 million rate increase, but revised it this week to reflect changes in its revenue needs. The original proposal would have added $8.95 a month to bills of residential customers for local service.

The KCC staff, which represents the public in the rate proceedings, has recommended a rate increase between $82.7 million and $103.8 million. That would mean no more than a 65-cent-a-month increase in basic local service charges for residential customers and $1.30 a month for business customers.

Cheryl Tuttle, a KCC rate design and depreciation analyst, urged the commission to reject Bell's proposed "economy service," one of three plans to lower the monthly cost of local service.

Under it, customers would pay a monthly fee of $7 to $11 for local service and could place up to 12 calls. Any calls beyond that limit would be extra, priced according to the duration and destination of the call.

Tuttle said the economy service, Bell's least expensive plan for local service, would benefit only a small number of people. Moreover, she said it is priced below cost, which forces other customers to make up the revenue loss.

Finally, she noted that the company's two-year experiment with optional measured service is still in effect. The experiment allows customers in selected cities to pay a lower flat rate for local service and calls are priced much like long distance. The KCC approved the experiment so Bell could gather information on the program.

Southwestern Bell maintains that the full $204 million increase is needed to offset a loss of revenue because of the impending divestiture of its parent company, American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

The AT&T breakup, which is to take effect Jan. 1, means that Southwestern Bell must operate as a separate company. Revenues from telephone equipment now in customer homes and businesses and most long distance services will be transferred to AT&T under the divestiture.

Holler also recommended that the commission levy any increase in local rates as a surcharge to clearly indicate to customers that the higher costs are subject to change because of the effects of the AT&T breakup.

The case is being treated as a temporary or interim rate proceeding because the company is basing its needs on projections of what will happen after the divestiture. As a result, the KCC could order a refund to customers if it is determined later that Southwestern Bell was granted too large of an increase.

The commission, which regulates utilities in Kansas, has until Dec. 31 to issue a decision in the Bell rate case.

Southwestern Bell is the largest public utility in Kansas. It serves about 785,000 customers in 177 communities, including Wichita, Topeka, Kansas City, Hutchinson, Manhattan, Salina, Lawrence, Emporia, Hays, Dodge City, Garden City, Goodland, Parsons and Pittsburg.

Judge orders UCLA student to avoid use of computers

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A UCLA physics student pleaded innocent Thursday to charges of electronically breaking into computer systems — including one used by the Defense Department — and prosecutors said at least two other youths are under investigation in the case.

Ronald Mark Austin, 19, of Santa Monica stood impassively with his hands jammed in his pockets during his arraignment. Municipal Judge Michael Tynan lowered bail from $10,000 to $2,000 and ordered Austin to stay away from computers.

He also set a Dec. 2 preliminary hearing for Austin, charged with 14 felony counts of maliciously gaining access to computer systems. If convicted, he faces a maximum of six years in prison.

Outside of court, Deputy District Attorney Clifton Garrott said investigators also had seized the TRS-80 computer of a friend of Austin's identified in court documents as Lee Poulsen of North Hollywood. Poulsen, a juvenile, has not been charged in the case.

The investigator's report indicated that a third person, identified only by the name "Kareem" worked with Austin and Poulsen. The three talked to each other electronically over the UCLA computer's "chat mode," it said.

The report, prepared by district attorney's investigator J. Duane Trump, said both Austin and Poulsen admitted gaining access to files in the UCLA computer.

Auditors propose reductions in higher education budgets

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — State spending for higher education is "relatively high" in Kansas compared with other states, and auditors recommended that lawmakers look at economy measures including elimination of some schools and duplicate degree programs.

The Legislative Division of Post Audit, in delivering a report on higher education funding, also suggested limitations or restrictions on enrollment and changing the governing structure for higher education to achieve more efficiency.

Reaction to the audit was generally favorable. Most of the committee members said the report's recommendations should spark a needed legislative debate over higher education spending, but they conceded that its findings were no surprise.

"I don't think this report is going to be a blueprint for the '84 session," said Sen. Paul Hess, R-Wichita, chairman of the Senate budget-making committee. "The issue is bigger than one 90-day session."

But Hess, like other committee members, said the audit provided "food for thought" and confirmed that state support for higher education was "pretty generous" — something many in the Legislature have long contended.

Kansas provided $314 million during the last fiscal year to state universities, community colleges, post-secondary vocational education and Washburn University of Topeka. Auditors said last year's funding translated into about $132 for each resident, ranking Kansas 11th out of the 50 states. The national average was $114 per resident.

Alaska was the top spender, $365 per resident, and New Hampshire was the lowest, $38 per resident.

Hess said he viewed Kansas' per capita expenditures for higher education as "complimentary not negative."

"This report is a pretty good report card for what Kansas is doing for higher education," said Rep. Bill Buntin, R-Topeka, who is chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Sen. Tom Rehorn, D-Topeka, agreed, saying it was a "good sign" that Kansas ranked high in its funding for post secondary education.

"It is good report and we're pleased with what is going on in Kansas," said Rehorn.

The audit report explained that Kansas has a larger percentage of its population enrolled in public post-secondary institutions than most states. That accounts for the higher than average per capita funding support.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, cautioned the committee to be careful in drawing conclusions from the statistical comparisons of spending. He said many states have different ways of reporting their expenditures. Still, he conceded that Kansas ranks high in its per capita support for higher education.

"I think the study is useful to get general indications," said Koplik. "I don't think we spend an unusual amount for what we expect from higher education."

Auditors also noted that a larger percentage of Kansas' higher education students are in four-year institutions which also drives up the costs because they are more expensive than two-year schools.

However, the audit report emphasized that higher education expenditures in Kansas, measured on a per-student basis, were not "significantly above the averages nationally or in other states."

In suggesting ways to trim costs, auditors did not endorse any particular proposal but merely recommended several options for lawmakers to consider. The audit report was presented to the Legislative Post Audit Committee, which has the power to introduce measures in the next session of the Legislature.

The auditors suggested:

— Reducing the number of higher education institutions.

— Elimination or consolidation of degree programs at some schools.

— Placing "enrollment caps" or restrictions on some institutions, those which are experiencing continued growth.

— Change the governing system for higher education, possibly going to a single board to oversee both universities and community colleges.

Local musical debuts in N.Y.

By TOM DOWNING
Staff Writer

In 1980, Norman Fedder, playwright professor in the speech department, accidentally met a composer from St. Louis.

The composer, an insurance businessman named Richard Lippman, had an idea for a musical about Harry Truman.

Fedder had written a one-act play, "Next Thing to Kinfolks," about the relationship between Truman and Eddie Jacobson. The play was presented at the Jewish Heritage Theatre in New York.

It was there that playwright and composer met and began working together.

Lippman quit his job to pursue full-time work on the project. After more than ten drafts, their musical "The Buck Stops Here!" opened on Oct. 27 at the AMAS Repertory Theatre in New York.

Playwright Fedder and composer Lippman worked for two years writing the play and the music. They spent the last year rewriting and trying to find someone to produce it.

"I always say," Fedder said, "plays are not written, they are rewritten."

"Doc" Fedder, as he is known at K-State, has written over 20 plays. He teaches playwrighting and creative dramatics.

In trying to find a theater to produce the musical, Fedder said he submitted it to theaters throughout the country. But it was AMAS, an off-off-Broadway theater, which wanted to produce the musical. The AMAS is a 99-seat showcase non-profit theater.

Fedder explained that the actors, members of Actors' Equity Association, receive an honorarium in lieu of a salary.

"The actors agree to work for almost nothing," Fedder said. "It's a showcase for their work. They put their phone numbers in the program so that potential producers can call them."

The low pay caused some problems in the rehearsal process.

"After three weeks, Bess left. She got a paying job. So we had to find another Bess," Fedder said.

"We couldn't find a Harry Truman who could age from 17 to 69 and who could sing, dance and act. Or, if he could act, he didn't look like Truman."

"One day, a guy walked in who was just right," Fedder said. "The whole play depends upon Truman, so he had to have charisma."

On Nov. 1, New York Times reviewer Herbert Mitgang wrote a review which began: "Valiant is the word for 'The Buck Stops Here!,' the AMAS Repertory Theatre's new musical about Harry S. Truman."

Fedder is pleased with the review and anticipates more notices before the four-week, 16-performance run ends.

"Before the opening I was convinced we had something the people were going to love," Fedder said. "The crucial thing is, will the public like it?"

Former K-State student Michael Gorman, who was in original plays and musicals at the University, is playing the roles of Charlie Ross and Eddie Jacobson. The original actor quit and Fedder suggested Gorman be auditioned.

"I suggested they (the producer and director) call him and try him out, but they were the ones who decided to use him," he said.

Included in the rewriting was a change in one song from comic to tragic, Fedder said.

"The minute we came there (New York), they said it was too light. Now it's much better. I'm pleased. 'They cut one of the prettiest songs — it was like cutting my composer's arm off,' Fedder said.

He said there are a number of things that could happen now that the musical has received favorable reaction. The run could be extended if the actor's contracts can be worked out. It could go to off-Broadway, to a larger house, or it could go on tour.

Fedder said that until he met Lippman, he had "given up on the professional theater. The greatest prize is the ability to continue to work as a playwright," he said.

Top managers field award from writers

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Chicago White Sox's manager Tony LaRussa and Los Angeles Dodger's manager Tom Lasorda each received the Manager of the Year award in their leagues by the Baseball Writers Association of America Thursday.

LaRussa led the White Sox to the best record in baseball this season with a 99-63 mark and won the American League West Division title by a record 20 games over second-place Kansas City. It was Chicago's first baseball crown in 24 years when the Sox were American League champions. Baltimore eliminated Chicago in four games in the AL Championship Series and went on to win the World Series.

The 28-man BBWAA panel, composed of two writers from each league city, gave LaRussa 17 votes. Joe Altobelli, manager of the world champion Orioles, was second with seven and Bobby Cox of the Toronto Blue Jays finished third with four.

LaRussa, a licensed attorney in the state of Florida, has been managing the White Sox since mid-1979 and is second only to Sparky Anderson of Detroit in seniority in the league. He also was named American League Manager of the Year by The Associated Press.

Lasorda led the Dodgers to the National League West title in what was supposed to be a rebuilding year.

Working with a young team full of new faces, he piloted the Dodgers to their fourth division title since he became their manager in 1977. LA has won three league championships under the leadership of the 56-year-old manager, who signed a new three-year contract with the Dodgers last week.

Lasorda edged Bob Lillis of Houston for the award, 10-9, in balloting by the BBWAA panel. Chuck Tanner of Pittsburgh received four votes and Paul Owens of the champion Philadelphia Phillies got one. Lasorda also beat Lillis by a single vote, 28-27, to win the AP NL Manager of the Year poll last month.

It marked the first time the BBWAA has given awards for manager of the year. The writers annually name Cy Young Award winners for the best pitchers in each league, most valuable player awards and rookie of the year awards.

Women athletes meet

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Some of the biggest names in women's sports gathered in the nation's capital Thursday for the start of a four-day conference aimed at forming a modern blueprint for women's athletics.

Brought together under the banner of "The New Agenda," by the Women's Sports Foundation and the U.S. Olympic Committee, more than 500 delegates are to discuss the future of women in the sports world.

"The time is right for a national review of women's sports," said Donna de Varona, former Olympic gold medal winner and current president of the Women's Sports Foundation. "We may have come a long way, but there is still a long way to go."

Featured speakers will include tennis great Billie Jean King; golf's Carol Mann; marathoner Joan Benoit; Olympic track gold medalists Wilma Rudolph, Wyomia Tyus and Madeline Manning; Janet Guthrie, the first woman to race in the Indianapolis 500; and Sally Ride, America's first woman astronaut.

Topics to be discussed include the physiological concerns of women in sports; promotion and public acceptance of women in sport; athleticism and sex roles.

Questions regarding involvement of women in the Olympics and Title IX, and the federal legislation forbidding sex discrimination by any school receiving federal money, also are expected to be aired during the conference.

The Justice Department, in a suit to be argued before the Supreme Court this term, contends the legislation applies only to programs receiving direct federal funding, and not extra-curricular activities like sports.

The NCAA, which went to court to successfully gain control of women's athletics from the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, has long contended that Title IX does not extend to privately financed activities.

English falls incomplete on eligibility

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Jon English, Tulane University's ineligible quarterback, lost a plea to a Supreme Court justice Thursday to be reinstated for the team's final two games of this season.

Justice Byron R. White, without comment, turned down an emergency request by English that he be allowed to play against Virginia Technical University on Saturday in the New Orleans Superdome and against Louisiana State University on Nov. 24.

English, after playing in Tulane's first six games in 1983, was forced to sit out the next three for violating the National Collegiate Athletic Association's college transfer rules.

English asked for help from White, a former All-America running back at the University of Colorado and former All-Pro with the Pittsburgh Steelers, because White handles emergency cases from Louisiana for the high court.

English, son of Tulane's first-year Coach Wally English, has challenged the NCAA transfer rules in court. He has accused the association and its 900 members of violating federal antitrust laws by monopolizing control over big-time college football.

Lawyers for English asked White to permit the quarterback to play pending further lower court action in the case.

English was a freshman at Michigan State University in 1979, then left to enroll at Allegheny Junior College in Pittsburgh for a year and subsequently played two years at Iowa State University.

He left Iowa State last winter, spent a semester and summer at Delgado Junior College in New Orleans, then enrolled at Tulane.

The NCAA requires players to sit out a year when they transfer to prevent athletes from switching schools just to play football.

Aside from temporary court orders that allowed him to play in six Tulane games this season, English has been unsuccessful in numerous forums in a protracted legal battle.

His case has proceeded through four levels of NCAA review and has been before five different state and federal courts.

He contends that a literal reading of NCAA rules only applies the one-year waiting period to transfer from a player's initial school.

The NCAA says the rules are intended to prevent exactly what English has done.

'Cats gun to upset Cowboys' homecoming in Stillwater

By SEAN REILLY
Sports Editor

Saturday's contest between K-State and Oklahoma State University will mark the 37th meeting of the two teams with the Cowboys leading the series 26-11. OSU Coach Jimmy Johnson is 4-0 against the Wildcats.

The game is slated to begin at 1:30 p.m. in Lewis Stadium at Stillwater, Okla.

It is homecoming weekend and OSU officials expect a near-sellout crowd.

The 'Cats have been OSU's homecoming opponent seven times, and six times the Cowboys have defeated the 'Cats. The last time K-State defeated the Cowboys was in Manhattan in 1978 by the score of 18-7.

The 'Cats last spoiled a Cowboys' homecoming game in 1972 with a 35-23 victory.

In OSU's game last week against the University of Colorado Buffaloes, Johnson said he was happy with the overall performance of his team.

"I was pleased with our offense, defense and kicking game at Colorado. The defense, in particular, came up with a lot of big plays and gave the offense some good scoring opportunities," Johnson said.

In their game against CU, OSU's offense did just that, taking advantage of several CU turnovers to rip off 30 second-quarter points en route to a 40-12 victory.

Johnson expressed concern over his team's upcoming game with K-State. "Kansas State always comes right after us, and this makes it doubly important we play well at home and keep this thing going.

"Anybody who scores 25 points and moves the ball over 400 yards against Nebraska is a team to be reckoned with. Jim Dickey always prepares his team well, and we shouldn't expect anything different this week.

"If they can score three consecutive touchdowns on Nebraska, which nobody else has done this year, they'll be tough to handle."

Jim Dickey, K-State head coach, said he hopes his team continues to play as it did in the second half of its game against the University of Nebraska.

"It would be real satisfying if we can continue it against Oklahoma State. I was pleased with Stan's (quarterback Stan Weber) performance. He looked very good and was able to keep the ball on the ground," Dickey said.

In last week's game against NU, the 'Cats managed to score more points on them than any of the Cornhuskers' other opponents this season.

K-State will face a test of character when they meet OSU this weekend, Dickey said.

"When you're 2-6 (0-4 in the Big Eight Conference) and things are not going well, it really tests a team to continue playing Saturday after Saturday," Dickey said.

Dickey said he considers OSU one of the top three teams in the league.

"They've played Oklahoma within one point, and they played the best against Nebraska that anyone's played all year," he said.

"They've also played some of their early games without Ernest Anderson, and with him back, they are much more of an added threat offensively. He can find the soft spots in the defense."

The Cowboys' record, which is currently 6-2 overall and 2-2 in the conference, doesn't please Coach Johnson.

"I think everyone in our program had high expectations after last year," Johnson said. "We were all disappointed that we were unable to fulfill those expectations."

What may have led to high expectations was the performance of Anderson, who, during last year's campaign, led the nation in rushing with 1,877 yards while shattering the Big Eight Conference rushing record.

Dickey reported that the Wildcats suffered no major injuries last weekend against top-ranked Nebraska, although bruises were common among the players.

"We're planning to play more young people this week, such as (tailback) Todd Moody, who really played well in our JV game last Friday," he said.

Just as impressive as the fact there were no major injuries, was the fact that Weber, in his first start as quarterback, had a total of 113 yards rushing and 142 yards passing against the 'Huskers.

Earlier this week, the Big Eight office honored Weber by naming him Player of the Week despite the loss to the Cornhuskers.

Weber said he would like to recognize the award as a team effort and the start of something good.

"It was a good feeling to start, but now we have to start winning games," Weber added.

"OSU looks to be by far the best team we have left to play on our schedule. We'll work very hard this week to get a good game plan together offensively and defensively to play OSU," Dickey said.

"Our team did pick up some confidence concerning our offense and our ability to move ball and being more competitive. It's scary knowing how OSU played Nebraska to a 14-10 score."

"I was very disappointed with some of the play of our defense.

Nebraska ran a couple plays which we knew would be difficult to stop, but they also ran some which we should have been able to control," Dickey said.

"Last year, we held Ernest Anderson to about 50 yards until the fourth quarter, then he finished with about 170 yards. I know he can run and what he can do, and he's a good one," Bob Daniels, linebacker for the 'Cats, said.

One individual the 'Cats defense will have to watch out for besides Anderson is his backup, Shawn Jones, who is ranked eighth nationally in rushing with an 110.6 yards per game average.

Jones was initially the starting running back for OSU two years ago until Anderson took the job away. However, with the injuries and illnesses that have sidelined Anderson, Jones has won the job back.

Nuggets stop Kings rally, 131-128

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kiki Vandeweghe, who started the game on the bench, scored 39 points and Alex English and Bill Hanzlik made crucial free throws in the final minute Thursday night to thwart a Kansas City rally and lead the Denver Nuggets past the Kings 131-128.

The Nuggets, who squared their National Basketball Association record at 2-2, led by 17 points at the end of the third quarter, 104-87. But the Kings, falling to 1-3, closed to within one point, 119-118, with 3:35 left.

Kansas City was looking to take a one-point lead seconds later when Mike Evans stole the ball from the Kings' Larry Drew and fed Howard Carter for a 10-footer and a 121-118 Denver lead.

Eddie Johnson, who led Kansas City with 29 points, got the Kings to within one point again at 129-128 with five seconds to go. Billy Knight fouled English and last year's leading scorer in the NBA hit both free throws to make it 131-128.

English finished with 25 points and Dan Issel had 15 for the Nuggets. Drew put in 23 for the Kings and Mark Olberding had 20.

HE WAS CONSIDERED ONE OF THE TOP HEISMAN TROPHY CANDIDATES AFTER RUSHING FOR A NATION-LEADING 1,877 YARDS UNTIL INJURIES FORCED HIM OUT OF SEVERAL GAMES THIS YEAR.

Pigskin Picks

Surprise of all surprises. Cellardwelling Kevin Dale posted the best record on last week's football picks. When asked about his 10-2 showing, Dale replied, "I said my prayers, stroked my rabbit's foot and paid off a few players."

Despite Dale's one-in-a-million showing, he still shares the basement in overall record with Brian "Northwestern's for Real" La Rue, who finished 7-5 on the week.

Leaving these two losers and jumping to the top, the predicting ace Joel "The Polish Predictor" Torczon is still being closely followed by Dan "I'll Catch Him, Yet" Owsley. Both went 9-3 with their picks.

Moving to the middle of this predicting ineptness, Andy "Night Frisbee" Nelson shares third-place honors with Paul "Tex" Hanson and Sean "Hope We Don't Pick Basketball" Reilly. This lowly threesome went 8-4.

Last, but not definitely least, Judi "I love Danny White" Wright tied La Rue for the bottom at 7-5.

Wright and Hanson have taken a secret charter to Chicago to meet with leaders of the underworld in hopes of securing secret information to aid them in their predictions.

Torczon remains the overall leader of this picking incompetency with a glittering 75-30 record for a .714 showing. Owsley is right behind at 72-33. After a significant drop, we find Nelson at 68-36 and Hanson at 64-41. Wright, hoping for a job as a Cowboy cheerleader, is 63-42. Reilly, hoping Wright gets the job, is 62-43. La Rue and Dale, each possessing 60-45 records, bring up the rear.

Research attracts attention of fuel industry

By KIM HUTCHISON
Staff Writer

The high cost and need for fuel has prompted the search for less expensive replacements and methods of production. For years, industries, scientists and environmentalists have investigated the problem. Kenneth Klabunde, head of the Department of Chemistry, may be close to discovering a solution.

Klabunde has been directing research on a technique known as "solvated metal atom dispersion." The focus of this research is on catalysts.

"A catalyst is a substance that causes chemicals to change without changing itself," he said. "They're (catalysts) similar to enzymes in your body which aid in the change of other substances."

Catalysts are used in industry to refine crude oils to be used as gasoline or in the production of other products. The action of a catalyst can change carbon monoxide (a poisonous gas) to methane (a non-poisonous gas and useful fuel), he said.

"Half of the Gross National Product depends on catalysts in one way or another," Klabunde said. The best catalysts are metals such as rhodium, platinum and iridium. But these metals are rare and expensive to use.

"These metals are most abundant in the Soviet Union and South Africa," Klabunde said. Platinum costs about $1,000 an ounce and iridium is even more expensive, he said.

Klabunde's research has two purposes. First, to make more efficient use of rare metals and second, to make better catalysts and find replacements for rare, expensive metals.

He said atoms are bound together in layers within metal. When a chemical comes in touch with the surface of the metal, it is transformed before dispersing into the air. However, only the top layer of the atoms is affected in the transformation of the chemical.

Klabunde said he wants to make use of the atoms below the first layer. To do this, he designed a "metal vapor synthesis apparatus." Electric heat from the apparatus drives the atoms of the metal off the bulk piece while a cold jar, acting as a support, catches the atoms as they fall. An organic solvent helps disperse the atoms and hold them in place on the support.

With the metal spread evenly in small particles on the support, more can be used to cause the change in the chemical, he said, adding that this method has produced catalysts that are eight times more active than conventional catalysts.

"These catalysts are super-dispersed," Klabunde said.

Klabunde also has experimented with cheaper metals, such as iron, nickel and chromium to replace precious metals as catalysts. Compared with platinum, nickel only costs approximately $50 an ounce. Depending on the metal and solvent used, catalysts have been developed to produce the same effect as the rarer metals, said Klabunde, who also has combined metals to disperse two at once.

"Some of these bimetallic catalysts are able to mimic a single atom of platinum," he said.

The combining of metals has been more successful in producing the desired catalytic reaction, he said. Once in a while a single cheap metal is equivalent to a rare metal, depending on the solvent used. Nickel used with a pentane solvent imitates platinum.

"We don't understand the role of the solvent completely, yet," Klabunde said. However, he said varying the solvent and temperature affects the activity of the particles. The smaller the particle size of the atoms, the more active they are.

The metals Klabunde experiments with are supplied by Johnson-Matthey Company, which sells metals worldwide. Some of the metals used are recovered.

"If we can find new uses for metals, then more of these metals will be sold," Klabunde said. He published his first paper concerning the research five years ago.

"Just now we are finding really active catalysts that hold an industrial interest," Klabunde said. However, these catalysts are still in the research stage and have not yet been used on an industrial level.

Because the research was published in a paper, the procedure cannot be patented.

"We went ahead and published the research because the role of the University is to provide information for people to use," he said.

Klabunde has given lectures concerning his research in Germany, France, England, Japan, Denmark and Italy. His research has attracted interest from corporations such as Phillips, Conoco and 3M.

"There is enough industrial interest that three companies sell the metal vapor synthesis apparatus," he said. Kontes Glass, the only American company, was the first to sell the apparatus 10 years ago, based on Klabunde's design. An English and Canadian company also sell the instrument.

Klabunde has been working on this dispersion technique since 1970.

"Like most discoveries, there's years and years of work before something useful comes out of it," he said.

Government may close railroad if Alaska refuses to purchase line

By The Associated Press

HURRICANE GULCH, Alaska — The Alaska Railroad, which will stop at the drop of a flag and accept fresh-killed moose as baggage, is the only link to the outside world for some wilderness dwellers.

The federal government, which owns the 525-mile railroad, has threatened to shut it down if the state of Alaska won't buy it. The state is interested, but still has some questions about buying an operation which loses money on passenger service and earns a minuscule profit overall.

"It's a poker game, and I wish I knew if the other side was bluffing," said Dave Walsh, a member of the state's Railroad Transfer Team. "It is my feeling that they (the federal government) would close it."

The issue is expected to be on the Alaska legislature's agenda in January.

The Alaska Railroad was begun in 1914, and completed in 1923. Its purpose was to connect Alaska's navigable waterways and one or more coal fields with an ice-free harbor on the gulf. Congress has concluded that those goals have been accomplished, that the railroad primarily benefits Alaska residents and businesses, so the state should own and operate it.

The U.S. Railway Association, which appraised the railroad at Congress' request, says the amount "a willing buyer would pay to a willing seller" is $22.3 million. In a state where last year's budget topped $4.5 billion, that's not much, but without any clear idea where the railroad is going, there's a reluctance to embrace it too quickly.

To many Alaska residents, the railroad is a lifeline.

"We probably wouldn't live where we live if it weren't for the railroad," said Jim Sykes.

Sykes and Cindy Matheson live about five miles east of railroad track, about 15 miles northeast of Talkeetna, and about 95 miles north of Anchorage.

The nearest road is about 12 miles away. Their closest neighbor is two miles away. They have only their trail between the railroad and their cabin. On the other side of the tracks is the broad, swift Susitna River.

"I love this railroad," said Ted Brown of Chase, a smattering of cabins about 87 miles north of Anchorage. It's linked to the outside only by the railroad.

"This is a railroad with a heart," said the 58-year-old part-time carpenter. "You can get on this train and tell 'em where you want to go, and they'll stop for you. And they'll pick you up."

"It's not unusual for a guy to ride the train up, get off, shoot a moose, gut it out, load it on the (return) train, and go home," said Brown, who rides the rails about twice a month.

The railroad's personalized service enables people like Sykes and Brown to get building supplies to their homesites at a reasonable cost. It also gives fishermen, hunters, miners and backpackers access to the wilds.

Freight revenues have subsidized the passenger operations because everyone agrees that charging the true cost of the service would make travel prohibitively expensive.

Continuation of such subsidies is one of the issues that would face the state as the new owner of the railroad.

Although the railroad has made money in each of the last three years, the total profits since 1973 amount to only $5.5 million, a marginal return on a substantial investment.

Profits may improve next year when the line begins hauling coal from the Usibelli Coal Mine at Healy, south of Fairbanks, to a soon-to-be completed coal loading facility at Seward.

"I really don't know of any railroad that carries large amounts of coal that is poor," said Frank Jones, manager of the railroad.

The railroad owns 38,000 acres of land, some of which is entangled in conflicting claims by native groups, especially around Eklutna, just north of Anchorage.

Strike shuts down Greyhound Bus Lines

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Greyhound Bus Lines Inc. shut down 60 percent of the nation's intercity bus service for at least two weeks Thursday as thousands of drivers and other workers went on strike rather than accept 9.5 percent wage cuts.

Pickets marched in front of depots and passengers were looking for seats on other bus lines or simply stuck out their thumbs.

And long lines of job applicants appeared outside Greyhound offices in response to newspaper ads seeking new employees. But there was little animosity between pickets and the job applicants.

"If I was unemployed, I'd be in line too," said 49-year-old bus driver Jesse Ellison of Buffalo, N.Y., who was picketing at the Niagara Frontier Transit Authority Bus Terminal in Buffalo.

"I have to get to Bar Harbor by tomorrow," Louis Kowitch of Washington, D.C., said after the Wednesday midnight strike stranded her in Portland, Maine. "I've got a job interview there, and if I don't make it, goodbye job. I don't have enough money to go by airplane, so I'll probably hitchhike." The strike left the 135-mile stretch between Portland and Bangor without any bus service.

Rival companies added routes and buses and honored Greyhound tickets. Amtrak also accepted Greyhound tickets. But long passenger lines were reported in some places anyway.

Arafat, PLO defend last stronghold

By The Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Syria — Yasser Arafat and his PLO fighters, driven from one refugee camp under intense artillery fire, regrouped Sunday to defend their last Middle East stronghold against a tank-led assault by Syrian-backed mutineers.

The harried Palestine Liberation Organization leader, shuttling between Tripoli and loyalist positions, told reporters Syria was trying to destroy him and his 8,000 fighters, and said no truce negotiations were planned.

The rebel tanks and heavy artillery forced Arafat's men to abandon Nahar el-Bared refugee camp outside northern Tripoli and flee to the Baddawi camp just outside the city, Arafat's last redoubt.

Some loyalists moved into Tripoli to escape the advancing rebels, whose four-day onslaught has cost hundreds of lives. Police say more than 500 have been killed and 840 wounded.

The rebels are say they want to oust Arafat because he has abandoned the struggle with Israel. Arafat's men say Syria is backing the assault because it wants to control the PLO.

"An average of 25 to 30 shells were falling on civilian heads every minute," said a senior PLO official, attempting to explain the retreat. "We had to do something to ease this massacre."

The official, who requested anonymity, also said the move "strengthened our defense lines around Baddawi."

Lebanese police say many of the dead and wounded are civilians, including Tripoli residents and families living in the camps, which are home to about 45,000 Palestinian refugees.

The two camps are about six miles apart. In the Baddawi camp, rockets fired by Syrian forces supporting the mutineers whistled overhead and exploded near an oil refinery nearby. It has been spewing thick black smoke since a shell set it blaze Thursday.

The rebels have been shelling the camps persistently. Artillery and rocket barrages from Syrian positions hills have provided cover for the mutineers, advancing behind 30 Syrian T-54 and T-62 tanks.

Christian and Moslem religious leaders in Tripoli issued a joint appeal Sunday for a cease-fire to end "this dreadful catastrophe."

Controversy buries plans for governor's new pool

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Plans to build a $20,000 swimming pool at the governor's mansion have been canceled because of adverse publicity and controversy, Gov. John Carlin said.

Carlin announced Saturday he was abandoning the project, for which ground was broken last summer. Although the project was to be funded through private donations, the governor and his wife were criticized for spending money on a luxury during hard economic times.

"I want to let everyone know the first lady is putting back the dirt she uncovered several months ago," Carlin said.

A group that collected donations for the pool will be asked to return the money and nullify pledges for construction funds, he said.

U.S. officials acknowledge possible action in Nicaragua

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. refused Sunday to rule out the possibility of U.S. military action against leftist-ruled Nicaragua.

"That's a decision that the president will make," Baker, R-Tenn., said on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley." "I do not advocate that, but I do not rule that out."

"You simply can't judge on a television program what the future foreign policy or military policy of this country should be," Baker said. "I think it is clear by now, however, that America is not going to roll over and play dead in Central America, and they should not."

Appearing on the same program, Weinberger termed questions about Nicaragua hypothetical. But he said that "if there are factors that require United States action, that will be a situation which we confront when that arises. We certainly aren't going to talk about it in advance."

The two officials made the statements in response to questions about whether the U.S. invasion of Marxist Grenada could signal similar action against Nicaragua because of its military ties with Cuba and the Soviet Union.

A week earlier, Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Dam said there was no plan to invade Nicaragua. Nicaraguan leaders have been quoted in news reports as saying they feared a U.S. attack.

President Reagan, questioned about those reports, said he did not believe everything he read. Asked whether Reagan and Dam weren't ruling out an invasion of Nicaragua, Weinberger replied:

"I'm not going to say anything in connection with a hypothetical question. ...If you analyze President Reagan's response, it isn't inconsistent with leaving the matter open. All he said was that he didn't believe everything he read."

"The question is not open, not closed, not answered," Weinberger said.

Group seeks donations from graduates to-be

By MICHELE SAUER
Staff Writer

Pacesetters is a new fund-raising program which is asking graduating students to contribute a total of $60 during the first three years following their graduation.

The Kansas State Student Foundation is sponsoring the program, which is ostensibly designed to educate students in the process of educational fund raising.

Pacesetters asks students to make a pledge of $60, paid in three $20 annual payments.

These contributions will be placed in a special account to fund Pacesetters Scholarships which would be awarded to students with financial need, who are active in campus student organizations. Wiklander said any student involved in a University Activities Board-registered organization, such as Blue Key, Spurs or Chimes, may be eligible.

Pacesetters scholarship winners are to be chosen by the general scholarship committee of K-State.

"The program will approach students who are going to be graduating, preferably undergraduates, and ask them to pledge $60 over three years," Wiklander said. "We're letting them know what private contributions can do for their institution."

As an example, Wiklander cited the more than $700,000 raised by the KSU Foundation to complete Shellenberger Hall.

The program is being chaired by Sarah Waugh, senior in dietetics and institutional management. Her committee is divided into four sub-committees; publicity, sororities and fraternities, residence halls and departmental units.

For the first phase of the program, committee members will go to residence halls and greek houses and explain the Pacesetters program.

The second phase will be personal follow-up. The committee members will call each senior on the phone and then send a brochure with a pledge card.

According to the brochure being sent to seniors, "The Pacesetters Program is a student-organized, student-run, volunteer fund-raising effort sponsored by the Kansas State Student Foundation. Pacesetters is designed to inform graduating students of the need for private giving and encourage them to make a financial commitment to a scholarship program fully supported by recent graduates."

Those who cannot be reached by phone will be sought through a mass mailing. An attempt will be made to contact all 1985 December graduates through a mass mailing, but graduates next spring can expect personal talks and phone calls.

The 1983-84 Pacesetters campaign anticipates receiving 300 to 400 pledges and will conclude in February 1984.

Wiklander believes educational philanthropy is important.

"After the three years is up, chances are they'll probably want to contribute to programs of their choice. It builds up their pride. It is very important to alumni to have given consecutively for so many years."

It's a way of people pulling together behind a common issue for a common good," Wiklander said. "People like to rally behind something. And the consequences can only be positive and far-reaching."

Wiklander developed the idea for the Pacesetters Program at K-State after hearing about similar programs at other institutions at the National Student Foundation Student/Alumni Conference.

"I got information from the University of Maine in Orono, Bucknell in Pennsylvania, Clemson, Oregon State and Stanford," Wiklander said. "Bucknell has done this for 10 years, and it's been very successful. Even after the pledges run out, continued support is still high."

In a school as big and diverse as K-State, Wiklander thinks the Pacesetters Program will be successful also.

Wiklander said the Pacesetters program was chosen because its overall appeal and that it could be an enduring program with fairly quick turnover.

Churches experiment with new translation

By MICHELE SAUER
Staff Writer

(Editor's note: This is the third of three articles which deal with a new translation of Bible readings.)

The new translation of Bible readings, designed to minimize male terminology, was released Oct. 14 by the National Council of Churches.

The Bible readings are for voluntary, experimental use by some Protestant churches.

The changes include references to God as both the father and mother of humankind, and one of the best-loved verses of the New Testament reads: "For God so loved the world that God gave God's only child, that whoever believes in that Child should not perish, but have eternal life."

The new translation goes further than other popular versions of the Scriptures because it not only changes language about humanity but also advocates female imagery in the metaphors used for God.

"This lectionary tries to speak of God as beyond differentiations of sex, so that when the church hears its Scriptures read, it is not overwhelmed by male metaphors," according to the introduction of the new volume. "The image of God as father has been used to support the excessive authority of earthly fathers in a patriarchal social system."

The new readings, titled "The Inclusive Language Lectionary," were prepared over two years by a committee of 11 biblical scholars and pastors from several denominations, including the Roman Catholic Church, although it is not a member of the National Council of Churches.

The committee re-translated the lectionary, parts of Scripture read in public worship on Sundays and festival days.

Formal lectionaries are used by denominations that stress liturgy, such as Episcopalians, Lutherans and Roman Catholics. The form of the lectionary used is often up to the individual congregation.

The National Council of Churches, an organization of 30 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations, is the largest ecumenical organization in the United States and receives strong support from member denominations. It has published the Revised Standard Version of the Bible, a widely used translation.

The new 192-page lectionary is the first of three volumes that will eventually include about 95 percent of the New Testament and 40 percent of the Old Testament as recorded in the Revised Standard Version.

When Scriptures are read in services, one of the purposes is to create the Christian community, said Susan Thistlethwaite, a professor who teaches theology at seminaries in Chicago and Boston. If the language of the Scriptures is exclusively masculine, women feel left out, she said.

A growing number of ministers say women in their congregations feel excluded when religious language uses masculine words at places where all of humankind is meant. To remedy this, many churches have tried to use more inclusive language in their worship services.

Editors of the lectionary

Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father and Mother hath sent me, even so I send you.

—John 20:21

acknowledge they are taking some risks in altering the familiar language of Scripture and broadening the language about the deity.

"But we think that by providing fresh metaphors, we will help people understand things in a new way," said Sharon Ringe, a United Church of Christ minister who teaches at the Methodist Theological School in Delaware, Ohio.

The most striking of these metaphors is the phrase "God, Father and Mother," which is used often.

Father is a common term for God in the Bible, especially in the New Testament. The fact Jesus called God "Father" is one of the reasons the early Christians concluded Jesus was related to the Creator in an intimate way.

But editors of the new lectionary contend that using "father" as a metaphor for God ascribes to God a sexual identity not supported by close study of the Scriptures.

Focusing on the fact Jesus was a man has created male-dominated churches and is often cited as the reason for barring women from the ordained ministry.

The editors suggest while male imagery predominates in the original languages of the Bible, references to God as mother can be found in such passages as, "Now I will cry out like a woman in travail," and a parable of Jesus using a woman seeking a lost coin as a metaphor for God.

In the new translation, verses about Jesus as a historical person use masculine pronouns, but verses referring to Jesus as the Messiah avoid mention of Jesus as a man.

"With this lectionary, they've taken some very large steps," said Sandra Coyner, director of women's studies. "I find it fascinating most of the arguments against the lectionary are strictly arguments on tradition. Hardly anyone seems to understand the real issue of inclusive language."

In the English language, there are words to express the male and female gender, but the male words also represent the whole, Coyner said.

"In random studies, when children hear male terms, they are not inclusive," Coyner said. "The words are supposed to include women, but really, they leave them out. Using generic language gives a false picture."

Coyner said she would feel comfortable hearing the new lectionary used in a service.

"I think the purpose of readings is to encourage people to think," Coyner said. "I like thinking more than I like ritual. I think this lectionary includes the most advanced inclusive language, but there is a long way to go in many churches for equal participation.

"The change we (women) focused on for 15 years was gaining opportunity to be included places where only men were allowed before," Coyner said. "Inclusive language makes it clear that women are included where they were excluded before. The next thing to concentrate on is the family and how men can be included where they were excluded before. The next shift is to revalue the women's world and make being female part of the human experience."

There are more women in the labor force, but less than 2 percent of the men do 50 percent of the housework, Coyner said.

"Inclusive language eliminates terms that deliberately leave out people, changing a previous injustice," Coyner said. "It gives us a better conception of what it means to be human and what it means to be God and the relationship between. Inclusive language gives a more faithful translation. It's a simple change whose time has come."

Mike Klaasen, pastor at the Manhattan Mennonite Fellowship, 1021 Dension Ave., preaches using inclusive language.

"It seems to me that the language you use in the Church community leaves an impact on people," Klaasen said. "Ask any child to draw a picture of God and the picture is usually of a male. The language leaves an impact at a young age."

"I usually say, 'In the name of God, our parent, Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit,'" Klaasen said.

Occasionally there are places in the Mennonite service which refer to God in the feminine gender and this facilitates the worship of God, Klaasen said. No one in his fellowship has reacted to the minimizing of male terminology.

"In terms of spirituality, my reasoning is that the Bible is heavily patriarchal," Klaasen said. "There are problems with making non-sexist translations, especially in the Old Testament."

Klaasen said involvement with a number of women who were struggling with the sexist overtones in the Bible raised his consciousness and inspired him to try to eliminate sexist language in his own preaching.

"In spite of all the patriarchy, there are things more universal," Klaasen said. "Our idea of God, right from Genesis, is a conception as a spirit, not male or female, just a spirit."

Among those who have already said they do not approve of the new translation is Bruce Metzger, a Princeton Theological Seminary professor who is chairman of the committee planning future editions of the Revised Standard Version.

"It is necessary to tell people that God is not an old man, but to explain that God transcends differences of gender is the work of the religious educator, not the Bible translator," Metzger said.

Metzger said coming editions of the Revised Standard Version would avoid using "man" when "humanity" or "humankind" might be appropriate. "But to remove the patriarchal setting is to change the Bible."

Soviets' mind studies attract U.S. scrutiny

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union has achieved "significant progress" toward developing mind-control weapons, says a U.S. Army study disclosed in a new book on military uses of psychic phenomena.

Author Martin Ebon contends that mind-altering effects or "remote monitoring of brain wave activity" are among possible reasons behind the Soviet microwave bombardment of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

"Soviet scientists view the brain as an apparatus available for probing and manipulation," Ebon says. "They are well aware that perfected techniques in ESP and other phenomena would make effective wartime strategies."

Publication of Ebon's book "Psychic Warfare: Threat or Illusion?" comes amid increased interest in parapsychology research on Capitol Hill as well as within the Pentagon and U.S. intelligence agencies.

A report prepared recently by the Congressional Research Service, an arm of the Library of Congress, concluded that "psi phenomena" could be applied in education, medicine, geological exploration and business management.

Mind-control techniques also may prove useful for "military intelligence and police work" along with "crime, persuasion, mischief and disinformation," it said.

Psi phenomena include various forms of extrasensory perception, for example telepathy and "remote viewing" of distant locations. Another form is "psychokinesis," the ability to move or bend solid objects with the mind.

Critics of parapsychology, however, charge that much of the research is either scientifically unsound or fraudulent. Other skeptics argue that even if the phenomena exist, they are too weak and unpredictable to have military value.

Congressional supporters of psi research include Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He said he had discussed the parapsychology field with Soviet researchers during a visit to the Soviet Union in August.

"I personally have never experienced or seen a psychic event," Pell said recently. "But it seems to me there have been adequate scientific articles written that would indicate that they do occur."

To counter that potential threat, it said, the United States should develop special defensive tactics and begin to explore the use of its own mind-control weapons.

Speculation over possible purposes behind the Soviet microwave bombardment of the Moscow embassy — believed to have begun as early as 1953 — has centered largely on use of the beams for eavesdropping or to try to jam U.S. electronic intelligence-gathering equipment.

500TH LUTHER ANNIVERSARY

"Christianity's Mission in the 80's"

Lecturer: Dr. Joseph Sittler, Lutheran School of Theology, Chicago

FORUM HALL, UNION TONIGHT, 7:30 P.M.

GUEST SPEAKER

Joseph Sittler is the theologian who, according to Martin E. Marty, "anticipated today's concern for nature, earth, created order, and ecology." These concerns are reflected in many of his books: The Structure of Christian Ethics (1958), The Ecology of Faith (1961), The Care of the Earth (1964), and Essays on Nature and Grace (1972).

Joseph Sittler is a graduate of Wittenberg University (1927) and Hamma Divinity School (1930). Many schools and universities—including Lutheran, Roman Catholic, and Unitarian institutions—have awarded him honorary doctorates.

From 1957 until 1973 he was professor of theology at the divinity school of the University of Chicago. Currently he is Distinguished Professor in residence on the Lutheran School of Theology, Chicago.

Professor Sittler served as president of the American Theological Society in 1951 and has been a member of the Academic Council of the Ecumenical Institute for Advanced Theological Study (Jerusalem, 1964-73) and a member of the Commission on Faith and Order of the World Council of Churches (1958-66). He has been a delegate to several Lutheran World Federation and World Council of Churches conferences, and his sermon at a WCC meeting in New Delhi in 1961 is considered one of the theological landmarks of contemporary Christianity. He was chairman of the National Committee to Repeal the McCarran Act (1966-72), which act was ruled unconstitutional in 1974.

One of America's best-known preachers, Sittler has preached in the chapels of a host of colleges and universities in the United States. He has also preached in Italy, France, Germany, England, and the Soviet Union. His lectureships have included the Lyman Beecher (Yale, 1959), the William Belden Noble (Harvard, 1959), the Gray (Duke, 1963), and the Earl (Pacific School of Religion, 1968). He also travels widely for speaking engagements.

Dr. Sittler and his wife, musician-composer Jeanne, are the parents of six children and reside in Chicago.

Sponsored by Lutheran Campus Ministries with a grant from AAL.

Aftershock jolts central Idaho

By The Associated Press

CHALLIS, Idaho — Central Idaho was jolted Sunday by a moderate aftershock centered in the same area where a major earthquake last month killed two school children and caused millions of dollars in damages.

There were no immediate reports of injuries or damages, said dispatcher Sylvia Markley of the Custer County sheriff's office here.

The aftershock, which measured 4.5 on the Richter scale, occurred at 2:04 p.m. MST, said Dr. Robert Smith of the University of Utah Seismology Center. Its epicenter was the same as that of the major Oct. 28 quake, he said.

The area has been hit by waves of aftershocks since the major one, which measured 6.9. Aftershocks of 5.5 and 5.1 magnitude had been measured, Smith said. None as large as Sunday's had been recorded since Oct. 30, he said.

Israel buries dead, vows massive retaliation

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israel on Sunday began burying its dead from the terrorist bombing in southern Lebanon and vowed to "strike back sevenfold" in retribution for any more attacks.

Israel accused the Syrians of helping engineer the blast that killed 28 Israelis and 32 Lebanese and Palestinians Friday at an Israeli military headquarters in the southern Lebanese city of Tyre. Families held funerals for 20 Israeli victims on Sunday.

Despite the stringent security measures Israel adopted after the Tyre explosion, an Israeli army position on the Zaharani River came under fire Sunday and one soldier was wounded. In the evening, a bazooka rocket was fired at the Israeli military headquarters in Sidon but didn't inflict any casualties.

The Tyre bombing caused the worst loss of life in hostile action since Israel's invasion of Lebanon in June 1982 to destroy Palestine Liberation Organization guerrilla bases.

There has been speculation that the Cabinet would order Israeli occupation forces to seal off southern Lebanon as part of a security crackdown following the bombing. But the Cabinet took no action at its regular Sunday meeting.

After the meeting, a senior official who spoke on condition he not be identified denied reports that Israeli warplanes bombed Syrian positions in the retaliatory air strikes against Palestinian positions after the bomb attack.

Beirut radio had reported Friday that the Israelis hit Syrian as well as the Palestinian positions in Lebanon.

But the official said: "It's inconceivable that the Syrians didn't know (about the bombing). We suspect some sort of coordination at some level."

At one of the funerals, Interior Minister Yosef Burg vowed Israel would "strike back sevenfold" for every attack like the Tyre bombing.

Israel radio said Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, visiting bomb victims at Haifa's Rambam Hospital in northern Israel, said his government would do all possible to eradicate what he called terrorism in Lebanon.

Though the nation grieved, some felt gratified because of PLO chief Yasser Arafat's predicament in northern Lebanon. Syrian-backed mutineers in his guerrilla organization have been besieging Arafat and his backers in fierce fighting in and around Tripoli.

Israel radio quoted Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, visiting 29 bomb victims at Haifa's Rambam Hospital in northern Israel, as saying, "Israel will do all that is possible and necessary to wipe out terrorism and safeguard its soldiers so that in the not too distant future we can pull Israeli troops out of Lebanon."

Shamir went later to the northern border town of Kiryat Shmona, and in a speech to the residents said Lebanon should not renege on its agreement with Israel for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon. Syria is opposed to the pact and has refused to remove its forces.

"If you give in to the enemies of peace you can expect a miserable life of murder and slavery," Shamir said. "Abrogation of the agreement is abrogation of Lebanon's freedom."

Extension agents to convene today

By The Collegian Staff

State, county and local extension agents will attend the annual extension conference today through Nov. 11 in the Union. The conference is sponsored by the Division of Cooperative Extension.

The conference will open with a general assembly 4 p.m. today in the Forum Hall. Michael Q. Patton from the University of Minnesota will be the opening speaker. His speech is titled "Evaluation in Extension Made Fun and Practical."

The agents will attend training workshops about various topics in extension management, including a session on computers for extension service.

The Kansas extension agents and the Epsilon Sigma Phi professional extension fraternity will meet and conduct business meetings Tuesday in the Union.

Military arms spending waste

American corporations are stealing from the United States military and from American taxpayers. The thefts doubtless result from a combination of corruption and sloppy management, and it is nearly impossible to gauge which factor is responsible for what degree of the waste. The latest investigation concerning arms costs, conducted by the staff of Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., has uncovered another series of outrageous prices charged by corporations for military parts.

Many of the high prices are tacked on to what is termed "support equipment" for the F-16 fighter jet. The cost of each jet amounts to $16 million.

One piece of "support equipment" is an "antenna hexagon wrench," and is priced at $9,609. Fighting through the military jargon, we discover the tool is a basic "Allen wrench" and, according to investigators, can be bought at stores for 12 cents.

Another outrageous rip-off is a tool called the "antenna motor assembly alignment pin" for a radar set. The pin is priced at $7,417. It is a piece of ordinary steel wire one-sixteenth of an inch thick and three inches long. Investigators attempted to buy one at a hardware store but the clerk said it would not be worth the trouble to write up the ticket and gave them two, free of charge.

Examples proliferate of massive waste in military spending. The military, and ultimately the Reagan administration, must take the blame for the lack of control over their spending and the lack of concern about waste and corruption.

In the past, governmental departments have had a tendency to ignore spending waste, especially in the military. We cannot imagine anything other than a hefty payoff which would entice a government official to authorize such ridiculous expenses as those mentioned above.

Of course, we do recognize the effect of the unwritten rule that if an agency does not at least try to overspend its budget, it is in danger of having its funding, and in turn, its influence, reduced.

The parties equally at fault in the matter, however, are the corporations doing business with the military. Not all of these corporations are charging these ridiculous prices. But the ones that are, including General Dynamics Corp., the builder of the F-16, and Litton Industries, manufacturer of office supplies for the military, need to be punished quickly and severely. But who will punish them? Their good buddies who authorized the purchases in the first place?

Anyone who believes the waste is a matter of a mere oversight, and refuses to acknowledge the clear implications of corruption and payoffs is not paying enough attention to their surroundings. It is time to hold our elected officials accountable for the waste and corruption which is rife within the government they are charged with administering.

Another possible excuse for such financial mismanagement is that the government's budget is too large to accurately monitor. Although we admit certain merits to this statement, we refuse to accept it as a must-be situation. If the government is bloated, and if its budgeting procedures are antiquated, why not battle to improve them?

We are foolish to accept continually rising taxes and budgets while our leaders prove themselves incapable of responsible public financial dealings. Even Percy's staff's relatively small example of government waste should remain in the forefront of our minds as we move within a year of national elections.

Ticket, anyone?

I never thought this would happen. Who would've thought there would be basketball tickets left over from the group-reserved pool? I figured the tickets would sell like hotcakes. Jack Hartman, I believe, has another good team put together. It seemed to me that there was more interest in tickets this year than there was last year. At least, that's what I thought.

I'm not going to berate the "fair-weather fans" who haven't bought tickets. No one is forced to shell out $42.25. It's an optional, almost extra-curricular, activity, as are intramurals and attending plays and concerts. Besides, Ahearn Field House seats only approximately 11,000 folks, so why even bring up a stand about charging everyone for a ticket when Ahearn can't seat the entire student body (and don't forget the alumni, faculty and staff and others who attend the games)?

I can remember the advice some alumni from my hometown gave me when they heard I was coming to K-State: "Whatever you do, buy a basketball ticket. It'll be worth every cent." They were right. Both the men's and women's teams are worth seeing.

I've bought basketball tickets all three years I've been here. I've also attended plays and concerts. All are worthwhile sources of entertainment and should be included in a student's itinerary while here.

I've talked to some people and listened to the reasons why they didn't get in the lottery to buy group-reserved tickets. These reasons include:

- Dissatisfaction with the team;
- Ticket price;
- Not knowing enough about the team;
- The uncomfortable bleachers in Ahearn;
- Waiting to buy individual non-reserved tickets ("where the action is," one student said) or individual-reserved tickets;
- Lack of interest in basketball.

While I know this list is incomplete, I believe these reasons are worth exploring. After all, any time demand for tickets drops from 9,000 (with 4,000 available seats) to 2,000 (for 4,175 — remember, one-sixth of the non-reserved section was added to the group-reserved in order to take care of "excessive demand"), there has to be something to these reasons.

Dissatisfaction with the team. I guess there may be some reason to wonder about the team. No real "big man" to dominate the lane, few (if any) freshmen, an apparent lack of publicity, last year's losing season — all could add up to a general skepticism of spending $42.25 to watch the 'Cats lose. I disagree. I think the 'Cats are going to pull a few surprises on some national powers this year.

BRIAN LA RUE

But, what do I know? I picked the 'Cats to beat Nebraska in football, remember?

Ticket price. I looked at this before I decided to buy a ticket, because $42.25 is a lot to spend on anything (for me, at least). The ads in last week's Collegian listed the 'Cats' schedule and noted the two home games not included on the student ticket. There are 14 home games on the student ticket; at $42.25 per ticket, that averages out to $3.17 per game. That's close to the price of a movie (or 2.11 UPC movies). In addition to the game, there are the cheerleaders, the band, Willie the Wildcat... what more can I say?

Not knowing enough about the team. Probably a good point. I don't remember a lot of publicity about this year's squad being printed. But Hartman likes to keep his players thinking as a team, not as individual stars. Almost everyone is picking the 'Cats to finish in the Big Eight's cellar. Not this kid. Look for some surprises and spirited play.

The uncomfortable bleachers in Ahearn. Yes, the bleachers are a bit uncomfortable. But who wants to sit anyway? K-State basketball should be viewed while standing — preferably while yelling. There's nothing like a boisterous Ahearn crowd. Bobby Knight, basketball coach at the University of Indiana, once called the crowd at Ahearn "the best" in the country. Part of Ahearn's charm is its poor acoustics — great for basketball, poor for concerts. It's easy to stand up and yell when the darn bleacher is uncomfortable.

Waiting to buy individual non-reserved or individual-reserved tickets. This may be a possible reason for the apparent lack of interest in group-reserved tickets. Why bother to go for group reserve and sit up in the rafters, when you can camp out and get a front-row seat? Or, as was the case last year, why bother to camp out when you can walk up to the Central Ticket Office Monday morning and pick up a ticket? Sounds good to me.

In fact, an alumnus told me all student seats in Ahearn used to be non-reserved. Tickets were on sale for a couple of weeks. No rush, no hassle. When it came to be game time, the students who queued up first got the best seats.

Three years ago, I was part of a group which camped out for five days in order to get non-reserved tickets. After getting the tickets, there were then those who camped out for some games in order to sit on the front row (a.k.a. "Front-Row Fanatics"). I didn't camp out for games and still sat within eight rows from the court for most games.

Lack of interest in basketball. If this is the case, then I don't think even a winning team will help. If you're not interested in basketball, you probably won't buy a ticket and go to the games.

I find it ironic that the ticket office asked Jerry Katlin, student body president, to ask Student Senate for input in whittling the student non-reserved section down by one-third (350 seats), and giving one-half of these (175 seats) to group-reserved and one-half to individual-reserved sections. Those extra 175 just added to the glut of tickets left over.

Maybe the concern over the group sales is being blown out of proportion. It could be that students are tired of collecting 50 fee cards and dividing them into 5 groups, just to get 10 tickets. Maybe a change is needed.

I agree. Leave the non-reserved section alone. Put its number back to 1,050 and at its former location. Examine the lottery process. If it isn't working, then maybe the best thing to do is junk it and go back to individual ticket sales.

Maybe this means K-State won't need a coliseum if the fans aren't interested in the 'Cats anymore. However, I won't jump the gun. I'll save my recommendations until the final results are in.

All afternoons are the same

What with the imminent passing of that which has been known as the "downtown" here in Manhattan because of the planned building of a mall, it seems appropriate to me to mark the possible shuffling off this mortal coil of Mel's Tavern on Third Street (at least in its present form), as well as other places like that.

You see, all afternoons are the same in Mel's Tavern, Jack's Place, Bill's Joint or Bob's Shack. These places are found in all the towns of this country. In these places there are always a few stools at an old bar, the wood splintered on both. Several worn tables are in the place, rickety chairs grouped around them. Two or three pool tables are in a back room or along a side wall.

At four o'clock in the afternoon the old men play cards.

Sometimes the places are named in honor of a couple. Fritz and Mary's Bar & Grille. Dick and Alice's Eats & Drinks. Joe and Joanne's Cafe & Pool Hall. Often one of the two named in the marquee is dead or long gone elsewhere. The woman's name never appears first in these places! (Draw your own conclusion about that fact.) Nevertheless, they are the same as any other joint on the edge of town. The same bar, the same stools, the same worn wooden tables with worn chairs placed around them. In some corner is a jukebox. Usually a dozen or so regular customers are in attendance. Only on Friday and Saturday nights is the place filled with truck-drivers, factory girls and high school boys believing they are now grown up.

JOEL CLIMENHAGA
Collegian Columnist

At four o'clock in the afternoon the old men play cards.

Sometimes the places are named in memory of a different time than now. Commercial House. Merchant's Hotel. Traveler's Inn. Wanderer's Rest. The Last Stop. But the old days are gone. Ulysses without a journey any longer. Only regular customers come in the afternoon. They drink some beer, shoot some pool. And the old men play cards at four o'clock.

These places are in every town in this country. They are not on the main street. They are often on an alley, sometimes in a basement.

Sometimes the places are named in recognition of their address. Third Street Pub; North Sepulveda Boulevard Bar; East Shuler Place Tavern; Hanover Court Inn; 10th Avenue Stop; the old familiar faces are always present. The memories mix with the tobacco smoke. The din of half-drunken laughter is intense. Orpheus with no song. And at four o'clock the old men play cards.

I have turned from a kid in my teens to a man now beginning his 60s in these places. My eyes are just as wide with wonder now as they were when I was young. The sights and sounds and smells of these places are still filled with the sense of communion. In these places there is never any war, and seldom any conflict which lasts past the headache of next morning.

The more they have changed the more they have stayed the same, as the saying goes.

The old woman crying in her beer. Penelope with the faraway husband not yet come back home.

The faces of the card-players becoming dim in the deepening twilight. Homer still treading sightlessly through the years.

These places are everywhere. And each place is separate from any other. And yet they are all the same.

I remember them in every state in which I have lived. Oklahoma, California, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Maryland, Ohio, North Carolina, Missouri and Kansas.

At four o'clock the old men play cards.

One by one these places remain only in memory. And it is always a sadness to see them go.

For all afternoons are the same in Bob's Shack, Bill's Joint, Jack's Place and Mel's Tavern.

Morality part of surrogate question

Editor,
Darcy Ward, in the Nov. 2 column, "The surrogate mother issue," seems to have missed a crucial point, that of morality. Many Kansans would surely support a total ban on surrogate mothers for moral reasons alone. What the legislature may be doing is "sticking its nose" into public morality, a place where enactment of law certainly has precedent.

A surrogate mother is indeed a "very special person," one who may in many people's opinion be a mercenary slut. If moral issues should be left only to the people involved, as suggested by Darcy on this issue, what then in other moral issues is the role of government?

The lack of governmental control on abortion, genetic engineering, and other life-related matters may well be the most blatant oversight of our lifetimes. While government may not be able to legislate morality, it can legislate against amoral, life-demeaning practices.

Archivists preserve records of former K-State presidents

By CAROL BELL
Collegian Reporter

From their musty hiding place in the attic of Anderson Hall, records and documents of past K-State presidents have been uncovered from their decades of slumber and are being read, reorganized and preserved for the future.

As part of her work toward a master's degree, Susan Casement, a former instructor at Farrell Library, began sorting through and preserving the documents this past summer.

The records and correspondence from presidents Fairchild, Will, Nichols, Waters, Jardine and (Milton) Eisenhower between the years 1887 and 1945 have been found.

"Other materials accompanied the presidential files in the attic: extra copies of University publications; scattered years of budgets, vouchers and payrolls; portions of files on the Regents, Dean of Women's Office and Veterans of Foreign Wars; student records for 1929 and early 1930s; loyalty affidavits of 1950; a few blueprints; Farrell's scrapbook covering his first presidential years and a box of Jardine's pre-presidency papers," Casement said in a paper she wrote about the project.

"The work is actually done in two parts — arrangement and description," said Anthony Crawford, assistant professor at Farrell Library and K-State archivist. "What Susan was doing was part of the arrangement, while trying to preserve the physical condition."

Casement sorted through the boxes of records and eliminated duplicate letters, made photocopies of some information onto less acidic paper to preserve them longer, and stored them in special archival boxes, Crawford said.

"The development of the duties of the presidency between 1897 and 1928 is apparent not only in the growth of the files, but also in the nature of their contents," Casement wrote.

While most of Fairchild's correspondence concerned admission requirements, transfer of grades and parental concerns of student progress, Farrell tried to keep up on the ever-changing campus and became active beyond the state's borders, she wrote.

"It is very natural for roles to change over time," Crawford said. "This is documented in the files. The day-to-day duties of the president expanded as the office grew and branched out. As an example, the current Department of Administration and Foundations was once simply the Board of Administration."

"In all, there were 96 boxes and 56 bundles (of documents) in the attic — approximately 156 linear feet," Casement wrote.

"Fairchild and Farrell correspondence fill 37 archival boxes (about 15.4 linear feet)," Casement wrote. "Ten Fairchild years together contribute 11 boxes, while two (other) years each fill 13 archival boxes."

"After reading Willard's history of the University and studying archival methods, I worked about 150 hours organizing materials," she wrote. "Special collections (the library department) provided about 85 hours from a student assistant who typed labels, pasted them on folders, photocopied and helped me arrange the files."

"The slowness of the progress surprised me," she wrote.

"On the average, six hours of work produced one archival box. From a total of 156 linear feet, 15.4 (about 10 percent) were processed. By simple multiplication, 2,100 hours of work remains."

There is a lot of work left to be done, Crawford said. He is applying for a grant to try to gain funding so additional staff can be hired to work on the project and hasten its completion.

The archives are missing the incoming files of the Fairchild administration for the years 1879-1887 and the incoming files for Will and Nichols through 1906. A campus search is underway to see if the materials can be located.

Holtz Hall plans for open house

By The Collegian Staff

An open house is scheduled today for the newly renovated Career Planning and Placement Center in Holtz Hall from 1 to 5 this afternoon. Preceding the open house will be a luncheon for donors at the Union.

The renovation began on Nov. 8, 1982, and most of the work was completed by March 1, 1983. The central portion of the building was gutted and several offices and 22 private interview spaces were created.

The reception and library areas have been remodeled, and air conditioning for the central part of the building was installed. Interior decoration of the structure conforms to the designs common to the era of the original construction of the building.

Holtz Hall, named after the late A. A. Holtz, is one of the oldest buildings on campus. It was erected in 1876 as a chemical laboratory at a cost of $8,000.

Gutted by fire in 1901, the building was then remodeled as a women's gymnasium. It served as a gym until completion of Nichols Gym in 1911.

Holtz Hall was used as a chemical laboratory again until 1939, when it was remodeled as a math building. The building housed the Center for Student Development before becoming the Career Planning and Placement Center in 1981.

The renovation was financed with $125,000 in private funds raised through the K-State Foundation and was coordinated by Mary Wiklander. F. Lynn Markel, vice president and controller of Koch Industries Inc., was the national campaign chairman.

Group shields Salvadoran children

EUGENE, Ore. — A religious group has pledged to defy immigration officials and provide sanctuary to a 12-year-old Salvadoran refugee and his two sisters.

The children, their faces covered with masks, met reporters and were welcomed Saturday by a coalition of Quakers and members of other religious groups. The coalition vowed to defy U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service policy that requires deportation of Central American refugees seeking asylum.

The boy and girls, aged 9 and 10, said they came to the United States with their family, which uses the pseudonym "Martinez" and includes their parents, a 21-year-old nephew and a Guatemalan friend.

Singing parrot rides motorcycle

SAN DIMAS, Calif. — Heads turn when Tom Taylor rides his motorcycle through town. One of its handlebars usually is festooned with Gabby, a parrot whose repertoire includes a squawky rendition of "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

"He's completely comfortable and inspired by the sound" of the motorcycle, Taylor says of his double yellow-head Amazon parrot. "The louder the sound, the more likely he is to talk or sing."

"To him, it's just like flying. The faster I go, the more he dips his head down and streamlines into the wind, just like he was flying." Taylor acquired Gabby 1½ years ago, but didn't know how vocal the bird was until the two were watching a Los Angeles Dodgers baseball game on TV.

Gabby tried imitating the "Charge!" played frequently by the stadium organist, but couldn't get it right until Taylor hummed it himself.

When Taylor showers, Gabby rests on a bathroom perch. "The water splashing in the shower gets him singing. He goes through his entire repertoire" of about 200 words and phrases, plus songs and animal imitations.

Boy carries baby sister to safety

RICHMOND, Va. — A 7-year-old boy who said, "I love my baby sister" carried the 17-month-old girl to safety when his home began filling with smoke.

"I didn't want her to get hurt or choked," said Jay Wilson, a 60-pounder who stands 4½ feet tall.

The incident occurred Wednesday night at the suburban Richmond home of Anthony B. Harry and his wife, Martha Winston. Jay's stepfather and mother. Smoke began to fill the home when the fireplace damper accidentally closed, Martha Winston said.

"I was so panicky," she said. "I started to choke and cough and I was trying to open the windows. That's when I realized my son was outside with his little sister, Meredith."

Firefighters opened the damper when they arrived on the scene, and the house wasn't damaged. Harry was at school training to be a firefighter at the time.

Miners find 95-carat diamond

MOSCOW — Miners in the Yakutia Republic of eastern Siberia have found a 95-carat diamond of "rare beauty" and named it "The 80th Anniversary of the Second Session of the RSDRP," the official news agency Tass said Sunday.

The name of the stone, said to weigh six-tenths of an ounce, refers to the second meeting of the Russian Social Democratic Workers Party in 1903, at which Russian revolutionary Vladimir I. Lenin formed his Bolshevik movement.

Homecoming
Kickoff 1983

"Trackin' Back for the Purple Pack"

Students Select
K-State Ambassadors

We're "Trackin' Back for the Purple Pack" for Homecoming 1983. Blue Key has planned an exciting week of activities and fun for all K-Staters in preparation for the Homecoming game against Iowa State this Saturday, November 12. Kicking off the celebration is Union Day this Wednesday with activities scheduled all day in the K-State Union Courtyard. Included are the Body Building and Yell Like Hell contests, musical entertainment, and balloon give-aways. Manhattan Merchant Discounts will be available all week with the purchase of a Homecoming Button. Thursday night at 10 p.m., the annual Homecoming Bonfire will be held in the parking lot north of Umberger Hall. Special features include the football team and Coach Dickey, cheerleaders, band, and a Pant the Chant contest. "Everyday is K-State Day" and this year's special K-State Day will be in the Union on Friday. Come get a purple paw painted on your cheek while you enjoy the musical entertainment, Pack races and Kool-Aid chugging contest. Friday night at 8 p.m., the Stray Cats will take the stage at Ahearn Fieldhouse for a special Homecoming concert. Saturday's the big day starting with the parade downtown and through Aggieville. K-State Ambassadors and Homecoming winners will be announced during the grand finale—the Wildcats against the Cyclones of Iowa State. So join the students, alumni and friends who will be "Trackin' Back" this week for the K-State Homecoming celebration.

An important part of K-State's Homecoming activities is the selection of the K-State Ambassadors. The Ambassador program, now in its 7th year, combines student representation to the K-State community with the traditional Homecoming royalty. The K-State Ambassadors represent KSU throughout the state at various alumni and University functions. This year's ambassadors were Julie Martin and Jeff Dillon.

The path to becoming an Ambassador involves interviews with students, faculty, staff, and alumni. Finalists are selected on the basis of their enthusiasm, knowledge of the University, communication abilities, personal appearance, and campus and scholastic achievements. Finally, two students are selected K-State Ambassadors in an all-student election to be held this Wednesday and Thursday in the Union.

Blue Key rewards the Ambassadors for their service to Kansas State by scholarships presented at the annual spring banquet. We urge you to be a part of the K-State Ambassador program by voting Wednesday and Thursday. Remember your fee card.

Premier national touring company to present Shakespearean comedy

By TOM DOWNING
Staff Writer

At 1 p.m. today the bus will pull up to the loading dock behind McCain Auditorium and the 12 actors who make up the National Shakespeare Company will begin to unload.

All the actors share the responsibilities of setting up for their performances. They will put up the set, rig the lighting instruments, and do everything else required to put on a play, including the acting.

Tonight they will present Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," a comic look at the best and the worst sides of love.

The National Shakespeare Company is the nation's premier touring company — the oldest and most respected.

Each year more than 2,500 actors audition in major cities across the United States for the chance to work with the company. They performed in 125 cities in 35 states last year.

Besides playing for large metropolitan areas the National Shakespeare Company brings Shakespeare to small communities that might not otherwise have access to a professional theater company.

In its headquarters in New York City, the National Shakespeare Company operates a developmental theater located in its five-story brownstone on West 51st Street. The Cubiculo Theatre produces dance, theater and music programs throughout the year.

The company operates a fully accredited conservatory in New York City which offers a two-year program. This professional training program is designed to prepare the actor's body, imagination and intellect.

An eight-week intensive summer program at the company's property in the Catskill Mountains also helps prepare actors for a professional career in theater.

The company was founded in 1963 and has performed in all 48 contiguous states and parts of Canada. Actors have the opportunity to play roles in repertory and to develop their classical acting skills.

Tickets for the 8 p.m. performance are available at the McCain box office.

'Wild' catch guides 'Cats' 21-20 victory

By The Associated Press

STILLWATER, Okla. — Greg Dageforde's 3-yard touchdown run and Steve Willis' extra point with 11 seconds to play capped a dramatic fourth-quarter comeback Saturday that lifted K-State to a 21-20 college football victory over Oklahoma State University.

The Wildcats, winning for the first time in their last five games, improved to 3-6 overall and 1-4 in the Big Eight Conference. Oklahoma State, whose only previous losses were to Nebraska and Oklahoma, fell to 6-3 and 2-3.

K-State quarterback Stan Weber, whose running and passing gave the Wildcats three unanswered touchdowns in the fourth quarter against Nebraska a week ago, guided the team 77 yards in the final two minutes to set up Dageforde's touchdown blast.

Weber connected with Darrel Wild on several passes in that final drive, including Wild's diving catch of a 24-yard toss that gave the Wildcats a first down at the Cowboys' 3-yard line with 15 seconds left.

On the next play, Dageforde rumbled to his right and cut upfield, diving into the end zone for the tying score, and Willis hit a line drive extra point to win.

Oklahoma State, which had taken the lead in the second quarter and did not trail again until Dageforde's touchdown, had a final chance to win, but Larry Roach's 58-yard field goal attempt fell short as time expired.

It was the second 21-20 loss for the Cowboys this year. The team surrendered 18 points in the fourth quarter against Oklahoma and lost that game on a field goal in the final minute.

Weber hit 12 of 27 passes for 172 yards, but four interceptions by Oklahoma State defenders thwarted drives that might have put the Wildcats ahead sooner.

Rusty Hilger completed 13 of 21 passes for 209 yards for Oklahoma State and his pinpoint accuracy in the first half boosted the Cowboys to a 14-7 lead at intermission. But Oklahoma State was limited to 75 yards rushing, and could manage only two second half field goals by Roach.

The Wildcats had an opportunity to move ahead early in the game when two defenders knocked the ball out of Hilger's hand as he backedpeddled for a pass. K-State took over on the Cowboys' 29-yard line with 10 minutes left in the first quarter.

But the Wildcats' drive stalled at the 20, where runs by Dageforde on third and fourth down failed to net the 1 yard needed for a first. The Cowboys took over and later punted out of trouble.

K-State finally got on the board with 27 seconds left in the first quarter when flanker James Witherspoon took a reverse handoff from Weber and dashed 5 yards for a touchdown. The play capped a 74-yard drive highlighted by a 16-yard gain on a scramble by Weber and a 23-yard pass from Weber to Wild that produced a first down at Oklahoma State's 18-yard line.

The lead was short-lived. Hilger, who hit six of eight passes for 122 yards in the first half, completed tosses of 32 and 13 yards to tight end John Chesley, setting up a 20 yard dash up the middle by Arthur Price that tied the game 7-7 with 12:47 left in the half.

The Cowboys took the lead on their next possession, driving 83 yards in 11 plays for a touchdown.

Weber brought the Wildcats back for two late drives, but interceptions killed both rallies.

Weber gave up another costly interception in the third quarter when Oklahoma State's Chris Rockins snagged a pass and returned it 41 yards to the K-State 23. That set up a 33-yard field goal by Roach to make the score 17-7.

The Wildcats pulled to within 17-14 midway through the third quarter when Weber climaxed an 87-yard drive with a 3-yard touchdown pass to tight end Eric Bailey.

Barbaro signs with New Jersey Generals

By The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Gary Barbaro, star safety of the Kansas City Chiefs, has signed a three-year contract with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League, USFL sources said Sunday.

NBC and CBS both reported that Barbaro, an eight-year National Football League veteran, had signed with the Generals, who were recently purchased by Donald Trump, a

New York construction magnate. Trump paraded his new signee on the networks Sunday and USFL sources confirmed the signing.

"I don't think Kansas City thought Gary Barbaro would get an offer from the USFL that would be substantial," Barbaro said in an interview with CBS.

NBC quoted Barbaro as saying: "The situation is certainly better than the one I've gotten out of. It's a new lease on life."

ANNOUNCING: The contest of the year. The biggest. The tallest. The most mountainous Busch mountain on campus wins.

L.A. Raiders topple Chiefs 28-20

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jim Plunkett came off the bench for an injured and ineffective Marc Wilson Sunday and threw a pair of fourth quarter touchdown passes to rally the Los Angeles Raiders to a 28-20 victory over the Kansas City Chiefs.

Linebacker Rod Martin returned an interception 40 yards for a touchdown with 3 seconds left in the game for the Raiders' final touchdown.

Plunkett, the 13-year veteran who was benched in favor of the younger Wilson three weeks earlier, connected with Dokie Williams on a 19-yard scoring strike with 3:48 left, capping a 75-yard drive.

The Chiefs' Bill Kenney found Anthony Hancock for a 50-yard gain a moment later, but the normally reliable Nick Lowery, who had kicked two field goals earlier, missed from 43 yards out with 1:51 remaining.

Moments before Plunkett's strike to Williams, Kenney had capped a 74-play drive with a 2-yard touchdown pass to Ken Thomas to put the Chiefs on top 20-14.

Plunkett entered the game in the third period after Wilson hurt his shoulder and guided the Raiders on an 85-yard scoring march capped by Marcus Allen's 1-yard touchdown dive that gave the Raiders a 14-13 lead with 12:18 left in the see-saw battle between the two old American Football League rivals.

The Raiders, 7-3, took a 7-6 halftime lead on Wilson's 15-yard scoring pass to Frank Hawkins.

Upsets top games in Big Eight

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Maybe the pollsters were right about Oklahoma State.

Maybe they were dead wrong about Oklahoma.

Last week, with six victories and hair-breadth losses only to Nebraska and Oklahoma, the Cowboys became openly resentful of their year-long absence from the Top Twenty. But howls of indignation, thanks to a kid named Stan Weber, have turned to moans of despair.

Weber, a former defensive back, made his first start ever at quarterback last week and led K-State to three unanswered touchdowns against Nebraska.

He did even better in Stillwater, Okla., Saturday against Oklahoma State's tough, savvy defense. Weber hit Darrel Wild, a non-scholarship senior, with five straight passes to drive more than 70 yards and pull out a 21-20 victory with 11 seconds remaining.

Behind Weber, the Wildcats in the past six quarters have played as well as any K-State team since Jim Dickey became head coach in 1978.

"I've never been prouder of a team," Dickey said. "We've been real low this season, but today we had some guys go out and play extra special."

Smiles were hard to find in the state of Oklahoma Saturday night. The Sooners, who were ranked in just about everybody's top five in August, were ranked No. 11 Saturday when they came into Missouri and got their ears boxed for the third time this season.

Every Missouri defender should be up for an award. They held the Sooners, who were averaging almost 290 yards rushing, to minus-seven yards on the ground in the first half. A field goal and Marlon Adler's scrambling 20-yard touchdown strike to Andy Hill constructed a 10-0 halftime lead.

Another team apparently on the way up is Colorado. The Buffs were the underdogs at Kansas, but they ripped the Jayhawks 34-23 to break a five-game conference losing streak.

"They just beat us," said Kansas Coach Mike Gottfried. "We've got to find a ray of happiness somehow and get it done."

Nebraska and Iowa State spent the day in Lincoln, Neb., laying waste to school, stadium and conference records. Mike Rozier scored four touchdowns in the No. 1 Huskers' 72-29 rout and now has 47 touchdowns and 282 points to eclipse the Nebraska career mark of 45 and 270 held by Johnny Rodgers. He set the school standard for touchdowns in a season with 24, vaulting over the 20 scored in 1950 by Bobby Reynolds.

The Cyclones were not without solace. The 29 points is the most anybody has scored on the mighty Huskers so far this season. David Archer passed for 346 yards, making him Iowa State's career leader with 3,650, and a touchdown pass gave him a school record 16 for the season. In addition, Tracey Henderson caught 10 of Archer's aeriels for a Big Eight record single-season record of 63.

But on the other hand, it was the worst margin of defeat in Iowa State history. It was also the most points Nebraska has ever scored against a Big Eight team.

"I think Iowa State is a very good offensive football team," said Husker Coach Tom Osborne. "As long as they avoid the turnovers, they're going to score some points on anybody."

Hagler, Duran set to fight; politics not part of bout

By The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — The "Marvelous" Marvin Hagler-Roberto Duran world middleweight title fight Thursday night apparently will be free of the political wrangling that marked Hagler's last defense.

Promoter Bob Arum said he expected the World Boxing Council to sanction the scheduled 15-round bout and to allow Hagler, should he win, to fight the winner of Thursday night's bout between Frank "The Animal" Fletcher and Juan Domingo Roldan in a World Boxing Association mandatory defense.

An agreement with the WBC is expected to be finalized Monday, Arum said.

Hagler is recognized as champion by both the WBC and WBA, and the WBA is supervising his fight against Duran, who is the WBA junior middleweight champion.

The WBC was to have directed Hagler's defense against Wilford Scypion May 27 at Providence, R.I. First, there was a problem over Hagler's insistence that the fight be scheduled for 15 rounds. The WBC has a 12-round title limit, while the WBA limit is 15.

Then, after the WBC agreed to 15 rounds, the Rhode Island Commission allowed the fight officials to be selected by the fledgling United States Boxing Association-International.

The WBC refused to sanction the fight, and the WBA went along with the decision, but neither group withdrew title recognition from Hagler, one of only two undisputed champions in boxing. The other is light heavyweight Michael Spinks.

The WBC sanctioning fee is a percentage of each fighter's purse. Arum would not say what the fee is for Thursday night's fight, but said: "It's in the low six figures for the fighters, and the promoter is paying $2,000. The WBA sanctioning fee is $20,000 for each fighter and $2,000 for the promoter."

Hagler and Duran each should make between $8 million and $10 million, said Arum, who added, "It is set up to be the biggest money fight of all time."

The fight, at a 15,000-seat outdoor arena at Caesars Palace, will be shown live throughout the United States on closed-circuit television.

Duran, who feels he has redeemed himself for quitting against Sugar Ray Leonard almost three years ago by beating Davey Moore for the WBA 154-pound class title, is a man with a mission.

"I am fighting for four titles," said the 32-year-old Panamanian, who is one of seven men to hold three titles (lightweight, welterweight and junior middleweight). No one ever has won four.

U.S. stops Britain, captures cup

By The Associated Press

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Pam Shriver said, "I figured I was a pivotal person" in the 60th anniversary Wightman Cup women's tennis competition in which the United States made it five victories in a row with a 6-1 triumph over Britain.

So Shriver had a hand in three of the six triumphs for the United States, including a 6-0, 6-1 romp Saturday over injured Sue Barker that provided the clinching point in the best-of-seven-match series.

"I felt like the whole thing was on my shoulders," Shriver said. "It was a little bit on Kathy (Rinaldi), but she only had one match. I had a hand in three matches. I knew the British were thinking the way to win was to get to me."

If so, the strategy backfired.

Shriver, playing the No. 2 singles spot behind captain Martina Navratilova, provided a key 6-3, 6-3 victory Friday night over Jo Durie, Britain's top player, and came back Saturday to team with Navratilova for a 6-2, 6-1 doubles win over Durie and Annabel Croft.

In Saturday's other singles match, Navratilova was a 6-3, 6-3 winner over Durie in the matchup of the two No. 1 singles players.

The United States now holds a 45-10 edge in the series that started in 1923 and was interrupted for five years during World War II. The latest renewal drew 11,843 for the three days at William & Mary Hall, which has a seating capacity of about 8,800 for tennis.

Private firefighting may be 'wave of future'

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — They are considered public servants, men and women who risk their lives to protect their communities from fire. But many of tomorrow's firefighters may be private employees — contract labor hired out to cut municipal budgets.

Once common in colonial times, private firms now provide fire protection for more than 1 million people in 32 municipalities, counties and fire districts.

"It's the wave of the future," said George Zoley of Wackenhut Services Inc., a Coral Gables, Fla., security firm that earns $15 million annually by selling private fire protection.

"From what we've seen, there are numerous communities who want to contract for fire services," he said. "But few want to be the first on the block to do it. They will wait to see someone else do it first."

Wackenhut is hoping a vote Tuesday in Dover, N.H., will clear the way for a showcase agreement to run the city's fire department for the next five years.

The firm, which now provides fire and ambulance service to Hall County, Ga., promises savings of more than $600,000 over the five-year period if it takes over administration of Dover's 42-member department.

But the promise has not convinced all 22,500 residents of the city 100 miles north of Boston. Local 1312 of the International Association of Firefighters and a citizens group have gone to the state Supreme Court to challenge the agreement.

Opponents also have placed a referendum on the ballot Tuesday that would prevent the transfer of fire and police to private firms.

Douglas Conway, president of the local, said the Wackenhut plan is simply aimed at breaking the union.

"They can hire any Joe off the street and as long as they have warm bodies off the street, they're not going to care," he said.

Mayor Raymond Hennessey said the Wackenhut plan would improve service. "We have nine firemen on duty at any one time," he said. "Wackenhut tells us they will have 10 firemen on duty."

The Wackenhut plan calls for cutting six positions and increasing the work hours of the remaining firefighters by 30 percent, while raising salaries 20 percent.

Hennessey said his city, which now pays private contractors to collect garbage, plow streets and catch stray dogs, has received so many inquiries that it now charges $15 each for a packet of information on the Wackenhut deal.

Mike Bryant, administrator for Hall County, Ga., said he also receives many calls about private fire service. But he cautioned city leaders to present all the facts to voters before making the switch.

When the county supervisors contracted a private firm to manage the fire department five years ago, voters in the 392-square-mile county 50 miles northeast of Atlanta voted their recall.

But when the new supervisors continued the service, the public eventually accepted the change — and the $600,000 Bryant estimates the county saved. Twenty firefighting positions were cut.

The nation's oldest private fire company, Rural-Metro Corp., began in Arizona 35 years ago when residents of unincorporated areas outside Phoenix were offered fire protection on a subscription basis.

Dan Giblin, a vice president for marketing, said Rural-Metro has 800 employees and had $20 million a year in sales.

"Very often savings from 20 to 40 percent can easily be made — a good portion in personnel," he said. "We pay our people a little more and ask them to work longer hours."

Rural-Metro provides fire protection for one-fifth of Arizona's population in 12 different communities and for 300,000 people in the unincorporated area of Knox County, Tenn.

Other private companies handle firefighting duties in Brentwood and East Ridge, Tenn.; Grants Pass, Ore.; Rome, Ohio, and unincorporated sections of Billings, Mont., Elk Grove, Ill., and Savannah, Ga.

Private fire firms also provide protection for airports in Green Bay and Madison, Wis.; Kansas City, Mo.; Manchester, N.H.; Sioux City, Iowa, and Medford, Ore.

David McCormack, a consultant with the International Association of Firefighters, said the turn toward private fire protection is part of the "continuing search in the American psyche for simple solutions to relatively complex problems."

But Jeff Fletcher, a program manager for National Leagues of Cities, said it is part of a growing trend.

"With municipal budgets and federal grants shrinking and property tax limitations being voted in, municipalities are looking for all sorts of ways to save money," he said.

Cuts in foreign market credits may lower farm prices

By ANDY OSTMEYER
Staff Writer

A dispute concerning the level of credit for farm exports may mean a lower price for farmers if the market is lost, said Harvey Kiser, associate professor of economics and grain marketing economist.

The dispute centers around the amount of credit the federal government is willing to extend to foreign nations under the Commodity Credit Corporation's program known as General Sales Manager-102 (GSM-102).

GSM-102 is a commercial credit guarantee program designed to maintain and expand exports, Mel Sims said. Sims is the general sales manager and associate administrator of the Foreign Agriculture Service of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The program is not designed to further the export of finished products but only raw materials. For example, cotton and cotton yarn could be exported but not cotton shirts, Sims said.

Under the program, a commercial exporter in the United States makes a sale to a company in a foreign country. The company then contacts its bank, which in turn sends an open letter of credit to the bank with which the exporter is working.

According to Sims, the dispute arises when trying to decide what level of credit the federal government is willing to extend.

Last year, the credit level was approximately $5 billion and for the next fiscal year the USDA requested about $9 billion. The level, however, was tentatively set at $3 billion and is currently under review by the Office of Management and Budget.

One reason for the jump in the level of credit was the realization that there are many more markets out there, Sims said.

The $9-billion dollar credit level is possible, and many experts are confident the level will be at least what it was the previous year ($5 billion), Sims said.

Under the program, the government guarantees 98 percent of the principal and 6 percent of the interest on the loan made.

After the $3 billion dollar mark has been reached, the government will no longer guarantee credit, Sims said.

The interest rate rises according to the risk factor, and if the government will not guarantee the loan, the interest rate rises, he said.

The Commodity Credit Corporation allows banks to charge lower interest rates by guaranteeing the loan — making it more attractive to foreign buyers, said Sims, who also is vice president of CCC.

There are two types of risk factors, he said. The first is political risk which concerns the possibility of a country being overthrown in a revolution or defaulting on a loan. The second type is non-political risks, such as when a company declares bankruptcy.

Sims said credit is often extended to financially unstable countries, which are often unable to buy the product without some type of credit.

"Developing countries do not have the financial resources to make wheat purchases unless they use the credit program," Kiser said.

Last year, approximately $6.4 million worth of wheat and flour was sent abroad. Of this, $1.63 million was exported under the GSM-102 program, Kiser said.

More credit goes for wheat than any other commodity, Sims said.

Kiser said one reason a lower credit level has been established is the depressed world economy.

He said countries such as Canada and Australia are very competitive in the world market. If importers cannot get credit from the United States, they will turn to other countries.

Kiser agreed with Sims that one reason for the jump in the level of the request was that a demand was found for this type of program.

In the last fiscal year, there were 30 countries which took advantage of some type of government guarantee program, Kiser said.

In the last three years, there have been $800 million worth of defaults the American government has had to cover. The countries which defaulted include Poland, Romania and Sudan.

"If farmers are going to raise this quantity of wheat in light of world economic conditions, I think we need an export-credit program," Kiser said.

It would be difficult to tell how the lower credit level would influence the price of wheat or of other commodities, Kiser said.

Greater demand will strengthen the price farmers receive for their products, and there will be a lower price if the market is lost, he said.

"It affects the whole marketing system," he said.

If there are not as many markets for the wheat, it will depress the market price and farm price, said John Gordley, legislative assistant for Sen. Robert Dole. Dole called for an end to the credit level impasse.

Dole's office has received complaints from private export companies and co-ops because they are losing sales while waiting for the dispute to be settled, Gordley said.

Bomb blast inside Capitol injures none

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A bomb exploded Monday night near the Senate chamber inside the U.S. Capitol Building, police reported.

There were no reports of injuries in the blast, which one witness said described as "a big heavy clap of thunder" about 10 p.m. CST.

A group calling itself the Armed Resistance Unit claimed responsibility for the explosion and said it was in reaction to the U.S. invasion of Grenada and the presence of U.S. Marines in Lebanon.

The Capitol was sealed off by police and firefighters, and seven fire trucks and three ambulances were on the scene.

"It went off in the vicinity of my office," said Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., who was not in the building at the time. The bomb went off just outside the ceremonial Mansfield Room some 30 feet from the Senate chamber, said Rep. Austin Murphy, D-Pa.

Murphy said the explosion appeared to have been caused by two to five sticks of dynamite and that the blast left that area of the Capitol filled with smoke. Austin said, however, that there was no fire. He said the doors to the room were blown off and there was wall damage where the explosion occurred.

Laurie Santos, a passerby, said she was three blocks from the Capitol when she heard an explosion that sounded like "a big heavy clap of thunder" about 10 p.m. EST.

She said that seconds later, she saw smoke coming from the Senate side of the Capitol building.

"After the explosion, I saw people running towards the Capitol, but no one was running away from it," Ms. Santos said.

President embarks on Asian journey amid tight security

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, preparing for a six-day journey to Asia, said Monday he would like to see Japan militarily strong despite constitutional restraints on its forces. He said he would station more American forces in South Korea if necessary.

Reagan leaves Washington today for Japan and South Korea, underscoring U.S. determination to remain a military power in the Pacific as well as frustrations with Tokyo over trade problems.

Tight security was readied in both countries.

North Korea has branded Reagan's visit a "very dangerous war junket." In Tokyo, police said they uncovered a plot by leftist radicals to attack the U.S. Embassy and a U.S. Navy base.

In an interview with Fuji Television of Japan on the eve of his trip, Reagan said, "I recognize you have some constitutional problems with this, but a strong Japan, a Japan able to manage more of its own defense, will be a great factor for stability in that whole area."

Japan's constitution, written after World War II, renounces war and says "land, sea and air forces...will never be maintained."

In a separate interview with the Korean Broadcasting System, Reagan said there is no need to increase the size of the American force in South Korea.

Administration officials say they do not know how assertive Reagan will be in confronting the Japanese over trade problems. In particular, the United States is unhappy about the swelling trade deficit with Japan — expected to reach nearly $30 billion next year — and obstacles in selling American products there.

Jury indicts former chief of nuclear power plant

By The Associated Press

HARRISBURG, Pa. — A federal grand jury indicted the former operator of the Three Mile Island plant Monday on criminal charges of falsifying safety test results before the worst nuclear power accident in the United States.

Federal officials have said that if such false reports were filed, they could have contributed to the severity of the March 1979 accident in Middletown.

U.S. Attorney David Dart Queen, who announced the 11-count indictment, refused to say if the alleged violations by Metropolitan Edison Co. led to the accident, in which Unit 2's main cooling system lost water and the radioactive core overheated. Another reactor, Unit 1, was undamaged.

"The indictment is going to have to speak for itself," Queen said.

"What the grand jury indictment alleges is that while it (the Unit 2 reactor) was operational and while it was licensed, the company, through its employees, engaged in a pattern of criminal conduct," Queen said.

The company was accused of attempting to conceal from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission data on the rate of leakage from Unit 2's primary cooling system, in which water passes over the reactor's radioactive core and heats up.

The leak rate tests were required to show that leakage from the primary system's plumbing was within one gallon per minute. The indictment says Metropolitan Edison falsified reports on the tests for at least five months before the accident.

Kansans may face additional phone rate hikes

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Even though $1.5 billion worth of telephone rate increases have been approved in 1983, additional boosts totaling more than four times that amount are pending before state regulators.

A survey by The Associated Press, conducted over the past three weeks, identified a record $6.7 billion worth of proposed rate increases across the country, filed by either Bell System companies or independent phone companies such as affiliates of the GTE Corp.

The effects of the rate increases, if granted, would vary widely from state to state and customer to customer. They are defended by telephone executives as essential to reflect faster depreciation of equipment; to earn larger profits to attract investors, and to shift to more efficient pricing — charging customers on the basis of use, just as is the case with natural gas or electricity.

"With the removal of subsidies from our industry, it's really important that our prices be based on our costs — that the individual services pay their own way," says Tom Lewick, a spokesman for General Telephone of California, which has a $221.1 million rate boost pending. "Our entire rate design in this case is geared toward accomplishing that."

Despite the huge amount of rate increase requests, the survey found that some telephone companies are having a hard time winning their cases. Figures compiled by the Federal Communications Commission and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. show that as of Oct. 13, state commissions had rejected 62 percent of the Bell System rate boost proposals they had reviewed.

If that pattern of authorizing only 38 percent of what is requested holds up, consumers would face roughly $2.55 billion in local telephone rate increases in addition to the $1.5 billion already cleared this year.

The $6.7 billion figure tabulated through the survey is solely for local rate increases and does not include proposed "access charges" or other fees tied to the provision of long-distance service, either interstate or intrastate.

Following orders of the Federal Communications Commission, every local phone company in the country has proposed to begin levying a $2-a-month access fee on consumers next year. That fee would be paid by all consumers to help replace subsidies for local service that are now collected through interstate long-distance rates.

The interstate access fees will cost consumers an estimated $2 billion in 1984, although those collections would allow interstate long-distance rates to fall. Legislation is pending in Congress to block the access fees.

The legislation, however, would not prevent local telephone companies from pursuing their local rate increases or "intrastate access fees" — monthly fees that are levied to replace subsidies contained in long-distance rates for calls that don't cross the boundaries of a state.

Battles force closure of Beirut airport

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Shiite Moslem gunmen fought Lebanese soldiers near U.S. military positions Monday, wounding a Marine and forcing authorities to close the airport for the first time since a truce took effect six weeks ago.

The Syrian government ordered a full mobilization of its 220,000-man army, saying it feared an attack from the United States or Israel. But the Americans and Israelis said there were no attack plans.

In northern Lebanon, Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat's loyalist guerrillas, trapped in their last Middle East stronghold by advancing Syrian-supported mutineers, fired rockets and mortars at rebel positions to counter a barrage of hundreds of shells. Police said 1,000 people have been killed and 3,000 wounded since the PLO war began Thursday.

Arafat, who has accused Syria of backing the rebels because it wants to take over the PLO, told reporters in Tripoli that the Syrians were planning to overrun his Baddawi refugee camp and invade Lebanon's second-largest city.

In the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip, there were widespread demonstrations in support of Arafat. At least one demonstrator was wounded in clashes with Israeli authorities.

U.S. Marine spokesman Maj. Robert Jordan said the leathernecks in Beirut dived into bunkers and foxholes when fighting broke out near their airport compound and returned fire when snipers shot at them.

State radio said the airport closed because of the fighting between Shiite gunmen and the Lebanese army, and that air controllers diverted planes to Cyprus. It was the first time the airport closed since a cease-fire aimed at halting the country's chronic civil war took effect Sept. 26.

Senate approves MX expenditure

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate on Monday approved spending $2.1 billion to produce and install 21 MX intercontinental missiles. Opponents conceded that the 56-37 vote may mark the last serious attempt to halt deployment of the powerful strategic weapon.

Senators brushed aside arguments by Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and others that the MX is outdated and vulnerable to Soviet attack.

"I believe it is necessary to make to make one last effort if only to clear my conscience," said Bumpers, acknowledging defeat shortly before the vote.

"The MX is a missile without a mission and a weapon without a home," Kennedy said.

President Reagan and other supporters say the MX is needed as a "bargaining chip" to pressure the Soviet Union to negotiate seriously at the Geneva talks on curbing strategic nuclear arms.

Assistant Senate Republican leader Ted Stevens of Alaska contended that the MX is a critical link in the U.S. nuclear arsenal, allowing a response to Soviet attack by firing missiles from nuclear-powered submarines, long-range bombers or underground silos.

"Without the MX we will be hard-pressed to keep the peace," Stevens said, but with it, "we will go to the bargaining table with a complete triad."

Later, the Senate rejected 50 to 42 a proposal to slow the nuclear arms race by calling on Reagan to propose to the Soviet Union a mutual pause on flight-testing of multi-warhead land-based missiles.

One of the sponsors, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., said if the Soviets accepted the idea, the pause, which would include the MX, "could be a significant step toward asserting control of the arms race on both sides."

Fine arts majors to exhibit work

Twelve K-State bachelor of fine art degree candidates will exhibit their artworks for two-week periods beginning Nov. 7 through Dec. 9. The exhibitions will be at McCain Auditorium, Diebler Gallery, West Stadium and Gallery 6, Art Building.

The exhibitions are a partial fulfillment for the professional degree the students will receive.

'Stinking oceans' topic of lecture

An American Association of Petroleum Geologists' distinguished lecturer will speak at K-State today.

Michael A. Arthur, associate professor of oceanography at the University of Rhode Island, will speak about "Notions of Stinking Oceans?" at 4 p.m. Tuesday in Thompson Hall 101. The public is invited.

Arthur is active in AAPG and other scientific and professional organizations and currently is an associate editor of AAPG Bulletin, Geology Magazine, and the journal Marine Micropaleontology.

Dancers to participate at festival

The K-State Dance Workshop will perform in McPherson and Wichita this month, presenting a lecture/demonstration and performance for McPherson College Thursday and participating in the Kansas Dance Festival at Wichita State University Nov. 16-20.

In Wichita, dance faculty members Susan Warden, Linda Westby and Luke Kahlich will each present a choreographic work and teach master classes in modern, Renaissance and jazz dance, respectively. Several K-State students will participate in the festival.

The Dance Workshop is an activity within the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies.

Speaker to discuss black politics

Hulan E. Jack Sr., the first black New York borough president and a former state legislator in the New York State Assembly, will speak about "Black Politics in America Today: A Strategy Needed" at 10:30 a.m. Friday in the Justin Hall auditorium.

Jack is expected to discuss such issues as Jesse Jackson's presidential candidacy and the new national holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr.

Jack's address is co-sponsored by the Department of Political Science, Office of Minority Affairs, Coalition for Human Rights, Phi Sigma Alpha (political science honorary) and Black Student Union. He also will answer questions in the Union Little Theater at 1:30 p.m.

Jack was elected in 1940 to the House of Representatives of the New York State Assembly and served until 1953. He returned to the Assembly in 1967 and served another six years as Democratic Party Leader. His position of Manhattan Borough President in 1953 made him the highest elected executive black in the nation at that time.

Patrons to analyze behavior at job effectiveness seminar

By DAVE MANCHON
Collegian Reporter

A personal profile analysis seminar will be offered from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Wednesday at the University Ramada Inn. The Division of Continuing Education is sponsoring the seminar.

"Participants will analyze their own behavior styles to increase their effectiveness on the job and elsewhere," Karen Keller, continuing education instructor, said.

The seminar leader will be Carol Williams, president of the National Human Resource Centers.

"The seminar will benefit the manager along with the individual," Keller said. She said she believes managers will learn how to build upon the strengths and weaknesses of their employees. Individuals will learn skills necessary for maximum performance and reaction to the opposition, she said.

"Strategies (to help managers) for blending and motivating the team will also be discussed," Keller said.

Registration is open to the public. Those interested in attending may register by contacting Keller at 532-5575 by noon today. The fee to attend the seminar is $45 and includes lunch.

Reagan urges Grenada students to honor troops killed in invasion

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan on Monday urged the American medical students evacuated from Grenada to honor the U.S. troops killed on the island by speaking out "about their courage and commitment as they risked their lives for yours."

Saying he was angered "that certain people belittled the danger you were in," Reagan welcomed nearly 500 of the 550 students of St. George's University Medical School to a White House ceremony at which student representatives presented him and American servicemen with tokens of appreciation.

To a cheering, flag-waving crowd on the South Lawn, the president said, "It's very easy for some smug know-it-all in a plush, protected quarter" to criticize the invasion, which Reagan has since called a "rescue mission."

"I've wondered how many of them would change places with you," Reagan said.

Spokesman Larry Speakes said he thought Reagan might include some of his congressional critics among the "smug know-it-alls," but that Reagan did not aim his remarks at the news media.

The White House brought ten veterans of the Grenada landing from each of the four armed services to sit in the front rows as Reagan praised the military men for their bravery.

"What those men did for you they would do for any American in trouble," Reagan said.

Noting that "some of our fellows didn't make it back," Reagan suggested, "Nothing could make those men prouder than the statements you've made to America about their bravery and devotion to a cause larger than themselves."

Before Reagan came outside with his wife, Nancy, and Gen. John Vessey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the gathering had the air of a reunion.

Many of the students hadn't seen each other since before they left the American-run medical school on Grenada ten days ago.

The students, virtually all of whom were in Grenada after being refused admission to medical schools in the United States, now are being divided up to finish the semester at four facilities in New York, New Jersey and Barbados. The St. George's school may be re-established in Grenada next year.

Oil official lists benefits of gas decontrol

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Decontrol of natural gas prices could give Kansas an economic boost of at least $54 million during the first year after pricing regulation was lifted, an oil and gas company official told lawmakers on Monday.

Jim Collins, a petroleum engineer and spokesman for the Cities Service Oil and Gas Co. of Tulsa, Okla., said deregulation would permit Kansas to benefit more from the huge supplies of low-priced gas produced in the state.

He told the Special Committee on Energy and Natural Resources that decontrol would cause the price of Kansas gas to gradually increase while bringing down the costs of more expensive gas.

Moreover, Collins said gas prices for consumers should not increase under decontrol. Instead, he maintained that most Kansans would see slight price declines because of a "rapid ramp down of high cost" of out-of-state gas which now makes up the biggest share of gas used in Kansas.

"Any of the winners would be states with low-priced gas that would ramp up," Collins said of decontrol.

The Hugoton gas field in southwestern Kansas is the second largest gas field in the world, with reserves estimated at eight trillion cubic feet. However, most of the gas is low-priced under current federal pricing laws. For instance, most of the Hugoton reserves are presently valued at 20-40 cents a unit.

The legislative committee, which has been studying natural gas pricing since early summer, has expressed frustration over the low prices of Hugoton gas. And today the panel is to vote on a proposal calling on the Congress to remove federal pricing regulations on natural gas. The committee leaders, including its chairman, Senate Vice President Charlie Angell, R-Plains, strongly support decontrol.

Bad focus on Pacesetter Program

"Is it absurd to ask graduating students to make a financial commitment payable over three years after graduation?"

The question is asked by the Kansas State Student Foundation concerning the new Pacesetters program. Under the program, graduating seniors would pledge to contribute $60 over the first three years after they graduate. The program is designed to impress the need for private giving upon graduates and acquaint them to contributing to the University.

We applaud the program's basic intention as we applaud the dedication shown by those who have given their time and effort toward making it successful. But we do not find the program, as currently planned, acceptable.

We recognize that K-State will need continually increasing private funding to operate in the future. Thus, the program's intent is admirable. And, if the funds were to be assigned for a more reasonable cause, the program itself would be acceptable.

But the funds pledged by the seniors are to be used for Pacesetters scholarships, and will be given only to students who are active in campus student organizations such as Blue Key, Spurs and Chimes.

While this program could make seniors aware of the need for private giving, it will also make them aware of the narrow focus of aid on campus. We doubt the KSU Foundation will be addressing the most important financial needs by giving scholarships only to this select group of students.

We do appreciate, and recognize the necessity of, student involvement with campus organizations. But nearly every student contributes to the University, in one way or another, and surely there are needy students who are not members of campus organizations.

The Foundation has shown a grave lack of judgment in soliciting funds from all graduating seniors to fund scholarships reserved for those who many of these students consider the elite. The money should be used to fund general purpose scholarships to benefit any students who display financial need.

According to the Foundation, several universities have implemented programs such as Pacesetters and some have been "very successful." But we wonder whether the funds were restricted as they will be here.

It is time to quit giving extra advantages to select groups and start looking at the student body as a whole. If the Foundation wants to show the need for private donations from alumni, it should first demonstrate responsibility in planning how to disperse the prospective scholarships.

With financial aid much tighter than it was four years ago, graduating seniors should realize the need for financial aid to be increased across the board, not focused on one small sector of the student body.

Money won't cure woes

Another award has been granted in the Hyatt Regency Hotel collapse case. This one was a joint suit totaling nearly $1 million filed by the husband, father and son of a band member killed in the July 1981 collapse.

There were 114 people killed in the collapse. Lawsuit settlements, both out-of-court and by jury decision, currently total nearly $100 million.

We do not question compensating family members for the loss of loved ones. If the family member was working and the family will experience a loss of income, it is only fair that the hotel builders, owners and operators pay for the loss. It is even fair that the family members be compensated for their grief. But all of these need to be done within reason.

The families of the victims have turned tragedy into an opportunity to get rich quick. If they believe the memory of the family member can be erased by money, they will find that they are wrong.

Many people will argue that the hotel should be forced to pay the price of the tragedy. However, much of the settlement will be paid by the insurance companies, as is the case in most lawsuits.

This only results in higher insurance rates for the average consumer. After all, someone has to cover the loss when an insurance company pays a $1 million settlement. In the end, the company will pass the cost down to the other policy holders.

American juries have been getting more generous with their settlements. They enjoy socking it to "big business" by deciding upon massive awards for the "little guy." This is happening in libel suits, discrimination suits, and many other types of civil cases. It is time for jurors to realize where a lot of the money will eventually come from: their own pockets.

The builders, planners and everyone else responsible for the Hyatt collapse do need to be punished. But it is not going to be accomplished through massive financial awards. Action needs to be taken against the companies themselves, action which will result in their losing their opportunity to earn a livelihood, as their neglect cost 114 people the opportunity to even remain alive.

The negative argument here is that sanctions will not help families of the victims get over the loss of their loved ones. But neither will massive amounts of money. While money may slightly ease the pressure, only time will heal the wounds. Money is not a cure-all. It is a sign of the illness of our society when it is treated as such.

New Bible not a solution

BRAD GILLISPIE

Editorial Page Editor

The push to abolish "sexism" has reached all areas of life. The latest move, and perhaps the most ridiculous, is "The Inclusive Language Lectionary," the non-sexist Bible recently issued by the National Council of Churches.

The argument that the Bible is a sexist piece of literature has existed for years. The reference to God as "Father" has had many women up in arms. Chances are good, however, that the only reason such people read the Bible is to find something on which to base their argument of sexism.

The people who take the Bible for what it is said to be, the word of God, have no trouble with the projection of God as the Father. The father image is being objected to by the people who refuse to literally accept what the Bible says and want to change it to fit their own ideas.

The NCC was correct concerning the translation from Greek to English, that we would not get the literal "father" as we know it in reference to God. That is a problem in the translation of the Bible; the English language cannot do justice to the true meanings of the Greek words. For instance, the Greeks had at least four different words for "love," all of which represented different levels of love. We have only one word.

But the fact that the English translation does not have exactly the same meaning as the original Greek does not mean that the Bible needs to be changed in a way that will only make it more confusing and actually something of a mockery. Proponents of the lectionary have said that it will add something to the Bible. This is true, but the resulting extra touch is not needed or even desired.

The references to God in the lectionary only serve to make it more confusing. The phrase "God, the Father and Mother," has replaced "God, the Father." It has been argued that this will give people a different perspective, a better perspective, of God. The argument is a half-truth in that people will see God differently if they look at him as the "Father and Mother."

However, this difference will primarily confuse people. It is much simpler and clearer to look at God as a father than to compare God to an asexual being. This is not because God is as a father any more than he is as a mother in the human sense of the words. It is because the father image is something almost everyone can relate to. Many people have been raised by only a father or mother, but I doubt any of them looked at either of their parents as asexual.

Rev. Rod Saunders of Ecumenical Christian Ministries said that asking people who had bad experiences with father figures to have faith in God as a father is "asking them to do something they cannot do." To that, I say that if they cannot have faith in God as a father, they probably cannot have that necessary trust in God at all. Faith is not built from looking at God as a father or a mother; it stems from looking beyond human terms — for God is not human — and seeing God in light of who he is.

A change in wording will not help these people have any more faith in God. I am not saying this out of a sexist attitude. The problem with Christian faith is not in the wording of the Bible; it is in the individual person. And anyone who puts his/her faith in God will find the ability to overcome the father image problem, as well as other problems stemming from human inadequacies.

While the interpretation of the image of God is, at best, questionable in the lectionary, the portrayal of Jesus is clearly wrong. NCC also attempts to take the male emphasis out of the person of Jesus.

Jesus refers to himself in the Bible as the "Son of Man." The lectionary presents him as "the Human One" or "Child of God." While he is referred to as a human, the manuscript attempts to take an essential human element out of his life and being. A human being must be either a man or a woman. It is a folly to say that Jesus was neither, and that a gender could not be applied to him.

The NCC further this error by saying that God was Jesus' "father and mother," further confusing the reader. The Bible says that Jesus' mother was Mary and that he was conceived by the Holy Spirit. In this sense, God is Jesus' father. But his mother is Mary, a human being. It is a contradiction to say in one passage that God is the mother of Jesus and later say that Mary is the mother of Jesus. And it is incomprehensible to imply that Jesus had one father and two mothers.

Overall, the lectionary is wrong historically and wrong in context. Opponents of the writing have labeled it as an "inaccurate" and "inadequate" document. They are right. It is just another example of man (referring to humankind) taking something God has done and attempting to change it to fit his own desires.

Opponents of the Bible have long claimed that the Bible is full of contradictions and that mistakes were made in the translation. These contentions have clearly been false in the past, but if the lectionary is used, they will finally have an element of truth to them.

I would say that the lectionary should not be used in church services, but that decision must be left up to the individual congregations. But if it is used, the people of the congregation should be told that it is inaccurate and that all passages in it should be taken with a grain of salt. Correction; they had better make that a pillar of salt.

Reagan's regulatory revolution

WASHINGTON — David Hannah Jr. briefly caught the imagination of a nation last year when his company launched a spacecraft from a barren island off the Texas coast. Hannah announced that the event had marked a new form of competition for the U.S. space program — from the private sector.

Excitement over cost advantages, in fact, overshadowed concern for, among other things, air security and national security. The unprecedented launch, as Susan and Martin Tolchin contend in a new book, "Disarming America: The Rush to Deregulate," illustrated "what can happen when the wrong questions — who pays and what does it cost — are repeatedly asked at the expense of two other vital questions — who suffers, and who governs?" Despite contentions to the contrary, these questions unfortunately continue to go underemphasized at the highest levels of government.

Conventional wisdom has it that the Reagan revolution has peaked. After serious losses on the side of poor mothers and children, the budget battle has stalemated. Even Reagan's chief economic advisers are at odds over the meaning of deficits.

Meanwhile, Margaret Heckler has negotiated a cease-fire, if not a lasting peace, over social issues at Health and Human Services. Many hard-liners once employed by the administration have run off to make more money or write revolutionary eulogies.

But stalemates do not a dead rebellion make, as various units of the Reagan team demonstrated during a recent week in which several agencies issued their semiannual "regulatory agenda."

Administrator William D. Ruckelshaus of the Environmental Protection Agency conceded that the $1.6 billion Superfund for cleaning up hazardous wastes was insufficient, but he authorized EPA's science advisory board on Oct. 14 to "review" 50 or more air, water and hazardous waste regulations in the coming year. Even under a "rehabilitated" EPA, to "review" is to put cost before benefit.

At the behest of industry and some of his subordinates, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger decided to soften barriers against burying fat salaries in Pentagon contracts. Arms manufacturers, among others, had complained that rules issued last May allowed Pentagon auditors to examine individuals' wages; industry successfully urged that an overall figure was sufficient. Unfortunately, the change puts the Pentagon back where it was, unable to fully detect when defense contractors are overly generous with themselves.

Perhaps the most flagrant example of regulatory relaxation came from a predictable source, the Federal Trade Commission, on Oct. 21. Under pressure from Chairman

James Miller, the FTC declared that "deceptive" advertisements would no longer be automatically illegal; instead, the commissioners would have to prove first that a "reasonable" consumer was likely to suffer injury as a result of the ad. Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., responded to the new policy with appropriate indignance: Chairman Miller, he cried, was trying to "undo over 50 years of consumer protection laws."

Michael Pertschuk, the former chairman who has become a consumer's watchdog within the FTC itself, may have best evaluated the Reaganites' undaunted, anti-regulatory mentality in a speech to an economists' group in Washington. "So totally does overregulation occlude the vision of our economic wise men," Pertschuk said, that "they overlook such commonplace evils as human misery and suffering, greed and avarice."

Indeed, there's reason to expect that the administration will proceed oblivious to public opinion as well. The departures of such notable consumer nemeses as Watt, former EPA chief Anne Gorsuch Burford and highway safety administrator Raymond Peck may have given remaining officials reason to think that fewer Americans worry now about the course of health and safety. Key resignations may have encouraged many Americans to think that their troubles are in fact over.

But when Americans see, hear, smell and taste the effects of Reagan's continuing assault on regulatory practices, they'll regret their complacency, and remember that politics is like baseball. As Yogi Berra said, "It ain't over 'til it's over."

Art gallery over coliseum

Editor,
RE: Tom Downing's "Answering Questions" column which appeared in the Nov. 4 Collegian.

I agree wholeheartedly with developing an acceptable art gallery at K-State. I personally would like to pledge my $16.50 currently allocated to the megabucks coliseum, in addition to any new fee increases in the wake of service reductions to which we "might" be subjected, to the acquisition of such a gallery.

Of course, if it's still necessary to fund a new coliseum, try doubling the ticket prices. That should solve the problem, or at least inform the administration of its importance by direct consensus from those concerned with using the new facility.

"YOU SHOULDN'T STAND FOR IT — IT'S A BLATANT ATTEMPT TO INTERFERE WITH YOUR INDEPENDENCE!"

Briefly By the Associated Press

Former UAW leader now teaches

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — The teacher of "The Changing Role of the Labor Movement in the Decade Ahead" at the University of Michigan is new to the classroom, but he knows what he's talking about.

He's Douglas A. Fraser, retired United Auto Workers president.

"It's very rare you get a chance to take a course with a guy who actually made the history that he talks about," said Robert Klyman, a sophomore from Bloomfield Hills who is among the 27 honors students taking the seminar. "The only concern I had was that he would present it with a pro-union bias, but he's being fair to everybody."

The applicants were required to write a brief essay explaining why they wanted to take the course.

Fraser said one student wrote that her parents frowned on her taking a course from him because she would become a "wild-eyed liberal." He said she added, "I hope so."

"I feel comfortable with the students," said Fraser, 66, who designed the course and has called upon various union officials to serve as guest lecturers.

Welsh 'king' won't abdicate

HAY-ON-WYE, Wales — The self-styled King Richard of Hay vowed Monday to hang onto his crown, despite a weekend "referendum" in favor of toppling him.

King Richard, better known as Richard Booth, declared this Welsh market town an independent kingdom — and himself the monarch — six years ago. He issued his own currency, set up customs posts and renamed his home Hay Castle.

The roughly 1,500 townspeople mostly shrugged and went about their business, the bulk of which was selling second-hand books, of which Hay, on the Welsh-English border, is a world center.

The kingdom remained peaceable until Leon Morelli, a London businessman who like Booth owns book shops in Hay, argued with him over the efforts of the Welsh Tourist Board and offers of government aid to bring in new industry. Booth, a traditionalist, wanted to reject both.

Morelli called a referendum on the king, inviting locals to cast their votes by throwing darts at a likeness of the monarch in a town pub. A bullseye won the thrower a glass of sherry.

Morelli said a majority of those who voted over the weekend favored dethroning the king. But Booth said he would not abdicate.

Students feel threat of nuclear war

IOWA CITY, Iowa — A 13-year-old girl says she polled 370 junior high schools students and 75 percent of them said they are afraid they will die in a nuclear war during the next 10 years.

Leigh Ann Kennedy, who conducted the survey as a project for the Extended and Accelerated Learning Program at Regina Junior High, said she didn't expect so much fear.

"Seventy-five percent of the kids think about nuclear war all the time or often. They think it'll happen in the next 10 years, and that they won't survive it," she said.

Miss Kennedy said she thinks fear is so high among students because they feel helpless in preventing a nuclear war. She said nearly 57 percent of those surveyed at Regina, South East and Northwest junior high schools said there is nothing they can do to stop the arms race.

Here is a sampling of what students wrote on her survey:

—"I think we are up a creek without a paddle. We will be blown away before I am 30."

—"If we have an all-out nuclear war, (the) best chances are that nobody would survive ..."

—"I hope there is something I can do about nuclear war, but I don't know where to start. The threat of nuclear war scares me, and sometimes makes me wonder about our government and country, and our common sense."

Royals select Evans in free agent draft

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals joined 16 other teams in picking Darrell Evans in the free agent draft Monday, but their real hope in rebounding from last year's dismal season may be a player not even in the annual talent hunt.

The draft came as Kansas City awaits the arrival Wednesday of Bruce Bochte in Kansas City. Bochte retired last year, but has decided to play again for either the Royals, Oakland or Boston.

Bochte, a first baseman with Seattle, was to visit Boston Monday and Tuesday and Oakland Thursday.

Besides Evans, who has played first base, third base and the outfield in a career with Atlanta and San Francisco, the Royals selected first baseman-third baseman Enos Cabell of the Detroit Tigers, first baseman-outfielder Dennis Walling of the Houston Astros, and outfielder Gene Richards of the San Diego Padres.

Kansas City had a strong interest before the draft in Graig Nettles, but he re-signed with the New York Yankees without going through the draft.

"After Nettles signed, we thought Evans was the next legitimate choice to address our needs for run production," said Kansas City General Manager John Schuerholz. Schuerholz said he expected a lengthy negotiating period with Evans, a left-handed batter who hit .277 with 30 home runs and 82 runs batted in with the Giants last year.

Schuerholz said Walling would be given a chance to win a starting job in the outfield if he was signed while Cabell was projected as a "role player" who could play in 80 to 100 games a year at various positions.

Richards, considered to have only average defensive skills, was "a very exciting offensive player," Schuerholz said. Richards, blessed with good speed, hit .275 with three homers and 22 RBI's in San Diego.

Bochte retired from baseball without negotiating with any team after going through the free agent draft in 1982. He has said he wants a two-year contract that would pay him $500,000 a year, and that the contract demand is non-negotiable.

"I'll take my chances on selling him this city," said Schuerholz. "He's a guy who we have been most interested in as far back as last year's re-entry draft, and even after he retired I kept calling Tony (Atanasio, Bochte's agent) and telling him I was interested if Bruce wanted to change his mind."

Former Kansas City outfielder Amos Otis was picked in the sixth round by the Baltimore Orioles. Baltimore may want Otis to platoon in right field if it is unable to re-sign Dan Ford, who also went through the draft.

Reggie Singletary's smooth, effective transition from lineman to linebacker has strengthened the Wildcats' defense. Singletary racked up a career-high 18 tackles two weeks ago against Nebraska in his first start as linebacker.

'New wrinkle' proves effective for Singletary

By KEVIN DALE
Staff Writer

For 2½ years Reggie Singletary has been beating up on offensive linemen from his spot at defensive tackle. Now, from the linebacker position, Singletary is continuing his reign of terror on the opposition.

Prior to the Nebraska game, the coaches moved Singletary to linebacker as one of the "new wrinkles" they were adopting to try and stop the Cornhuskers. This has become a very successful move as Singletary has led K-State in tackles for two straight weeks.

Against Nebraska, Singletary had a career-high 18 tackles in his first start at linebacker. He also led the team against Oklahoma State with 10 tackles. Singletary is now K-State's ninth all-time leading tackler with 256 stops. He is also improving on his school record of tackles for yardage loss. He now has 58 tackles for 282 yards in losses.

"The switch to linebacker is all right with me," Singletary said. "It's something new and different. It's better than tackle because the ball carriers can't run away from me now, they're going to have to run over me."

"Reggie is getting comfortable at linebacker," Jim Dickey, K-State head coach, said. "With all our injuries we have had to shuffle a lot of people around and they are all starting to come through."

K-State's last two opponents have been primarily running teams and that has been an advantage for Singletary and the defense.

"Oklahoma State runs straight ahead and they try to run over you,"

Dickey said. "We do better against those kinds of offenses because we are very strong and physical. Iowa State throws the ball on every down so it will be a different test for Reggie."

"He is going to have to drop back and read the quarterback. In practice, he has shown a good sense for reading the quarterback but this is going to be a big test for him."

"I'm going to have to study their (Iowa State) plays pretty well so I'll be able to cover the passes," Singletary said. "I think I'll be able to do just fine. If they throw the ball into my area I'm going to be there. I always want to be where the ball is. Now, at linebacker, it is easier for me to get to the ball. This really hasn't been that much of a change for me because I always am going to the ball."

Singletary's nose for the ball has allowed him to be ranked second in the Big Eight Conference in fumble recoveries with three. He also caused two fumbles against Oklahoma State.

Singletary may not have to deal with offensive linemen when he's at the linebacker position, but he still has specific responsibilities he must take care of.

"Reggie doesn't really have any more freedom at linebacker," Dickey said. "He has a basic gap responsibility that he must check on each play. He knows what to check and what to look for and then he's free."

"He has a good sense of where the ball is and where the ball is going to go. He's going to have a big challenge against Iowa State."

Men's basketball season to begin with scrimmages

By The Collegian Staff

Student season basketball tickets, both reserved and non-reserved, will go on sale this week at the Central Ticket Office in Ahearn Field House, Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager, said.

Tickets are $42.25 and include all but two of the men's basketball games. The two games not included are against California State University-Northridge Dec.

23 and against the University of Texas Jan. 4.

The men's team — preparing for this year's season opener with Loyola University of Chicago in the Tribune Charities Holiday Classic in Rosemont, Ill. — will perform in the annual purple-white game at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday. No admission will be charged.

At 3:30 p.m. Wednesday, the squad will perform in an open scrimmage in Ahearn.

Outdoorsmen face hike in license fees

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A bill to require more people to buy a license to hunt or fish in Kansas was endorsed Monday by a legislative study committee as a way to provide more funding for the state Fish and Game Commission.

The proposal, approved by the Special Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, will be introduced in the 1984 Legislature which convenes in January.

Currently some 223,000 people are exempted from the state's license requirement — people over the age of 65, under 16, those in the armed forces and American Indians. The committee's bill would eliminate those exemptions, and require those individuals to buy a hunting, fishing or trapping license.

The measure would generate about $739,000 for the Fish and Game Commission, which is funded mostly by revenues from license sales and federal aid.

Fish and Game has about an $11.6 million annual budget, but officials estimate the agency will run out of money by 1988 or 1989 as projected expenses exceed revenues.

The legislative committee has been studying Fish and Game funding since early this summer to determine what lawmakers can do to provide more revenue. The committee will make a report to the 1984 session, including proposed legislation such as the license exemption measure. However, it rejected a suggestion that Fish and Game be merged with the state Parks and Resources Authority.

Other Fish and Game bills approved Monday by the committee would:

— Create a 24-hour fishing license for Kansas residents and out-of-state residents. The license would cost a maximum of $3, and could raise about $30,000 a year in new revenue. Currently, a fishing license for a Kansas resident costs $8 a year, plus a $3 fish hatchery stamp.

— Require that all fines from Fish and Game violations be placed in a fund for the agency instead of being deposited in the state general fund. That would give the agency about $140,000 a year. Currently Fish and Game does not receive any of the interest. The proposal would provide the agency with an estimated $329,000 a year.

— Raise the statutory price limit on hunting and fishing licenses for residents and non-residents.

Budget cuts, apathy hurt college newspapers

By The College Press Service

As many college newspapers struggle through what may be their most difficult financial year yet, a federal court has ruled that the University of Minnesota newspaper can return to its former method of collecting student fees.

The ruling could help set a precedent for making student funding of campus papers a First Amendment issue.

After the Minnesota Daily published a wild "humor issue" in 1979, the university's regents made student fee funding of the paper optional for students.

But last week the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled the regents had interfered with freedom of the press and actually were trying to influence the paper's editorial content by changing the fee system.

But the long-awaited Minnesota fee decision is about the only good news for college newspapers so far during the 1983-84 school year.

Scores of papers are struggling with budget cuts, while others actually are folding under the weight of budget problems and student apathy.

Smaller weekly and less-than-weekly papers appear to be suffering the most. Papers at Illinois Eastern Community College, Lakeland College, Harford Community College, Glen Oaks Community College and Western Wyoming Community College are among those which have suffered the deepest budget cuts.

Some tie funding to editorial policy

Jim Hughes, head of the public information office at Phoenix College said, "We took a look at the cost of the college paper in relation to the information we have to get out to students and decided it was too cost-prohibitive for a student body of 13,000."

The college has no student newspaper this year.

Administrators plan to produce a monthly calendar and newsletter instead, for "considerably less than the $700 per issue we were spending on the paper," Hughes said.

Kendall College in Evanston, Ill. also has replaced its monthly student paper with a public relations newsletter.

"We didn't pick up (funding for) the student paper again this year because of lack of interest and cuts in students services funding," said Janice Glor of the college's student services office.

She estimated the school will save $2,250 by merging its new operations with the public relations department's newsletter. Students are left to get news from "a campus calendar posted in some of the classrooms," she said.

Sometimes apathy is to blame as much as money.

At Phoenix College, where enrollment has been climbing steadily for three years, "we just didn't have a lot of student interest," Hughes said.

"The staff was volunteer, and during finals a lot of people stopped coming in and working."

Kendall's newspaper staff was "down to one or two students last year really working on the paper," Glor said. "We haven't had any complaints from anyone who wants the paper back."

"It's very easy for an administration to do away with a paper if there's no students interested enough to work on it or fight for it," said Dick Sublette, president of College Media Advisers and publications director at the University of California at Los Angeles.

But lack of staff "coincides with what's happening with journalism school enrollment generally," said Len Franko, director of the American Society of Journalism Administrators and journalism professor at the University of South Carolina.

"We've had a bulge in journalism majors for the last 10 to 12 years," he said. "Now, after doubling in the last 10 years, enrollment has finally leveled out" to about 80,000 majors nationwide.

The decline, coupled with campuses' general money woes, has pitted many newspapers against their administrators.

Administrators gradually have been forcing larger campus papers to pay more of their costs by generating more of their own revenues through advertising sales. As a result, some papers have become successful enough to cut most of their formal fiscal ties to their schools.

"But at a lot of smaller universities, where the papers didn't move out on their own, the universities have been picking up the tab for increased salaries, equipment, space and other subsidies," Franko said.

At Pepperdine University in Malibu, Calif., administrators "asked us to contribute more advertising revenue toward our own production costs," said Steve Ames, director of student publications.

Although the publication is "financially very solid," he said it has to tighten its belt to increase its pages per issue from 16 to 20.

UCLA's Daily Bruin, Sublette said, has benefited from such forced fiscal responsibility. Since being told to pay its own way, the paper now operates "totally in the black, and even helps support some of the school's other publications," he said.

But the Observer at Notre Dame is protesting a university effort to assume greater responsibility for the paper's budget, which finished $7,000 in the red last year.

Administrators threaten to withhold $70,000 in student fees from the paper if it refuses to hand over budgetary control, but the editors, in a recent front-page editorial, claim that "if the university can refuse to sign our checks, then it can dictate our policy."

Armstrong expresses surprise after ouster

By The Collegian Staff

John Junior Armstrong resigned from his position as Kansas Farm Bureau president last Wednesday after the board of directors demanded his resignation Oct. 28.

Armstrong served as president for 11 years. He will be replaced by Doyle Rahjes, 53, of Agra. Rahjes served as vice president since 1973. He will act as president until the annual meeting of the board of directors Dec. 4-7 in Topeka.

Although the board called for Armstrong's resignation, it hasn't given an official explanation for the action.

"I can't tell you anything until later on, but I don't think there will be an official statement into the reason why Armstrong was asked to resign," said Don Wilson, spokesman for Farm Bureau.

The board of directors asked for Armstrong's resignation when he returned from a six-week leave of absence he had been requested to take.

"They thought they had good reason to ask Armstrong to take the leave of absence. They requested that he have some medical and psychological tests taken," Wilson said.

The tests results are confidential and will not be made public, Wilson said.

"I can tell you that the test results didn't show anything," he said.

Armstrong said he was surprised by the board's decision to ask him to take a leave of absence and to submit his resignation.

"They never gave me anything specific," he said. "I got the impression they'd lost confidence and trust in me. But, I was surprised."

Court gives police authority to discipline unwed officers

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Monday allowed local police departments to continue to discipline unmarried officers for having sex with other members of the force.

By a 6-3 vote, the justices left intact rulings that the Amarillo, Texas, police department acted properly in suspending Patrolman Janet Shawgo and suspending and demoting Sgt. Stanley Whisenhunt for sleeping together before they were married.

Dissenting justices said the couple's sexual relationship was a private matter, unless it interfered with their official duties. They said the couple's privacy rights were violated, particularly because neither had been told that their relationship might be grounds for disciplinary action.

By denying review to the Amarillo case, the court left open the possibility that it might study the issue fully sometime later and decide that such police department discipline is unlawful.

In other matters Monday, the high court:

— Sidestepped a growing debate over the rights of severely handicapped infants. The court had been asked to consider the rights of a Bloomington, Ind., baby boy who died after his parents refused to let doctors perform life-saving surgery. The infant's death made the case moot, lower courts ruled.

— Refused to give children the right to challenge their parents' attempt to end the parent-child relationship legally. The justices rejected arguments that Nevada courts unconstitutionally presumed that a child's best interests in such situations are always the same as its parents.

— Gave Louisiana permission to execute Robert Wayne Williams, who was convicted of the 1979 shotgun slaying of a grocery store security guard in Baton Rouge. By a 6-3 vote, the justices lifted a court order that temporarily prevented the state from scheduling a date for Williams to die in the electric chair.

Distribution of information changes American lifestyle

By RHONDA WESSEL
Agriculture Editor

The "information age" has brought about a major demographic change in American lifestyle. Instead of physical labor, the majority of workers are involved in collecting, processing and distribution of information.

"Extension and evaluation are in the core of the age in which we live," said Michael Q. Patton, international program specialist at the University of Minnesota.

Patton spoke last night at the opening session of the 69th Annual Extension Conference in Forum Hall. The conference continues through Friday.

"We haven't been at the information game very long," he said. And, the major problem with the information age is how to deal with all the information.

"We have become masters at producing information. The problem isn't how to generate information, but how to get people to use that information," Patton said.

"It's people that use information. Most information is aimed at all kinds of groups, organizations and computers, but not aimed at human beings," he said.

Another problem with getting people to use information is they expect the data to be perfect and are unable to accept imperfections in the information gathered, Patton said.

"There are strong limitations in evaluation. The evaluation process has methodological imperfections — there will always be errors. We're not going to get 100 percent certainties about anything. There's always going to be error, and it will be with us in future," he said.

The extension agent's job is to teach people in their area how to use this information, and to how to be flexible enough to overcome the uncertainties in information. This will allow the user to immediately benefit from the new information, Patton said.

To gain the most from new information, the user must remain open-minded. However, research indicates people relate old experiences with new ones, he said.

"This automatically inhibits learning. Most of us walk around in our own little fog. We are not really open to new information," Patton said.

With so much information being produced, users find it hard to sort out the valuable information. Patton said learning to focus will alleviate some of the confusion.

"Eighty percent of what's worth knowing is in 20 percent of the statistics," Patton said.

The real payoff in the information age is asking the right questions, Patton said.

"We have so much knowledge, but the hardest part is to ask the right questions. You can't evaluate everything so you have to decide on what's worth evaluating, and ask for what you can use.

"If people don't know what they're evaluating and why in the first place, they won't see any payoffs when they're through evaluating," he said.

"Extension is in the forefront of high technology. High technology is information, so high technology is people and getting people to use information," Patton said.

The National Shakespeare Company's technical director, Bob Hupp, directs the lowering of the set after Monday night's performance of "Much Ado About Nothing" in McCain Auditorium. The set's metal grid, supported by four telescoping poles filled with compressed air, breaks down into four-foot sections which are then packed in the troupe's bus.

Shakespearean actors double as technicians

By TOM DOWNING
Staff Writer

What makes the National Shakespeare Company different from other traveling theater troupes is that the company members are both actors and technicians.

After 21 years of taking the works of Shakespeare on the road, the National Shakespeare Company has all the details worked out.

The company performed "Much Ado About Nothing" in McCain Auditorium Monday evening for a crowd of about 600 people. "A lot of times we'll get into a place and they'll say, 'Where are the actors?'" said Bob Hupp, actor and technical director.

The company of 12 actors tour eight months out of the year. Because most of their engagements are one-night stands, the company must get into a theater and set up quickly.

The set for "Much Ado About Nothing" consisted of a backdrop painted to look like a garden. Vine-covered latticework screens on both sides of the stage were used for entrances and exits.

After Monday evening's performance, the company, with the help of eight McCain technicians, took down the set and loaded everything into the bus in about 45 minutes.

The National Shakespeare Company travels everywhere by bus. The entire set breaks down into four-foot sections. In addition, the light control board, sound equipment, the props and costumes are loaded into the bus.

When the company arrives at a theater, four actors work on putting up the set.

They travel with their own lighting instruments and two actors are responsible for focusing the lights. The actor who also is the bus driver runs the cables from the light control board to the instruments.

Their technical director takes care of the electrics — hooking the control board into the electricity and making sure everything is done properly.

Another two actors work with the costumes, ironing or mending and perhaps taking a trip to a local laundry.

The company manager, Margaret Col-diron, takes care of the administrative needs as well as acting. She pays the company members, keeps the books and arranges last-minute details once they arrive in town.

When performance time nears, the actors have just a little while to rest, eat, start getting into makeup and then put on costumes.

Besides being strong actors and knowing the technical side of theater, company members are cast because of their personality. Because they will travel for nine months in a bus, getting along with each other is essential.

And because all 12 company members act in the play, all share the role of technicians during the performance.

Senate approves record defense bill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved 47-46 on Tuesday the production of a new generation of nerve gas weapons, as Vice President George Bush cast the deciding vote on the issue for the second time in four months.

The Senate went on to vote 86-6 for a record $253 billion military spending bill, which includes every major weapons program requested by President Reagan, including nerve gas, the MX nuclear missile and long-range B-1 bombers.

As approved by the Senate, the measure is $9 billion below the president's most recent spending request.

The bill now goes to a congressional conference committee for negotiations with House members who earlier rejected the $124 million nerve gas program.

Opponents of producing "binary" nerve gas artillery shells and bombs assail the weapons as gruesome, immoral and a threat more to civilians than to soldiers.

"There is no fiscal reason, no negotiating reason and no military reason, there is no reason of any kind to produce this weapon," said Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore.

But 46 senators plus Bush accepted arguments by Reagan and others that the "binary" bombs and artillery shells should be produced to prod the Soviet Union into a negotiated reduction of chemical stockpiles.

In a rare and dramatic repeat of his constitutional role as president of the Senate, Bush made the difference, just as he did July 13 in a 50-49 vote on a defense authorization bill.

Each vote was watched carefully by administration supporters and when conservative Jesse Helms, R-N.C., voted with nerve gas opponents, he was chased by several Republicans as he left the floor. Helms returned and changed his vote.

Similarly, Republican Alfonse D'Amato of New York, had voted against nerve gas production on a procedural tally minutes earlier, but then switched on the proposal to restore funding.

The Republican-controlled Senate Appropriations Committee had sided with the House and recommended blocking nerve gas funding and continuing the 14-year freeze by the United States on the production of chemical weapons.

But John Tower, R-Tex., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, successfully moved to restore money for the nerve gas weapons to a $252.5 billion defense bill.

A congressional conference committee will now have to negotiate the differences between the House and Senate.

The defense appropriations bill includes $766.9 million in other funds for defensive measures against chemical warfare, storage of older types of nerve gas and continued research into binary weapons.

Tower said opening production lines for binary weapons "is the right thing to do for our national security."

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., cited evidence indicating the Soviets used chemical weapons in Laos, Afghanistan and Kampuchea, formerly known as Cambodia.

To attract support for resuming production, Boschwitz added a requirement that the United States unilaterally destroy double the amount of older types of nerve gas whenever a new binary weapon was added to the arsenal.

Social program funds fail narrowly in House

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House rebelled 206-203 Tuesday night and killed a stopgap money bill on which Democratic leaders had worked all day to attach nearly $1 billion for education and social services that had been cut at President Reagan's urging.

Led by House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, Democrats had argued that domestic spending cuts urged by the president had gone too far.

But after first accepting the additional spending, the House rejected the entire bill.

Wright offered no explanation for the defeat, saying only, "Please don't ask me, I'm just heartbroken."

As part of an effort to restore some of the spending cuts Reagan muscled through Congress during the first two years of his presidency, Democrats, who control the House, offered the amendment providing $997.7 million for 18 domestic programs.

Democrats had said the money would fall within spending targets Congress set for itself earlier this year, but the president would likely view it as a "budget buster."

Republicans used a parliamentary tactic to break the amendment into 18 parts and force roll call or voice votes on each one.

They managed only to remove a $43.3 million item for the construction of model science centers at Boston University, the University of New Mexico and Barry University in Florida. That was dropped on a 286-122 vote.

Democrats then pressed for an overall vote — to allow members to go on record for or against the entire package — on the remaining $954.4 million, which carried 254-155, virtually along party lines.

Wright, who offered the amendment on behalf of the Democratic leadership, said it was necessary to restore "money that has been harshly trimmed away from programs that we consider the very heart and soul of this American system of ours."

The move, which was unlikely to have been accepted by the Republican-controlled Senate, also provided an opportunity to tweak Reagan for his rhetoric on behalf of U.S. education.

"Everyone, including the president, agrees that our schools desperately need improvement," Wright said before the House convened Tuesday. "Almost everyone recognizes that the improvements will cost money."

"States and localities are unable to bear the added burden due to revenue shortfalls in their current fiscal year, the reduced attractiveness of municipal bonds and depressed property values in many places," Wright said.

The amendment was offered to legislation to continue funding through Feb. 29, 1984 for departments and agencies whose regular fiscal 1984 appropriations have not yet been enacted into law.

Dairy subsidy controversy intensifies in House

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A senator distributed root beer-flavored milk, and consumer groups pointed to the dairy lobby's $1.8 million in campaign contributions as the fight over dairy subsidies intensified Tuesday.

Just a day before a scheduled showdown vote in the House, the Ralph Nader group, Congress Watch and Public Voice, a nutrition advocacy lobby, claimed that $1.1 million in dairy money went to the campaigns of nearly all the House members who supported the industry in a procedural vote last month.

But those who back the "compromise" dairy bill held a briefing for colleagues and aides on the benefits of their proposal.

And Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., distributed cartons of flavored milk on Capitol Hill to underline his belief that creative marketing supported by the bill could help reduce surpluses.

At issue is how to tackle the nation's milk overproduction problem and the hundreds of millions of pounds of government-owned milk, cheese and dried milk that have accumulated as a result.

The milk industry, which gave a total of $1.8 million to congressional campaigns during the 1982 election season, wants to scrap current law and replace it with a program of paying farmers not to produce. The law now assesses a $1 fee on milk producers for each hundred pounds of milk produced.

Under the industry proposal, dairy farmers would continue to pay half of the assessment — 50 cents per 100 pounds — to help finance the payments for idled herds. They would receive $10 per hundred pounds for reducing their output, up to 30 percent of their normal production.

The government-guaranteed minimum support price for milk would be trimmed from $13.10 per hundred pounds to $12.60, and a new milk promotion and marketing campaign would be implemented.

But opponents labeled the approach an excessive giveaway to milk interests, fueled in part by the industry's campaign contributions to congressmen. They back instead an alternative sponsored by Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y., which would do away with all assessments and simply reduce the support price by up to $1.50.

Rep. Jim Jeffords, R-Vt., said at a briefing that the industry measure, already passed by the Senate, would be $1 billion less expensive to taxpayers than Conable's bill over the two-year life of the program and would do less to reduce government dairy stockpiles.

Aid plan, entrance rules to top '84 ASK agenda

By Collegian Staff and Wire Reports

The Associated Students of Kansas has made enactment of a teacher scholarship program and establishment of stricter college entrance standards its top items for the 1984 legislative session.

ASK set its lobbying agenda at its November legislative assembly this past weekend at Emporia State University. The 1984 Legislature convenes in January.

As its first priority, ASK selected a proposed scholarship program for teachers which was endorsed last week by a legislative study committee.

The proposal would provide $1,500 a year to some students who are enrolled in teacher training programs in a four-year public university or private college in Kansas. The scholarships would be awarded based on scholastic qualifications, and recipients would be required to teach in Kansas — one year for each year's scholarship.

Mark Tallman, ASK executive director, said there was wide support for the program, which would not only help education students but improve state education as well.

"If we put more money into the scholarship program, an education student who may have been in a work-study program otherwise can free up funds for someone else."

The group's second lobbying priority is toughened entrance requirements for state universities. ASK wants the Board of Regents to require more credits of some high school subjects such as math and science for admission to Kansas universities. Such a change would alter the state's "open access" policy.

Tallman said that while this was a divisive issue among ASK's member schools, K-State's delegates strongly supported the measure.

"Some (member) delegates were concerned that this policy might exclude students who weren't able to meet these qualifications. It was not meant to exclude students, but it's not to their advantage to go into college unprepared," he said.

Currently, any graduate of an accredited Kansas high school cannot be denied admittance to a state university.

Also, ASK voted to continue to support the state work-study program which was enacted by the 1983 Legislature. The program provides money to help pay for student internships with off-campus employers.

"The work-study program received universal support, but it got the most support from K-State," Tallman said.

Tallman said he credited Bob Evans, director of student financial assistance, with being a strong backer of the University's work-study program and thus generating a positive attitude for the program at K-State.

Finally, ASK will continue to oppose any legislation to increase the legal drinking age in Kansas.

"Our policy is not only that we don't want the drinking age raised, but that we favor increased education concerning alcohol. K-State has been very involved in this area. Alcohol Awareness Week is an example of this," Tallman said.

In order for ASK to determine its priorities, the proposals must pass by a two-thirds vote of the delegates representing the member schools. Member schools are K-State, the University of Kansas, Washburn University, Pittsburg State University, Fort Hays State University, Emporia State University and Wichita State University.

Inside

Homecoming activities begin today with Union Day. Several activities are scheduled today in the Union and festivities will continue throughout the week with a pep rally and bonfire Thursday, K-State Day Friday and the Homecoming parade and football game Saturday. See page 5.

In correlation with Homecoming, students will have the opportunity to elect the 1983-84 K-State ambassadors. For statements by the prospective ambassadors, see page 7.

Campus

Smorgasbord ticket sales to begin

Tickets for the Union's annual Christmas Smorgasbord go on sale Monday in the Union Director's Office. Sales will continue until Dec. 7 or until all tickets are sold, according to Malley Sisson, Union food service director.

The Smorgasbord, featuring approximately 65 different foods, including traditional Swedish and Scandinavian foods, will be Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, Dec. 8, 9 and 10 from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

Tickets are $11 for adults and $5.50 for children 12 and under. No telephone reservations will be accepted but tickets are available through mail order.

Arab students to host folk dancers

The Organization of Arab Students will present an Arabic folk dance group from Oklahoma at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in the Manhattan High School auditorium.

Arabic food will be served in conjunction with the dance concert. Tickets, priced at $5 for the public and $4 for members, will be sold in the Union in advance of the concert. Tickets will be $6 at the door.

Memorial cancer fund established

The parents of a K-State graduate who died earlier this year of liver cancer have established a fund to support the activities of the K-State Center for Basic Cancer Research.

The Michael F. Lukert Memorial Cancer Fund was created by Lukert's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lukert of Sabetha, to provide for student fellowships, cancer research, and educational activities in the center.

Lukert graduated in 1973 with a bachelor's degree in building construction. At the time of his death he was a farmer in the Sabetha area.

The Center for Basic Cancer Research, part of the Division of Biology, creates the opportunity for scientists from diverse backgrounds and scientific orientations to combine their skills to learn more about the cellular and molecular makeup of cancer cells.

Senators' awareness week provides forum for students

By The Collegian Staff

Student Governing Association Awareness Week will provide an opportunity for student input on issues being considered by Student Senate.

As part of SGA Awareness Week, senators will conduct visitations to living groups tonight and set up a table in the Union Thursday to talk with students.

Some issues to be discussed are December graduation and the possibility of changing the location of student body election polls. Students may bring up any issue they believe should be dealt with by senate.

Information on running for student body president, senate or Board of Student Publications will be available at the table.

The SGS office will hold an open house Thursday. Senate will meet at 7 p.m. and Manhattan's Mayor Wanda Fateley will speak. The meeting is open to the public.

Sooner Or Later You'll Get Responsibility Like This. In The Navy It's Sooner.

You're maneuvering 445 feet of guided missile frigate through the navigational hazards and non-stop traffic of one of the world's busiest ports. But you'll dock safely. Because you know your equipment. You know your men. And even when the responsibility weighs in at 3,600 tons... you're ready.

After four years of college, you're ready for more responsibility than most civilian jobs offer. Navy officers get the kind of job and responsibility they want, and they get it sooner.

Navy officers are part of the management team after 16 weeks. Instead of boot camp, officer candidates receive four months of leadership training. It's professional schooling designed to sharpen their technical and management skills.

Then, in their first assignment, Navy officers get management experience that could take years in private industry. And they earn the decision-making authority it takes to make that responsibility pay off.

As their management abilities grow, Navy officers can take advantage of advanced education and training in fields as varied as operations management, electronics, and systems analysis. In graduate school it would cost you thousands; in the Navy we pay you.

And the Navy pays well. The starting salary is $17,000 (more than most companies pay). And that's on top of a comprehensive benefits program that can include special duty pay. After four years, with regular promotions and pay increases, the salary is up to as much as $31,000.

If you qualify to be an officer in the Navy, chances are you have what it takes to succeed. The Navy just makes it happen faster.

Kansas schools get Senate regroups in aftermath of bomb blast new commissioner

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The state Board of Education Tuesday unanimously selected Dr. Harold L. Blackburn as the new Kansas commissioner of education.

Blackburn, 55, has been assistant commissioner for education services in the state Department of Education for the past 15 months. Prior to that, he was program director, regional director and regional representative of the U.S. Department of Education and its predecessor, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, for 15 years in Kansas City.

Blackburn's selection, on a 10-0 vote, came at the state board's regular monthly meeting. It was attended by Gov. John Carlin and several legislators.

He will be paid a salary of $61,000 annually, plus fringe benefits, said Marilyn Harwood of Glasco, the board member who made the motion to hire Blackburn. Her motion was seconded by Evelyn Whitcomb of Wichita.

The decision to hire Blackburn had been made in executive session just ahead of the open meeting, when the vote was taken and Blackburn was introduced.

Blackburn, who holds degrees from Kansas State University, the University of Kansas and Phillips University, was a teacher and administrator in the Topeka school system and also taught higher education at KU, KSU and Emporia State University for 14 years.

Effective Dec. 18, he will succeed Dr. Merle Bolton, who has held the commissioner's post the past eight years. Bolton was superintendent of schools in Topeka when he was selected as state education commissioner on July 1, 1975, succeeding Dr. C. Taylor Whittier, who went to Texas to teach at the college level.

Gordon Schultz, chairman of the state board, said Blackburn was picked following a nationwide search as the successor to Bolton, who is retiring.

He said the decision was a difficult one, but added, "We are quite fortunate to have a new commissioner of education with his vast experience and background at all levels in our Kansas educational system, as well as his background in working with federal and state education agencies."

Blackburn pledged to "work very hard," although he said following Bolton will be a tough task.

He said great changes are coming in education.

Blackburn also said Kansas has "three things going for it" which will help it meet the challenges ahead in education: Commitment to excellence, a "will for change where needed and desired," and concern for people.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — FBI agents combed through an estimated $1 million mound of debris Tuesday as the Senate attempted business as usual in the wake of a bomb blast that ripped through a hallway and severely damaged a meeting room near the chamber. Officials said the device was triggered by a wristwatch.

"The Senate will not be deterred or intimidated," declared Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., as he held the Senate to a schedule which began at 9 a.m. EST.

Baker said that had the Senate been in session at the time of the explosion, there would have been "grave injury...and, perhaps, loss of life to senators and staff."

Although there was no structural damage to the Capitol, the blast all but wiped out a large section of the corridor on the second — main — floor, adjacent to the Senate chamber. In addition to shattering windows, splintering wood frames and exposing brick wall and pipe, the blast knocked the doors to Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd's office off their hinges and destroyed several irreplaceable paintings, including portraits of Daniel Webster and John Calhoun.

However, the Senate chamber itself was left intact, although a coating of dust throughout the chamber greeted maintenance workers in the morning.

Byrd aide Mike Willard said the damage could reach $1 million.

The FBI said the blast was caused by a "high explosive device with a delayed timing." Tom Griscom, an aide to Baker, said "it was a wristwatch timer."

Both chambers of Congress convened under unusually tight security. The second floor on the Senate side was sealed off to the public. As the Senate debated a military spending bill, members had to raise their voices to be heard above the sound of broken glass and masonry being shoveled up only feet away.

The visitors' galleries on the third floor and the entire first floor were re-opened to the public early Tuesday.

But, for a brief time in the morning, the first floor of the House side of the Capitol was sealed and evacuated after a fresh threat that a bomb had been placed near the House restaurant. However, no bomb was found after an intensive search of the Capitol and three House office buildings, said Capitol Police Sgt. Karen Magee.

"Following this a lot of kooks and erratic people will be phoning in a lot of idle threats," House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, said.

Theodore M. Gardner, the special agent in charge of the Washington FBI field office, told a news conference in front of the Capitol that analysts had not yet determined whether the bomb that rocked the Senate was dynamite. However, a Senate official said the investigation had determined the blast was caused by a black-powder substance, not plastic explosive.

"It was a high explosive device with delayed timing," Gardner said. He said the group which claimed responsibility before the blast, the "Armed Resistance Unit," was the same group that claimed responsibility for a blast at Fort McNair in Washington last summer.

The Republican cloakroom, an inner sanctum just off the Senate chamber, bore the brunt of the explosion.

The Democratic cloakroom, further down the corridor, sustained some damage, but it appeared to be limited to shattered windows.

Reporters got their first glimpse of the bombed area shortly before noon in a special tour conducted by Senate security officers. Most of the glass and plaster had been cleaned up by then, but the area of roughly 20 feet by 60 feet appeared devastated.

In addition to the missing Republican cloakroom windows, three of the building's large outside East Front windows were blown out. A large crater remained alongside the wall across from the chamber and cloakrooms, marking the spot where officials said the bomb was placed behind a bench in an alcove.

The nearby Mansfield room, an ornate reception room named after former Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, was not noticeably damaged, despite earlier reports that it too had borne much of the brunt of the blast.

However, the doors on Majority Leader Baker's office — a hundred feet or more from the blast — were warped and a bronze door stopper was blown off. And the main doors leading into the Senate chamber were splintered.

Ironically, Senate leaders had planned to make an announcement Wednesday on increased security steps being taken in their wing of the Capitol.

The explosion came three weeks after a bomb was carried into the House visitors' gallery by a 22-year-old Israeli, Israel Rubinowit, according to police. He attempted to explode the bomb, but it misfired.

Arafat vows to fight 'only in self defense'

By The Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Lebanon — PLO chairman Yasser Arafat said Tuesday that "to avert a bloodbath" he will stop fighting Syrian-supported mutineers if the rebels halt their push into Tripoli, his last Middle East stronghold.

"I will fight only in self defense," the Palestine Liberation Organization leader told reporters after meeting with Tripoli's political and religious figures. They appealed for a cease-fire between Arafat loyalists and those who want to topple him.

The right-wing Christian Phalange radio reported that Arafat had left Tripoli by plane, but reporters saw the PLO leader in his Tripoli office several hours after the broadcast.

"I have agreed with those attending the meeting to spare Tripoli from clashes," said Arafat, who earlier vowed to fight to the death to defend his only remaining bastion of guerrilla support. "You have my word that I will do anything to avert a bloodbath in Tripoli."

The port city of 500,000 is 50 miles north of Beirut.

Despite Arafat's overtures, mutineers pressed their artillery barrage, raining shells around the remains of his Baddawi refugee camp and on Tripoli itself. Loyalists fired back with rockets.

Police said the PLO war has left at least 1,000 dead and 3,000 wounded in and around Tripoli since fighting began Thursday.

Official sources in Tripoli who insisted on anonymity said Syrian President Hafez Assad, whose troops have been supporting the mutineers, has refused to meet with an Arab delegation pleading for a truce. But Tunisian government sources said Assad had agreed.

The mutineers claim Arafat has abandoned the PLO's struggle to reclaim a homeland from Israel. Arafat claims Syria is manipulating the mutiny and wants to dominate the PLO. Syria denies it.

Arafat said after meeting with a committee of city leaders calling for a cease-fire, "I am now in the protection of Tripoli, this ancient Islamic city. I will only fight in self defense, and the decision on war or peace is theirs."

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Wheat farmers could continue to get favorable tax treatment on commodities received under next year's wheat program, but possibly only for the first $50,000 in subsidy payments they receive from the government, under a proposal advanced Tuesday by a House subcommittee.

The Ways and Means subcommittee on select revenue measures endorsed, with little discussion, a one-year extension of the special tax rules begun last year for the government's payment-in-kind acreage reduction program.

Included in the measure was an instruction that the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, seek a ruling in federal district court on the legality of payments of cash and commodities valued at more than $50,000 per farmer to encourage taking land out of production.

The request was prompted by a GAO report last week that some farms — particularly large cotton operations in California — have received multimillion-dollar payments under PIK.

Subcommittee Chairman Rep. Fortney Stark, D-Calif., apparently abandoned plans to place an absolute $50,000 lid on the tax preference for 1984 regardless of any court ruling, and plans to try to recover tax income lost on 1983 PIK payments over $50,000.

Stark said to change the rules for 1983 payments, most of which already have been made, would penalize farmers who entered the program in good faith.

Congress went along last year when the Reagan administration said it needed special tax treatment of commodities awarded under PIK. It passed a provision that treats surplus commodities given to farmers as if they had grown them on their idled land.

That meant the wheat, cotton, rice or feed grains given to farmers in exchange for taking land out of production were treated as income only when sold for cash, not when the crops actually were received by the farmer.

Congress is now considering extending the preference for a second year. So far, a PIK program has been announced only for next year's wheat crop.

But the extension has been complicated by a GAO's legal opinion that says the law limits all land diversion payments to farmers — whether in cash or in commodities — to $50,000 a year.

Tuesday's action calls for the GAO to seek a ruling on the legality of the large PIK payments within six months.

Response to terrorism

The bombing of the U.S. Capitol Building Monday night brings into the limelight a fact of life which may prove the greatest threat to American constitutional freedoms in the 1980s.

Terrorism, and more precisely our response to it, is likely to govern the practical applications of our constitutional freedoms in the next decade. We must be willing to pay the price, in human lives rather than in decreased liberties, to prove our resolve not to give in to terrorism.

If we appease those who hold us hostage, their demands, and the brutality of their crimes, will continue to increase. And more potential terrorists will be created every day, driven by the "successes" they have seen others attain.

We recognize that the trend toward terrorism in the United States, a relatively free nation where citizens are often shocked at the "barbarism" of some third world nations, will cause much outcry and a possibly a gradual acceptance of ebbing civil rights in the name of "security."

The American people should also recognize this and accept all cases of terrorism for what they are. They are cowardly acts, carried out by social misfits, and should not sway American governmental policies.

Implicit in life is the danger of death, and if one dies through the actions of a terrorist — in a society which has chosen to remain open and free; a society which has refused to accede to terrorists' demands — that person has died for freedom as much as any soldier who died fighting to protect the society's liberties.

Terrorist acts are a sad subject to discuss. But the saddest response would be a crackdown on our constitutional rights in response to future terroristic acts. Throughout the history of our nation, people have given up their lives for liberty. It would be a sadly ironic twist if we are pressured into giving up liberties because some think it necessary to protect lives. We vehemently oppose any restrictions on civil liberties which are designed to ensure our "security" from terrorist acts.

Brad Gillispie, Editorial Page Editor

Watching the watcher

Last year, my daughter Greta (our third child) moved to San Francisco. A student for several semesters here at K-State, Greta is well-remembered by quite a number of her former classmates still living in this area.

Fortunately for her, within a week of moving to San Francisco she got a job as a waitress at the Cafe La Boheme, a walk-in restaurant in the Mission district of that city. The Cafe La Boheme is quite a picturesque place, having among its clientele many students, writers, actors, artists, and out-of-work intellectuals.

A few weeks after Greta started working, my wife and I went to California on an extended visit. (Last year, I was on leave of absence from teaching.) We spent a couple of months in Moss Beach, a small town on the Pacific Ocean about 25 miles south of San Francisco.

One morning, Greta called me on the telephone to tell me that the afternoon before she had talked to Lawrence Ferlinghetti. He had come into the restaurant with a woman friend, and, as part of her job as a waitress, Greta had asked him what he wanted served. "A glass of white wine? One for the lady also? Yes, sir." And she had brought that. He thanked her, then turned back to the woman with him.

Greta told me all this because she had frequently heard me talk about Ferlinghetti. Also, she had read a considerable amount of his poetry.

I know that it isn't necessary for me to describe who Ferlinghetti is to people interested in modern literature. However, I've noticed, more and more these days, that there are many young people in the university environment who are not familiar with Ferlinghetti's work — even though he is one of the most famous of 20th century American poets. It happens that Ferlinghetti has lived in San Francisco for many years, being the owner of the City Lights Bookstore, which is located in the North Beach area.

JOEL CLIMENHAGA
Collegian Columnist

Because she knew his work so well, my daughter Greta naturally was pleased to be able to talk with him — even on the anonymous level which occurred in this chance encounter at the Cafe La Boheme.

In a recent volume of his poetry titled "Endless Life," Ferlinghetti has a poem describing two men on the back of a garbage truck who are looking down at a young couple sitting in an open-topped foreign sports car while the truck and the car are waiting for the light to change at an intersection. Although not specifically said in it, from the tone of the poem itself it becomes clear that Ferlinghetti was watching the two garbage men watching the young couple.

And through my telling of that poem here, I am watching Ferlinghetti watching the two garbage men watching. Ripples in a pool. While reading this, you are watching me watching Ferlinghetti watching the two garbage men watching.

Always the watcher is being watched.

One afternoon, my daughter Greta talked to Ferlinghetti. And he did not know she was my daughter or even that she was talking to him. The young couple in the sports car did not know the two men on the garbage truck were watching them. Who were they watching? Perhaps they were watching Ferlinghetti watching the two men on the garbage truck.

Perhaps the woman with Ferlinghetti that day in the Cafe La Boheme was watching my daughter watching Ferlinghetti.

We never know the total connection that flows between and around people at any given moment.

A month or so after Greta's brief chance exchange with Ferlinghetti in the Cafe La Boheme, I went down to City Lights Bookstore to visit him.

We spent a couple of hours together. We had talked on the telephone some years ago about a collection of letters I was working on which included some of his. He'd forgotten about all that.

Ferlinghetti is very shy. And, although none of my friends believe it, so am I. But we talked. I never told him about my daughter having served him white wine. Instead, we talked about authors — such as Kenneth Patchen, James Laughlin, Henry Miller, Allen Ginsberg. I never mentioned I had read almost everything written by him which has been published. If he didn't know that, he would never have believed my telling him.

Just before I left, he walked to one of the shelves in the bookstore, pulled down and handed me a copy of James Laughlin's new volume of poetry called "In Another Country." "This is yours," he said.

I despise seekers after famous people. But peers — even if one is famous and the other not — must be able to talk with each other. Two shy people talking with each other is a proper thing. "We all need one another," as the saying goes.

Lawrence Ferlinghetti, I have a message for you. There is no better way to give you this message than to quote back at you your own words: "So passing strange mountains / and dropping pine needles / in an envelope / I send you / some of my / bones."

That's what we all do in this life filled with strange mountains and pine needles — as we watch each other.

Running the race

WASHINGTON — Viewers of the over-hyped movie, "The Right Stuff," know by now what it means to "push the outer edge of the envelope." Once upon a time, such talk was test-pilots for finding and breaking the sound barrier, whatever the toll on the pilot. In the 1980s, however, the envelope has developed some far-flung edges.

That conclusion rests chiefly on last month's Ironman Triathlon, a grueling test of human limits that asks its participants not only to be fleet-footed but also speedy on bicycles and in water. Marathons are to triathlons as lunch is to Thanksgiving dinner, yet more and more Americans are seeking new and arguably suicidal levels of physical perfection.

Fittingly named, the Ironman asks considerably more of its participants than most triathlons: 2.4 miles of swimming, 112 miles of bicycling and then — gasp! — 26.2 miles on foot (triathlons usually involve only half those distances, and don't always start with swimming). In the 7th Ironman competition, the winner, Dave Scott, recorded his best time ever — 9 hours, 5 minutes and 27 seconds — assuring himself thousands of dollars in promotional opportunities as the world's best at what he does.

It may have been inevitable that marathons would become a relatively common sprint. After all, there are on the average about six such races every week in the United States; qualifying times for the Boston and New York runs have been dropping steadily for years. In the last month, in fact, both of us have gone the distance either in New York or Washington. It's therefore no surprise that real men would want to add swimming and cycling, just for kicks.

MAXWELL GLEN

So popular is the triathlon that it's inspired a new magazine by that name. Breweries and hostels are sponsoring competitions around the country. So eventful, in fact, has the Ironman become that ABC regularly sends camera crews and its most notable jock commentators to Hawaii to do the play-by-play. (Incidentally, an ABC producer is said to have "discovered" the Ironman while thumbing through a sports magazine.)

The rapidity with which triathlons have caught Americans' fancy reflects national attitudes as much as promoters' wits. The total athlete evokes images of obvious appeal to a society desperate for immortality. Students and women may be drinking and smoking more than ever, but the popular ideal of physical perfection thrives in ads for bodybuilding machines, Jane Fonda's extra-Hollywood success and Ronald Reagan's fondness for his stationary bicycle.

Yet triathloning's remarkable popularity also says something about the less glorious challenges that we face every day. As Jim Curl, a former attorney in Sacramento, Calif., who now promotes triathlons, once told an interviewer, "I think people are more aware of self-image now. It's a feeling that you're making progress and (that) this is leading you somewhere. And the boss can't say he doesn't like your work. You only have to please yourself." It is, in other words, a sport where simply finishing is victory.

Even for those who are "outwardly successful," Curl adds now, "there's a need for ways to test yourself, almost as a continuing right of passage."

As one might expect, assorted skeptics have been quick to point out that triathlons are inherently discriminatory, a complaint that may be justified to the extent that the competitive triathlete must train at least six hours a day. Such a regimen has been known to undermine jobs and relationships and give the advantage to those who worry little about either.

But concerns about catering to those who dote on the superhuman overlook the fact that ours is basically a bored society. Freedom and overall affluence have left Americans in general, and a younger generation in particular, destined to meddle in the masochistic for fulfillment. While we all may not have the determination of Dave Scott, there are millions of us endeavoring in our own ways to push the outer edge of the envelope.

This fact gives a hint of the future. At some point, 140 miles' worth of hustle may seem like kid's stuff even to those who think the marathon is the supreme exercise of stupidity.

Our ambassadors

Vote for K-State's Ambassadors today.

Vote for two students; one male, one female.

Vote from out of 18,470 students; 19 applicants.

Vote between six candidates; five greeks, one non-greek.

Vote between three women; one looks, two personalities.

Vote between three men; two brains, one brawn.

Vote for the K-State "Ken and Barbie" of the year.

Six years ago, the traditional title of homecoming "king and queen" was changed to "ambassador" so that we could get some use out of them. Logic was to give them a duty all year rather than just giving a one-day honor.

Webster's definition of ambassador is "the highest-ranking diplomatic representative of one country to another."

K-State's definition of ambassador is "the highest-ranking student public relations recruiters to former students and high-school hopefuls."

The life of the K-State Ambassadors is an active one. Our Ken and Barbie must be flexible. Bending at the joints. Classes and activities will have to be scheduled with ambassador activities. They will travel and be hosts to speakers for campus lectures. They will represent K-State so that high-school students will want to come to K-State and be "just like them."

EDEE DALKE
Collegian Columnist

Identical to the "talking" Barbie dolls (with the pull-out strings behind the neck) our K-State Ken and Barbie must be able to repeat the pre-recorded thoughts promoting the University over and over.

As it is obvious in today's soapbox promotions, all of the candidates could become professional speech writers. Perhaps James Watt could hire the ones that don't cut it as ambassadors.

Barbie always did have a wardrobe for every occasion. And Ken had the hottest sports car that made him every girl's hero. For our K-State Ken and Barbie, car and fashion must go together as they travel to banquets and meetings across the state.

In all actuality, the reign...er role, of ambassador is shared by many others, although they go without title and without the $1,000 award that the ambassadors receive.

An ambassador to the University is anyone who has put in a good word for K-State among non-K-State students.

Ambassadors are those who've worked on KSU Foundation telefunds calling alumni for donations and exchanging K-State news from past and present.

Ambassadors are those who've attended sports events and demonstrated K-State pride to the out-of-town onlookers.

At some point, every student is in a position to represent the University. "Ambassadors" are any proud K-Staters.

But "the" ambassadors will be the Ken and Barbie chosen by the students from the six candidates today and tomorrow. So check out the candidates, there are some real dolls this year.

Fine article, one error

Editor,

I wish to compliment Andy Ostmeier for his fine article, Nov. 8, explaining the complex federal government export credit program. I wish to correct one set of numbers. Last year the U.S. exported approximately $6.4 billion (not million) worth of wheat and flour and $1.63 billion was exported under the GSM-102 program.

Editorial shined wrong light on Pacesetters program

Editor,

I am concerned that your editorial has misled students in understanding the intent of Student Foundation's Pacesetter program. The editorial on Monday quoted Mary Wiklander (adviser to Student Foundation) as stating that eligibility for a Pacesetter scholarship is extended to any student involved in a University Activities Board-registered organization. That is correct.

I am disappointed that you have focused on an attempt to cast this as an elitist program. You are simply incorrect. It is not our intent to award only the campus "elite," rather any student who displays both need and interest. You have overlooked our promise that involvement in any UAB-registered organization is valid. I regret that the examples which were cited were limited to specific honoraries. K-State has a place for everybody. There are more than 200 UAB-registered organizations on campus, and Student Foundation encourages students to find their capacity and fill it. I have to question your label "one small sector of the student body."

You will not accept that the funds which are pledged by the seniors are to be used for Pacesetter scholarships. I thought it was a very logical, mnemonic name for a fund which is raised through the Pacesetter program. "Pacesetter" is a term which brings to mind progress and activity. Thousands of students do their part, through involvement in campus organizations, to make this University reflective of a pacesetting atmosphere. We, as instigators of the program and representatives of students interested in philanthropy, have recognized the opportunity to involve the generosity of alumni with students who both need and deserve scholarship support.

It is obviously poor judgment on your part that you feel it necessary to attack our program. Student Foundation is an organization with the purpose of giving. With such a commendable goal, it is a shame that your response is discouragement rather than well-deserved encouragement.

Contests, games to highlight Homecoming

By MELISSA BRUNE
Collegian Reporter

Today is Union Day, the first day of Homecoming activities.

Members of Blue Key, a senior class honor society, and the KSU Alumni Association planned the Homecoming activities. Dave Carlin, Blue Key publicity coordinator and senior in political science, said work on Homecoming began last spring.

"Trackin' Back for the Purple Pack!" is this year's theme.

"The reason we chose it was because we wanted something a little more concrete for living groups to focus on," Carlin said.

Carlin said living groups must base float designs and chants around the theme. He said the theme also builds upon last year's theme, which was "The 'Cats are Back and Making Tracks."

Union Day begins the four-day event, which is to include a bonfire and pep rally on Thursday, K-State Day on Friday, and the Homecoming parade and football game against the Iowa State University Cyclones on Saturday.

Student contests including "Yell like Hell," a football team egg toss competition and body pyramid building are to take place in the Union Courtyard today from 10:15 a.m. to 4 p.m. as part of Union Day activities.

Union Day events are also to include appearances by the football team, Coach Jim Dickey, cheerleaders and yell leaders.

Student voting for the K-State Ambassadors is to take place today and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Carlin said students will need to show a student ID to vote for ambassador candidates.

K-State Ambassadors are a student couple who represent the student body at University and alumni events. The election of ambassadors replaces the traditional homecoming king and queen selection.

Carlin said ambassador applicants were interviewed by student leaders and administrators before the field was cut to three men and three women.

Thursday's bonfire and pep rally will take place in the parking area west of Call Hall. The bonfire is to be at this new location due to the new grass which has been planted at Memorial Stadium.

The bonfire is to begin at 10 p.m., with a performance by the K-State Pep Band and the burning of a Cyclone effigy by students and football team members.

K-State Day on Friday offers student musical entertainment, including a barbershop quartet and guitarist, in the Union Courtyard from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. More contests are scheduled as well. Student government leaders will challenge administrators to an egg toss and college council presidents are to take on their deans in a Kool-Aid chugging contest.

The Homecoming concert Friday evening will feature the "Stray Cats." Tickets are still available for the concert, which will be at 8 p.m. at Ahearn Field House.

KSU alumni, faculty and friends will attend the annual Homecoming alumni dance Friday night at the Holiday Inn. Matt Betton and his Big Band All-Stars are to perform.

Saturday's events begin with the Homecoming parade at 9 a.m. Grand Marshal Sen. Nancy Kassebaum will lead the parade starting at Fourth Street and Poyntz Avenue. Three marching bands, 12 floats and various other entries will proceed west on Poyntz to 11th Street, north to Moro Street and west through Aggieville.

Gov. John Carlin, Attorney General Robert Stephan, State representatives Joe Knopp and Ivan Sand and Mayor Wanda Fateley are to participate in the parade, as well as the six K-State Ambassador finalists.

Kickoff time for the football game is set at 1:30 p.m. During halftime the winners of the ambassador elections and various contests are to be announced.

"Homecoming is a good time, not only for alumni, but also for students to get together and take part in various activities," Carlin said.

U-LearN offers assistance for 'major' decision

By ANDY SCHROCK
Collegian Reporter

Students can get help in choosing a major by attending a series of workshops sponsored by U-LearN and the Counseling Center.

The career exploration workshops will help students decide a major by assessing values, interests and goals, said Susan Angle, counselor and workshop coordinator.

The workshops will be conducted Nov. 10, Nov. 17 and Dec. 1 from 3:30 to 5 p.m. in Holton Hall.

Six graduate assistants trained in career exploration will assist students in determining values and career goals, Angle said.

"There will also be some mini-lectures," she said.

Angle said research shows that the more time spent in choosing a career and major, the more satisfied a person will be with the choice.

U-LearN and the Counseling Center have sponsored workshops of this type since 1979 and the response has been quite favorable, she said.

Youthful prank unleashes flood

By The Associated Press

JOPPA, Md. — Four youths spent two to three days digging through an earthen dike, finally releasing a 6 million-gallon, five-acre flood into a sand and gravel pit, authorities said Tuesday.

"For kids, it was a tremendous feat," Larry Stancill, president of Harford Sands Inc., said of the vandalism that has stalled his company's sand and gravel business.

"I don't think you could have gotten them to work that hard for pay," he said.

The boys, aged 12 to 17, were charged with malicious destruction of property and placed in their parents' custody pending an investigation by juvenile authorities, said Sgt. William Van Horn, a spokesman for the Harford County Sheriff's Office. The youths' names were not released.

The vandalism took place Oct. 17 and the owners of the flooded sand and gravel pit have been working since then to remove the water.

First black chief takes job in stride

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Reuben Greenberg is perplexed by the stream of reporters who come to interview him as the city's first black police chief. He also roller skates in the streets and is a former rodeo rider.

"I don't see why people find so much interest in this thing especially after all this time," says Greenberg, 40. "I think it's probably because this is the South and people associate it with a backward area where the Ku Klux Klan runs rampant every night and so forth."

During an interview this week, he said that before he became chief in April 1982, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig was in town, followed by national and foreign reporters. Many of the reporters stopped to talk with Greenberg and his fame spread.

"This job is as nice as one you can find in law enforcement anywhere. It's large enough to be very, very interesting and it's small enough to be managed," he said.

"Nobody goes into law enforcement to make money. I like patrol work, for example. I go out on patrol and answer calls and make arrests," said Greenberg, who spends about 15 hours a week on the beat and also roller skates through Charleston's historic streets on weekends.

Police raid nets suspects, property

LOS ANGELES — Twenty-five guns and a quantity of narcotics have been seized in a 17-home raid aimed at curbing gang violence, and two teen-agers have been booked for investigation of murder.

In addition, 10 other people were booked in connection with a two-month crime wave that resulted in one other murder, seven attempted murders, seven assaults, and one rape, police officer Dick Taft of the Community Resources Against Street Hoodlums said Monday.

The 10 defendants were booked for investigation of assault, possessing narcotics, assault with a deadly weapon, rape and possession of a firearm by an ex-convict, Taft said.

Two plead guilty in shotgun death

COVINGTON, La. — A woman and her lover who were found in bed by the woman's husband have pleaded guilty to killing the husband with a rifle they had hidden beneath the sheets.

William Martindale, 29, of Slidell, was slain last January, two months after his wife had taken out a $100,000 life insurance policy on him. Prosecutors said he was killed by his wife Pamela, 25, and her lover, Michael E. Lewis, 20. They pleaded guilty to manslaughter Monday and were allowed to remain free on $50,000 bond pending sentencing. They face a maximum of 21 years in prison.

Ad for baby draws men's response

CONCORD, Calif. — A mother of three teen-agers who advertised for a baby to adopt says she received dozens of calls from men — but none from women — offering children.

Nancy Skaggs, a nurse who advertised in the Contra Costa Times that she had "no money to give, but a warm home and lots of love," said Monday she also received several calls from couples and single women hoping she could help them find children to adopt.

The men who called on behalf of pregnant girlfriends or of mothers wishing to give up young children said they "want to protect the women involved," said Ms. Skaggs, 37, who is separated from her husband. The ad was pulled after five days after it was discovered that it was illegal for an individual to advertise for a child, City Editor Nancy Ward said.

Rental awareness aids owner, tenant

By KIM HEFLEY
Contributing Writer

Renting an apartment or house may be the answer if you are seeking independence, privacy or quiet. It can also cause a few headaches if you are not aware of your rights and responsibilities. Try this quiz to see how well-informed you are on landlord-tenant issues.

1. You are renting a furnished apartment for $200 per month. How much can you be asked to put down for a security deposit?

b. $200
c. $300
d. $400

Answer: c. The maximum security deposit that a landlord may ask is one month's rent for an unfurnished apartment and 1½ month's rent for a furnished apartment. An additional one-half month's rent can be charged as a pet deposit.

2. Completing a specific and detailed inventory of the conditions of the rental unit can be very important. If the landlord is not willing to inventory the apartment, what do you do?

Quiz may resolve conflicts

a. Nothing. If your landlord will not participate in the inventory, it is not valid.

b. Complete the inventory with an unbiased third party. Keep a copy and send a copy to the landlord by certified mail.

c. Complete the inventory with an unbiased third party. Keep it for your own reference.

d. Tell your roommate to take care of it.

Answer: b. Inventory sheets are available in the Consumer Relations Board office. Take the time to fill one out. It can make a big difference in disputes over damages to the apartment.

3. Any unused portion of a security deposit is returned:

- a. on the day you move out.

b. on the day your lease officially ends.

c. within 30 days after termination of your lease.

d. there is no required time limit for returning a security deposit.

Answer: c. If the landlord retains any of the deposit, he is required to itemize the deductions in a written notice to the tenant. The remainder is to be returned 14 days after the determination of the amount of the charges, or in any event, not later than 30 days after the termination, return of keys and demand by the tenant.

4. If you don't ask for the security deposit to be returned, the landlord doesn't have to give it back to you. Yes or no?

No. The landlord is required to send the refund to the tenant's last known address.

5. A landlord may enter an apartment:

a. at reasonable hours and with reasonable notice.

b. for the purpose of inspection, repair or to show the apartment to prospective tenants or owners.

c. without tenant's consent in emergencies or an extended absence by the tenant.

d. all of the above.

Answer: d. It is the landlord's responsibility to comply with these restrictions. It also is the tenant's responsibility to allow lawful access.

If you have any other questions on landlord-tenant responsibilities, call or drop by the CRB office in the Student Governing Association office in the Union.

Editor's note: This is the last article in a five-week series dealing with consumer issues. The writer is the director of Consumer Relations Board.

Students to elect new K-State ambassadors

By LAURI DIEHL
Collegian Reporter

The problem is selecting two students who can represent the diversity of all K-State students.

K-State Ambassadors present the image of students to people outside the University. They serve as official student representatives at alumni events, the Landon Lecture series, high school recruiting sessions and when dignitaries visit campus.

New ambassadors will be voted on today and Thursday giving students a voice in which of the six aining candidates should be awarded the position.)

The six finalists for the two ambassador positions are Randall Hildebrand, junior in chemical science; Mark Jones, junior in pre-design professions; Doug Osborn, junior in mechanical engineering; Debra Rolph, junior in pre-law; Pam Greene, junior in restaurant management; and Theresa Korst, junior in radio and television.

The new ambassadors will be announced at halftime of this Saturday's Homecoming football game between K-State and Iowa State University.

Ambassador selection is a four-part process. Interested students complete an application and are then interviewed by a panel of eight seniors. The panel selects certain applicants to proceed to the next step — interviews with a panel of faculty members and the past year's ambassadors. The candidates selected by this second panel are voted on by the student body during Homecoming week.

This year, 22 students applied and the selection process narrowed the field down to a final six.

Jeff Dillon, senior in agricultural economics and an ambassador last year, said the panels judge students on several criteria.

"They have to be here at least one year after Homecoming," Dillon said. "The panels use academic achievement, activities and personality as criteria."

The ambassadors attend alumni banquets, do student recruiting and work with the Alumni Association and the President's Office, he said.

Julie Martin, senior in life sciences and also an ambassador last year, said the work is time-consuming, but valuable.

"We ended up going somewhere about once a week," Martin said. "It was definitely worth the time. It enables the alumni to relate to the University, so if they're ever called on a tele-fund, they will be up to date."

The ambassador system has not always existed, and for many years, there was a Homecoming queen and attendants. Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs, said the women's movement caused the system to be changed.

"For a year or two, both a king and queen were honored," Peters said. "I don't know who came up with the idea for the ambassador program, but Blue Key began sponsoring it."

This is the seventh year for the ambassador program.

The change from queens and attendants was a step in the right direction, Peters said.

"It has moved from a one-week event to something that serves the University for a whole year," he said. "The ambassador program has been very successful"

Ambassadors receive $1,000 scholarships and gain valuable experience, Martin said.

"It's good experience meeting and dealing with people," she said. "And it's a lot of fun."

Dillon agreed the program was a good experience.

"I would do it again," he said. "If someone enjoys traveling and promoting something they believe in, being an ambassador is great."

Randall Hildebrand

K-State, to me, is a place built on people. It is a place of learning — academically, socially and philosophically — where goals and attitudes are defined and shaped. It is a place that has much to be proud of: strong academic programs and standards, healthy athletic traditions and a wide array of clubs and organizations to become involved in.

More importantly, the foundations of K-State are its people. It is people that make the education worthwhile, give encouragement during the learning process, and supply the reason for developing a usable skill. Since everything of value relates back to people, we need to be concerned with the interactions between students, alumni, faculty and prospective students; which is why the Ambassador Program is so necessary.

In response to this need, coupled with my pride in and love for Kansas State University, I would like to represent K-State by being one of its new ambassadors. I would enjoy serving to maintain close ties with those associated with the University. Being a K-State ambassador would allow me to better acquaint others with Kansas State.

Because we are proud of Kansas State, it deserves to be heard about. Regardless of who becomes K-State's next ambassadors, it is important for all of us, including myself, to represent our school well.

Mark Jones

I carry a button on my back pack which says "Everyday is K-State Day." To me this slogan symbolizes the feelings of people here at K-State, especially the students. It indicates we have a special pride that is not only shown during Homecoming but is also carried throughout the year. This is evident in the fact that we as students are willing to put forth our time and effort in working toward the betterment of our University. This special pride cannot be easily defined. It is just a feeling that touches each individual and stems from the respect and warmth shared by the students.

My sensitivity to these feelings will better serve me in communicating our views and ideas to alumni and friends of the University. I feel my broad involvement in University activities will help me to better understand these views and ideas which will be important in gaining the respect necessary for effective communication.

I believe the combination of the friendly students and dedicated faculty form a solid foundation for the proud tradition at K-State. This tradition was started by our alumni, and it is important that we add this to our enthusiasm when we make contact with prospective students as well as alumni. It is vital to show them that the Purple Pride is still as strong as ever at K-State.

As ambassador, I would work toward continuing this tradition and carry with me the "Everyday" pride that makes K-State unique.

Doug Osborn

Homecoming is an exciting time of the semester. It is a chance for all the students, faculty and alumni to band together to show their pride in K-State. It is an enthusiastic week that reaches its peak following a Wildcat victory on Saturday. As KSU Ambassador, it would be my responsibility to hold on to that Homecoming atmosphere throughout the year and take it with me wherever I go.

The alumni support of the University is vital. The University would stand little chance of continuing its existence without their backing. They play a bigger role in providing us with our education than any of us probably realize. The tie between the alumni and us, the students, needs to be close. I would look forward to strengthening this bond and thus, helping to ensure that education excellence at KSU continues.

I am very proud of Kansas State as my friends at Oklahoma State found out last week. I do not expect being ambassador to be the easiest thing I have ever done, but it could be one of the most rewarding. It is regretful that more people are not given this opportunity. Therefore, if I were chosen, it would be a tremendous thrill and honor to serve you as ambassador.

Pam Greene

As our alumni "Track Back" and support the "Purple Pack," they bring their memories and enthusiasm with them. Homecoming is a special event for it creates excitement and instills pride in present, past and even future K-Staters. A certain closeness exists between those of a common bond much like the ties between students and alumni of KSU.

What creates this bond? Warm and friendly people, a beautiful campus, special events, athletics, classes, awards, organizations, extra-curricular activities, guest lecturers, common experiences and contagious purple pride all play a part. Our alumni laid the groundwork which created what our campus is today. We, as students, should strive to enhance the bond making K-State better and keeping us all "Trackin' Back" with pride.

I feel very fortunate to be able to attend a college like K-State and even more to have had the opportunity to become involved and assume leadership roles in various activities. These opportunities have increased my knowledge of K-State and all the elements needed to make it work.

The best recruiter is a satisfied customer, which is why I desire to be a K-State ambassador. I have truly enjoyed the various experiences I have had as a K-State student and would be proud to share them with alumni, friends, guests and future students of K-State.

Theresa Korst

Pride. It's something we overlook sometimes in our hectic student lives. But here at K-State, we have a lot to be proud of — things we will learn from and always remember. Consider our football team's upset over Oklahoma State. They won because of their persistency. Our cheerleaders are ranked number one in the nation this year. They're practicing countless hours to ensure success at the national competition.

This winning spirit and tradition isn't reserved only for athletics. Look around our campus — it's beautiful! From the limestone beginnings of our heritage in Seaton Hall to the modern technology of Durland Phase II, we have the best of both worlds. A $6.1 million investment in our future; we're not a school that remains stagnant, content with the here and now.

As students we're matching that investment by committing $5.5 million to the new coliseum. We should take pride in this unselfish foresight — just as those before us did when they initially funded the Union and the Rec Complex.

There are countless academic achievements of both students and faculty members to take pride in as well.

My tremendous pride is one of the main reasons I'd like to be an ambassador. The respect I have for K-State will always be with me. I hope to see the proud heritage we possess continue to prosper and remain important to those who have passed before us as well as to those yet to come.

Debra Rolph

Homecoming, to me, conjures up memories of the past and hope for the future. My first encounter with a K-State Homecoming took place in 1976. Being a young eighth-grader, I sat in the alumni section in awe of the college atmosphere, the spirit of the students, the pride of the alumni, the colors, the floats, the enthusiasm. But amidst the blur, the event that stood out was the announcement of the new ambassadors. I was thrilled with the fact that I knew one of the candidates and thus, had a stake in who won. The right one did, and I can remember the excitement of the victory followed by my many questions as to the role of an ambassador.

Because of that memory, I've always held high regards for the role of an ambassador in representing the student body of K-State to both alumni and to potential students. The ambassador's role is not only to reach out to alumni who have been a part of past K-State horizons, but also to have a role in determining the future horizons of K-State by encouraging potential students to attend this University. It is exciting to view the many ways K-State has developed over the years and to look to the future of the University.

Irish fall from AP poll; Nebraska still No. 1

By The Associated Press

The University of Pittsburgh, which knocked off Notre Dame last Saturday, also succeeded in knocking the Fighting Irish out of The Associated Press College Football Poll on Tuesday.

Pitt's Panthers, 21-16 winners in South Bend, Ind., improved their record to 7-2 and returned to the Top Twenty for the first time in seven weeks, clinging to 20th place.

Notre Dame, absent from the list for four weeks before moving into a tie for 19th place two weeks ago and edging up one spot last week, fell back out of the rankings.

At the top of the chart, Nebraska, Texas, Auburn and Georgia retained the top four positions while Miami, fifth a week ago, and Illinois, formerly sixth, traded places.

Nebraska, an easy 72-29 winner over Iowa State, received 58 of 60 first-place votes and 1,198 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Texas, which squeaked past Houston 9-3, got the two remaining first-place ballots and 1,140 points. Last week the Cornhuskers received 57 of 59 first-place votes and outpointed the Longhorns 1,178-1,123 in the balloting.

Auburn, receiving 1,063 points in the voting, held on to third place with a 35-23 victory over Maryland that dropped the Terrapins from seventh place to 11th, while Georgia, a 10-9 winner over Florida, remained fourth with 999 points and dropped the Gators from ninth to 14th.

Auburn's Tigers visit the Bulldogs on Saturday, with Georgia gunning for the Southeastern Conference title and a fourth consecutive trip to the Sugar Bowl.

Illinois moved up to fifth with 975 points by virtue of its 50-23 pounding of Minnesota, and Miami, following its 12-7 victory over East Carolina, slipped down one place to sixth with 951 points.

Southern Methodist, a 20-6 winner over Rice, rose from eighth to seventh, Michigan ripped Purdue 42-10 and moved up four places to ninth, and Ohio State crushed Indiana 56-17 and also rose four berths to 10th, replacing North Carolina, which dropped from 10th to 19th as a result of its 16-3 loss to Clemson.

In the Second Ten are Maryland, Iowa, Boston College, Florida, West Virginia, Alabama, Clemson, Washington, North Carolina and Pitt. Last week it was Oklahoma, BYU, Michigan, Ohio State, Iowa, Boston College, West Virginia, Notre Dame, Alabama and Washington.

Colleges to sign prep basketball stars

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Many of the nation's top high school basketball stars will pick out a college in the next few days, taking advantage of the second annual early signing period.

Indiana, Notre Dame and North Carolina State were among the schools expected to corral some of the biggest prizes.

The Collegiate Commissioners Association, which has administered the national letter-of-intent program since the late 1960s, agreed to experiment with the early signing date last year.

Instead of waiting until the traditional mid-April signing period, high school seniors can cut short the frenzy of the recruiting process by signing a binding letter of intent Nov. 9-16. About 85 youngsters signed early last year, roughly one-third of the total who were given basketball scholarships by NCAA Division I schools. Dave Didion, a member of the NCAA staff who works closely with basketball recruiting, said about the same number is expected to sign early this year.

Few changes in the turbulent world of college sports have been met with such universal approval as the early signing period. There had been some concern among high school coaches that youngsters who sign during the early period might play with less intensity and enthusiasm their senior seasons.

"But that did not turn out to be the case at all," Didion said. "High school kids are very competitive."

Nobody slowed down a bit. The high school coaches we've talked to all said their kids who signed early played just as hard as they ever did. And they were as happy as everybody else to have the recruiting pressures taken off their kid."

Of the top 75 or so prospects, Didion said, about 25-30 are expected to sign early. The list includes this class's consensus No. 1 prospect, 6-foot-11, 240-pound Chris Washburn of Laurinburg, N.C., who has announced that defending national champion North Carolina State will be his next home.

Indiana Coach Bobby Knight has received public commitments from three of the top players. DelRay Brooks, a 6-3 guard from Michigan City, Ind., Kreigh Smith, 6-6, Tipton, Ind., and Steve Eyl, 6-6, Hamilton, Ohio, have all said they will sign with Indiana in the next week.

Another of the nation's top center prospects, 6-11 Danny Manning, has said he will sign with Kansas. It has been reported that Notre Dame will get early commitments from Gary Voce, 6-9, the Bronx, and Matt Beeuwsaert, 6-6, Santa Ana, Calif.

Kentucky is ready to sign Richard "Master Blaster" Madison, a 6-7 forward from Memphis Northside High School.

College football needs playoffs

The ultimate goal of college football teams is to be the No. 1 ranked team in the land — national champions.

But is the team that is ranked No. 1 after all the bowl games are completed and votes are tabulated the "true" No. 1, or is it as former Penn State quarterback, Todd Blackledge said, "There are some people who will say we're just paper champions (Penn State was national champs in 1982) and it's hard to argue against that."

Last year, the Nittany Lions (11-1) were followed by Southern Methodist University (11-0-1).

SMU felt — and deservedly so — they should have been crowned national champs because they had a better record.

This season, there is a strong possibility that Texas and Nebraska will both finish their seasons undefeated, and Nebraska will end up No. 1 just because they started their schedule one week earlier than anyone else and got a headstart in the balloting.

HUEY COUNTS
Sports Columnist

Nearly every year there are arguments concerning who the best team is. The national champion is currently determined by two polls — The Associated Press poll, started in 1936, and the United Press International poll, which began 14 years later.

The AP voters are a collection of about five dozen writers and UPI voters are made up of three dozen Division I-A coaches.

The major strike against separate polls is that they don't always agree. Since the beginning of simultaneous AP and UPI rankings, the pollsters have crowned different champions in six different years.

The strangest case occurred in 1973 when the coaches voted Alabama champs, placing Notre Dame fourth. The same year, the writers put Notre Dame on the top and Alabama fourth.

It's contradictions such as this that show the need for a national playoff schedule.

A plan I feel would be most feasible to implement and not deter from the popularity of the bowl games, while at the same time making them more important would be incorporating them into a playoff system.

The first step would be persuading the bowl committees to eliminate the automatic bids given to conference winners. This would help assure that the best teams get the best bids.

Then each year an independent rating service — possibly a computerized one — would select the top teams or "seeds."

The top eight teams would play in the four major bowl games — Cotton, Orange, Sugar and Rose — with the top seed playing the eighth seed, the second seed playing the seventh seed and so on.

The matchups in the minor bowl games would be determined in the same manner.

After the bowl games are over, the four winners of the major bowl games would advance to the semifinals the following weekend. The semifinals game winners would meet the following week to find the true national champion.

It's time to let the question of who's No. 1 be answered on the playing field and not by voters who often have never even seen some of the teams play. A playoff system appears to be the best format available.

Intramural roundup

Volleyball matches in the intramural divisions are being played Sunday through Thursday nights at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex.

The following are standings of the top teams in each of the intramural volleyball leagues. Because of the large number of teams entered in the volleyball competition and because of limited space, only teams having the top records in each league will be publicized each week.

Officials review plan for arterial update

By LUCINDA ELLISON
Manhattan Editor

City commissioners spent about two hours Tuesday afternoon reviewing an update of the southern arterial design during a work session.

The update, presented by Ed Mulcahy of Johnson, Brickell, Mulcahy & Associates Inc., a Kansas City engineering firm, included several alternate designs to the original plan.

One plan was submitted by the state of Kansas, while two alternatives were presented to the firm by Vern Osborne, a civil engineer and owner of the Old Town Mall shopping center.

The 2.1 mile project, which will cost about $5.6 million, will divert traffic from downtown Manhattan around the south side of the city. The four-lane arterial will require the rerouting of Kansas Highway 18 around Fort Riley Boulevard, down El Paso Street and over the Kansas River viaduct. The Rock Island railroad tracks will be removed and the Union Pacific Railroad yard will be moved east of town. U.S. Highway 24 will connect to Tuttle Creek Boulevard with an access point to Leavenworth Street.

Mulcahy presented an updated version of the plan, which moved the arterial's right of way to the north of that designated in the preliminary design.

"The primary concern, of course, was in the area of Griffith Field," Mulcahy said.

The new design eliminates problems with the stone wall and the sheet metal fencing located at the west end of Griffith Field, a softball field. The preliminary design would have caused moving the stone wall 20 feet for the arterial construction, he said.

Although the new plan would alleviate the problem in the Griffith Field area, moving the road to the north would require acquisition of property owned by Powell Brothers and would encroach upon the pool at the Douglass Center.

"I think the first concern here is the question of safety and the weighing of impacts," Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood, said. "I think we need to look at people before we look at a stone wall."

Commissioner Dave Fiser suggested a slight deviation of the road to the south to allow for the stone wall, which would also eliminate acquisition of any property.

After other comments, Mulcahy agreed the firm would investigate other possibilities in eliminating the problems and report later to the commissioners.

The second area of concern involved the intersection of the arterial with Fort Riley Boulevard and 17th Street.

Safety factors as well as accessibility of the four designs for the intersection were discussed by the commissioners before approving one design with alterations.

The new design will also eliminate acquisition of five structures in the area.

In further business, commissioners reviewed an environmental assessment statement, a document concerning the impact downtown redevelopment will have on the environment.

Lindamood, who said she disagreed with several areas in the document, aired her concerns during the work session.

"Silence is agreement. I'm not going to be silent," she said.

The document is required for final negotiation of the $10 million Urban Development Action Grant recently approved for the city by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, Gary Stith, community development director, said.

After a 30-day local review, the city will submit the document to HUD for final review and approval.

Worn McCain stage, lift to be rebuilt

By PATTI SHIPP
Collegian Reporter

While students are taking a break over the Christmas holidays, McCain Auditorium will be undergoing a change.

Fred Ferguson, director of building utilities for University facilities, said a new stage and lift floor will be installed in the auditorium.

The existing floor and stage cart rails will be taken out and replaced by a pine floor, he said.

"Originally, the floor was built to run some big stage carts on the floor. It has some wide metal inserts in the floor that they don't use any more and are somewhat of a problem. We are taking those out and getting rid of them," Ferguson said.

Except for the cart rails, there will be no difference between the original stage, built in 1970, and the new one. The floor will be the same size and painted black, he said.

The installation will begin after final examinations and will take about 30 days. The work is scheduled to be completed before the auditorium is needed for activities during the spring semester.

A new floor is needed because of damage due to wear and by water on the existing floor, Ferguson said.

"There was a problem when the roof was being replaced on McCain a couple of years ago. There was some water damage done to the stage, especially to the lift," he said. The lift is a moveable part of the floor on the front of the stage which is sometimes used as an orchestra pit.

The construction will cost $43,680 and will be funded from University facilities' Special Maintenance Fund.

"Approximately $20,000 of that is for the material. The rest will be for labor to install the floor, which will be done by our own K-State carpenters," Ferguson said.

The Special Maintenance Fund is allocated to University facilities by the Board of Regents.

University facilities submits an itemized list of things that need to be done. The regents then select a small portion from that list to fund, he said.

Also from this fund, University Facilities will renovate the air conditioning system in the music wing of McCain, Ferguson said.

The renovation will occur during the first months of the spring semester and will cost about $8,000, he said.

Students from the College of Engineering studied the air conditioning system for a class project, then made recommendations to University facilities. Many of the recommendations were followed, he said.

"We (University facilities) can take this study to the state as part of our justification when we ask for funds," Ferguson said. "We like to take advantage of this kind of help when we can."

Senate contemplates change in midterm grade notices

By MICHELE SAUER
Staff Writer

All undergraduate students may receive midterm grade notices in the future if they are doing poorly in a class.

"Instead of sending a midterm letter grade to freshmen and incoming students, we propose notifying all students who are doing unsatisfactorily in a class," said John Eck, chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee and professor of physics.

Problems with the current system are that many instructors do not submit midterm grades, and the letter grades are no real indication of how a student will do at the end of the semester, Eck said. Under the change, students doing satisfactorily in a class would not be notified.

"This (change) would be a more accurate representation of how a student is doing in a class," Eck said.

The change will be proposed to the executive committee of Faculty Senate, which will decide whether to put it on the agenda for a vote by the entire faculty senate, Eck said. The earliest the proposal could be voted on would be December.

"If it were passed, we'd want it implemented as soon as possible," Eck said.

Local anti-rape coalition to seek public support at forum

By LUCINDA ELLISON
Manhattan Editor

Public support — that's what it's all about.

Manhattan residents will have the opportunity tonight to offer support during a public forum against rape.

The forum, sponsored by the Manhattan Coalition Against Rape, will be at 7:30 in the City Auditorium.

"I think that's very important that people just show up. It (participation) will be what it takes to make the forum work and what can kill it," said Judith Davis, director of the Regional Crisis Center. "People make it work."

"There really is a broad interest (among community members)," Davis said. "We've gotten a nice response already with people calling in and asking 'What can I do?'"

Serving two purposes, the forum is designed to educate the public about rape as well as offer citizens an opportunity to vent anger, give suggestions and volunteer,

Davis said. Four speakers will begin the program with educational aspects about the issue.

Judy Davis, the founder and former director of the Regional Crisis Center, is scheduled to begin the forum. Lt. Steve French of the Riley County Police Department will talk about rape prevention, identification of rapists and the Kansas statutes on rape.

James Boyer, professor of curriculum and instruction, will address the concerns of the black community because of strong racist overtones present in the rape issue, Judith Davis said. She will wrap up the program with any issues which have not been discussed by previous speakers.

The forum will also kickoff the whistle alert program in Manhattan, Judith Davis said. The whistle alert plan was initiated by the coalition as a means of awareness and organization of the community against rape. Judith Davis plans to describe the program and demonstrate the type of whistle the coalition will purchase for the program.

Funding, currently a problem for the coalition in initiating the whistle alert program, will be briefly discussed during the forum, she said.

"Funding is still a big problem," she said. "Funding wouldn't be a problem if we had one or two people to donate time (to funding)."

The coalition has reviewed several options, including contributions and two potential sources for loans to start the program. Although private donations are an option, the project cannot belong to any certain business, Judith Davis said.

After purchasing the whistles from WhistleStop, a trademark company which manufactures them, the coalition hopes to sell the whistles to interested community members.

"If we really need to, we'll give them away. A lot of people will do a little more (purchase more than one whistle), which will really keep the program going," she said.

The Manhattan whistle alert program will be similar to WhistleStop, a program which began in Edgewater, Ill., but will differ in the type of educational information circulated with the whistles. The coalition plans to produce and distribute its own leaflets with the whistles.

"In a way, we can't stop the trademark (WhistleStop), but this is our own program," Judith Davis said. "Not only are we interested in putting out information on the whistles, but also in putting out a broad kind of information."

"There's just so much education that needs to be done. A lot of the old myths are still alive."

Although the whistle is a controversial device, the mechanism has a strong symbolic value, she said. In addition to being a way to get help, wearing a whistle may cause a continual cognizance of rape.

"It would be devastating if certain people got the idea you can have a whistle and be safe," Judith Davis said. "The point is, it gets human attention. That's the only thing we can expect from it."

Block organization is also a consideration in the whistle alert program. The plan includes specifying a certain block area in which residents are responsible for responding to whistles when heard in their area.

"You may not feel it prudent to go (to the origin of the sound), but you can open a door and blow a whistle, or call the police or shine a light. The idea is that we get up and do something," Judith Davis said. "Our job is not law enforcement, but you can make a fuss without interfering and that helps."

"The thing that is special about rape is that the rapist depends on the terror and isolation of the victim. If someone else knows (about the attack), that has an effect," she said.

Judith Davis said continual involvement and awareness will be needed.

"If there is the kind of interest I anticipate, I think there will be ongoing support," she said. Because of the high turnover rate in the city, a main concern is instilling awareness in new community members as quickly as possible, Judith Davis said.

"Everything we've (the coalition) talked about has been short term. What we really need to be getting about is figuring out why rape continues to be a problem," she said.

A student walking near Cardwell Hall discovers an umbrella does little good against Wednesday's gusty northwesterly winds in the wake of a cold front that pelted Manhattan with rain and snow and sent temperatures plunging.

Winter hits Kansas with wind, flurries

By The Collegian Staff and Wire Reports

Wednesday's weather was the best, or maybe the worst, of three worlds — rain, snow and wind.

A cold front pushed across the state Tuesday and Wednesday, sending temperatures plummeting and blanketing the northwest part of the state with two to three inches of snow. The National Weather Service predicted freezing temperatures across the state for Wednesday night.

In Manhattan, a series of rain showers and thunderstorms pelted leaf-covered streets. A stretch of Anderson Avenue from campus almost to Westloop Shopping Center was without street lights for an undetermined amount of time shortly after midnight Wednesday.

At the campus weather station in Cardwell Hall, officials reported .69 of an inch of precipitation for the 24-hour period ending at 8 a.m. Wednesday. A high of 58 and a low of 38 were reported during the same time.

Strong northwest winds followed the front with gusts to 40 miles an hour reported in central and western Kansas.

By midmorning Wednesday, skies had cleared in the west as the front progressed eastward, bringing rain mixed with snow to central and eastern Kansas. A freeze warning was issued for the eastern part of the state Wednesday night as the predicted freeze arrived about 10 days behind schedule.

Overnight lows were to range from the mid-20s in the west to about 30 in the southeast by Thursday morning.

A gradual warming trend was predicted for Thursday and Friday with highs climbing from the upper 40s under cloudy skies on Thursday to the mid- to upper 50s under sunny skies on Friday.

The extended forecast for the weekend called for high temperatures in the 50s and 60s and lows in the 30s and 40s with no precipitation.

Leader authorizes council for Grenada's elections

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — Sir Paul Scoon, Grenada's governor general, appointed a nine-member advisory council Wednesday to serve as a provisional government and prepare for elections.

No elections have been held since a revolutionary government seized power 4½ years ago.

Scoon is recognized as Grenada's constitutional authority by the United States and eastern Caribbean nations who invaded Oct. 25 after a government coup.

He told a news conference that all the council members were Grenadians and free of political ties or vested interests that might conflict with their duties.

The announcement came shortly after U.S. officials said Scoon and Cuban officials had agreed that two Cubans — the embassy first secretary and a communications technician — will remain on the island.

Scoon, a Grenadian, was formally appointed by Queen Elizabeth II as her representative on the island — a former British colony and member of the Commonwealth. The queen is titular head of the Commonwealth and queen of Grenada as well.

Scoon named Alister McIntyre, a U.N. development official, to head the council as soon as he is released from his duties as a deputy secretary-general in charge of the United Nations Council on Trade and Development.

Reagan mixes fun, business at stop in Japan

By The Associated Press

TOKYO — President Reagan, welcomed by Emperor Hirohito and flag-waving school children, cautioned his hosts Wednesday that failure to settle trade disputes between the United States and Japan could damage their political relations.

Uniformed sentries, part of a 90,000-member security force deployed for Reagan's protection, stood guard on downtown streets and atop buildings as the president arrived for three days of critical talks with Japanese officials on trade, defense, energy and finance issues.

After a formal welcoming ceremony under gray skies in the courtyard of the ornate Akasaka

Palace, Reagan toured the Imperial Palace with the 82-year-old Hirohito and held the first of two business meetings with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone.

A senior Reagan administration official, briefing reporters afterward, said the two leaders discussed U.S.-Japanese trade differences only in broad terms, but that Reagan was "very businesslike" and "straightforward" in raising concerns about a projected $22 billion U.S. trade deficit this year with Japan.

The official, speaking only on condition that he not be identified, said Reagan emphasized "the importance of making progress on these issues, both because of their economic impact and also because of the effect that failure to solve them would have on our political relationship."

Japanese Foreign Ministry spokesman Yoshio Karita told reporters that Reagan referred to Asia as the "new frontier of the world" and stressed the importance of maintaining close ties.

Reagan came to Japan not to negotiate solutions himself, this official said, but to "put some general impetus" into talks being conducted by other officials of both countries.

An agreement is expected to be announced today for creation of a bilateral working group to address U.S. concern about the weakness of the Japanese yen in relation to the American dollar. A weak yen makes American goods less competitive in Japanese markets and Japanese exports relatively expensive in the United States.

In talks with Nakasone, Reagan was reported to have cited growing sentiment in the United States for protectionist trade policies, exemplified by a House-approved bill intended to curb Japanese auto imports by requiring that cars sold in the United States contain a certain share of parts made in America.

Nakasone expressed concern about states which calculate an international company's taxes on the basis of worldwide earnings rather than income derived in that state.

Reagan will leave early Saturday for South Korea, where he will address the National Assembly and visit U.S. troops at the Demilitarized Zone between North and South Korea.

Arafat arranges truce after day of shelling

By The Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Lebanon — Palestinian rebels backed by Syria rained hundreds of shells on PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's last Middle East bastion Wednesday, but an Arafat spokesman said a truce was arranged later in the day.

"We pray this is serious but we are very skeptical" the truce will hold, said the spokesman, who asked not to be identified.

Wednesday's withering barrage cornered Arafat in this northern port city. His spokesman said shelling diminished "significantly" after the truce agreement, but Arafat strongholds in the Baddawi refugee camp and Tripoli still were being hit.

There was no immediate confirmation of a cease-fire by the rebels, but sources said earlier that Arab nations had reached "an agreement in principle" on a truce.

The rebel barrage prevented the Palestine Liberation Organization leader from visiting loyalist holdouts at the besieged Baddawi refugee camp outside Tripoli. Black smoke from raging fires hung over the port city of 500,000.

Arafat's spokesman said the truce was to be effective at 7 p.m. (noon EST), and shelling diminished "significantly" after that time. But state-run Beirut Radio said Arafat strongholds in Baddawi and Tripoli still were being hit after that hour.

"We will adhere to the cease-fire as long as the other side adheres to it," the spokesman said.

But Arafat visited maimed supporters in hospitals, roving the streets in a chauffeured Jeep while shells from rebels in the north and east occasionally slammed into neighborhoods near his office.

Arafat visited maimed supporters in hospitals, roving the streets in a chauffeured jeep while shells from rebel positions in the north and east occasionally slammed into neighborhoods near his office.

"There's been no progress in talks anywhere," Arafat told reporters who followed him to the Islamic Hospital, where he chatted with patients and signed autographs.

The PLO mutineers have chased most of Arafat's estimated 8,000 loyalists into their last stronghold in the Middle East — Tripoli, 50 miles north of Beirut. More than 1,000 people have been killed since the fighting began Nov. 3, according to Lebanese police.

The rebels claim Arafat has betrayed the PLO's aim of wresting a homeland from Israel. Arafat claims the rebels have been deceived by Syria, which he says wants to dominate the PLO.

Syria denies involvement in the mutiny, but Syrian troops in north Lebanon have been openly supporting the mutineers with tanks and artillery.

Several reporters following Arafat asked him about an erroneous broadcast report Tuesday that he had fled the country. He shouted: "You have eyes!"

On Tuesday, Arafat abandoned his vow to fight to the death in Tripoli, saying he was responding to the pleas of municipal leaders to spare the city a bloodbath. He offered to stop fighting if the rebels did.

The mutineers responded by raining hundreds of shells and rockets on Arafat's remaining positions, intensifying the barrage early Wednesday.

In Damascus, official sources who spoke on condition they not be identified said mediators from three Arab nations worked with Syrian government officials and rebel PLO leaders to end the fighting. But the sources said rebels would not agree to a truce unless Arafat leaves Lebanon and never returns.

Arafat has not responded to the demands, the sources said.

Arafat's chief military aide, Khalil Wazir, said there would be no discussions about Arafat leaving until a cease-fire was reached.

Poetry reading scheduled tonight

An Open Poetry Reading will take place at 7 tonight in room 213 of the Union.

Persons interested in reading their own poetry before a live audience may sign up for the reading at the English department in Denison Hall.

Session explores intellectual failure

"The Failure of Past Intellectual and Spiritual Elements to Check Nationalistic Tendencies" will be the topic of a Fred L. Parrish colloquium today in the Parrish Seminar Room in Eisenhower Hall.

The colloquium will be convened as a discussion group, a format favored by Parrish.

Parrish was a member of the faculty, department head and emeritus professor of the Department of History over a period of more than fifty years.

The emeritus faculty for the seminar are James C. Carey, Loveland, Colo., Golda Crawford and Donald Parrish, both of Manhattan. Political science professors Marvin Heath, Washburn University, and Earl Rohrbach, Emporia State University, Board of Regents member John G. Montgomery, Junction City, Fort Hays State University English professor Clifford Edwards and Wichita State University history professor Donald Douglas also will participate.

UFM award honors state librarian

The fifth annual "Grassroots Community Education Award," presented by the University for Man, honors Vee Friesner, director of Library Development for the Kansas State Library in Topeka.

Friesner has been instrumental in planning and implementation of several UFM projects initiated through rural libraries in Colorado, Oklahoma and Kansas.

Owen Koepp, University provost, presented the award yesterday at the UFM house.

Home ec alumni to meet Saturday

The annual College of Home Economics alumni meeting will be Saturday in Justin Hall. Tours and registration begin at 8:30 a.m. In the afternoon, those not attending the football game will be briefed on home economics research.

Homecoming parachute planned

Three members of the K-State Parachute Club will make a demonstration jump during the Homecoming halftime activities of the K-State vs. Iowa State football game Saturday at KSU stadium.

Making the jump will be Terry Bair, sophomore in pre-law, Jim McChesney, junior in pre-physical therapy, and Mark Young, graduate student in chemistry.

Wind speed of 15 or more miles per hour will necessitate cancellation of the demonstration.

Senate to read request from architect student

By The Collegian Staff

A bill seeking $450 to help defray costs for 15 students to attend the American Institute of Architects national student convention will receive first reading at Student Senate tonight.

According to the bill, members attending the convention will have to provide $3,010.25 of their own money to attend the convention in Atlanta from Nov. 22-26. The $450 would be taken from the Reserves for Contingencies account.

Senate will vote on a bill that would revamp the senate aide program, providing a pool of 20 aides from which senators can ask for aid. The system would not give aides class credit as the current system does.

Another bill to receive a vote concerns beefing up senators' contact with students. The bill would require senators to visit at least two student groups recognized by the University Activities Board or organized living groups.

One of the visits would have to be made by the halfway point of the fall semester and the 10th week of the spring semester. Senators would have to hand in a summary of the visit to the Communications Standing Committee, which must also approve the visit.

Each missed visit would result in an unexcused absence for the senator.

Senate meets in the Union's Big Eight Room at 7 p.m.

At last Thursday's meeting, senate approved funding of $750 for the University's literary magazine, Touchstone, to help pay printing costs.

Investigators seek assistance to solve weekend slaying

By The Collegian Staff

Information concerning a suspected homicide which occurred Friday approximately 4½ miles south of Interstate 70 on Kansas 177 is being sought by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

KBI spokesman Don Winsor said Martin K. Anderson of Emporia was fatally shot between 6 and 6:15 p.m.

Friday. His body was found in a ditch near his southbound van. The van was parked on the west side of the highway with the emergency lights flashing.

Students who were in the area Friday or who may have information about the shooting are asked to call the Geary County Sheriff's Department at 762-2323 or the KBI in Topeka at 267-5000.

Police arrest local man in attempted rape case

A Manhattan man was arrested early Wednesday morning in connection with an attempted rape which allegedly occurred in the early morning hours Oct. 16.

According to Lt. Steve French of the Riley County Police Department, K-State student Roderick Hanks, 108 Longview Drive, is being held in the Riley County Jail in lieu of $60,000 bond on two counts of aggravated battery and one count of attempted rape.

Official seeks aid for Glenn caucus

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Former state Democratic Party Chairman Robert Tilton has been selected to lead the state delegate selection process for U.S. Sen. John Glenn's bid for the Democratic nomination for president.

Tilton, who served two years as party chairman, will work on the Ohio senator's behalf in capturing a majority of Kansas' 44 delegates to the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco.

"John Glenn represents the best hope for Democrats in the upcoming election," Tilton said in a prepared statement. Tilton joins Gov. John Carlin and his wife Karen and Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger of Kansas City, Kan., on the Glenn bandwagon. Beth Hartsook of Topeka is the state campaign coordinator.

Because Kansas does not have a presidential primary election, a caucus system is used to select delegates to the national convention.

City board sets public discussion of downtown mall development

By LEE WHITE
Collegian Reporter

Mel Roebuck is coming to town. And business owners in the areas earmarked for destruction to make way for redevelopment will have a chance to ask him questions about the proposed downtown mall.

Roebuck, vice president of Forest City Enterprises, mall developer, is scheduled to meet with the Downtown Redevelopment Advisory Board at 11 a.m. Dec. 7 at City Hall. A public forum is scheduled for an undetermined time that night at the Senior Service Center, 412 Leavenworth St.

The board announced the visit at its regular meeting Wednesday. Members also heard reports from Community Development Director Gary Stith about redevelopment and preliminary approval of a $10 million Urban Development Action Grant.

The appraisal process to determine "fair" market value for businesses in the redevelopment area is to begin in January, Stith said. Two appraisers, Kevin Nunnik of Olathe and David Craig of Topeka, have been selected to carry out this process, he said.

A third appraiser, who will review the appraisals made by the other two, is to be named at Tuesday's city commission meeting, Stith said.

In the appraisal process, "fair" market value will be established for a business and then considered by the commission, Stith said.

Board member Richard Burke, owner of Burke's Shoes, 404 Poyntz Ave., and The Shoe Center, 312 Poyntz Ave., expressed concern that some businesses have begun to question their support of the mall since the UDAG was tentatively approved.

"The coffee talk is that once this thing (redevelopment) goes through, they're out of business," Burke said.

Some business owners fear that national chain stores will prevail in the mall, thus taking retail trade from merchants in other parts of downtown and keeping them out of the mall, Burke said.

In a mall, higher rent is relative to a higher volume of sales, Burke said, but some business owners don't understand this.

Board Chairman Bernd Foerster, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, agreed that the board should pay special attention to the needs and fears of business owners.

"This is the night before the wedding and some people are getting cold feet," Foerster said.

House retains milk subsidies, rejects price support slashes

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The dairy industry preserved a decades-long grip on its own government subsidy program Wednesday as the House voted 325-91 to set up a 15-month program to pay farmers not to produce milk.

The action followed a 250-174 vote to reject an immediate 11 percent cut in milk price supports. Consumer and non-dairy farm groups had argued the cut would help solve the milk surplus problem while bringing down consumer prices.

Pushed hard by the major regional dairy cooperatives, the industry's "compromise" plan would begin paying farmers next year nearly 80 percent of full price for milk they do not produce.

Industry advocates claimed their so-called "paid diversion" program would virtually eliminate the federal dairy stockpile within two years. The plan would pay farmers $10 per hundred pounds to cut up to 30 percent of their output.

The current price-support program for dairy products dates to 1949, but milk producers never have been paid on a national scale not to produce. Such programs have been reserved mainly for grain farmers.

"It's not paying them not to work," said Rep. Tom Daschle, D-S.D. "It's assisting them in maintaining their overhead."

The measure is similar to the dairy portion of a dairy-tobacco bill passed earlier by the Senate. It now goes to a House-Senate negotiating committee to work out differences.

Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y., who sponsored the rejected alternative calling for a simple cut in price supports, predicted that President Reagan would veto the industry's dairy bill.

"They (the administration) have tried to play the game with these pirates up in the Agriculture Committee, and they're going to lose their eye teeth if they continue," Conable told reporters after his plan was rejected.

Conable, backed by a coalition of consumer-advocacy groups, the Farm Bureau and meat producers had called for a straight $1.50 cut in the current $13.10 which farmers are guaranteed they will get for each hundred pounds of milk. Such a move, supporters said, would save shoppers 13 cents a gallon on milk and save them $3.4 billion over two years.

Federal law now guarantees farmers will be paid at least $13.10 for each hundred pounds of milk they produce. To keep the price at that level, the government buys and stores surplus cheese, butter and dried milk.

The industry-backed bill is designed to replace the current law and provide a short-term fix for the surplus problem until Congress writes comprehensive new farm legislation in 1985.

Stephan criticizes parole of murderer

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Blaming "poor judgment and bad laws," Attorney General Robert Stephan condemned the May 1982 parole of Nathaniel "Yorkie" Smith who was convicted in August of killing three people near Iola within three months of his release from prison.

Stephan delivered his conclusion in a seven-page letter to Allen County District Judge John W. White, who presided over Smith's trial and asked for the parole investigation immediately after sentencing him to seven consecutive life terms in prison.

"The inescapable conclusion of your requested inquiry into the Yorkie Smith parole is that poor judgment and bad laws allowed an evil and cruel man to walk the streets of your community and to kill again," Stephan said in the letter.

"While there may always be evil people, we must learn from past mistakes and change the sentencing and parole system to discourage future tragedies."

Stephan released the letter at a news conference and said he hoped the Smith case would prompt the Legislature and Gov. John Carlin to consider a presumptive sentencing system which would make violent inmates serve longer sentences before they become eligible for parole.

Smith, 37, was convicted Aug. 3 of 17 charges for the killing of a woman and two teen-age boys and the beating and sexual assault of another teen-ager in August 1982 near the southeast Kansas community of Iola.

Stephan said the Kansas Adult Authority, the state's parole board, and the Department of Corrections were to blame for Smith's release from the state penitentiary at Lansing on May 27, 1982.

"There isn't any question in my mind that the board (Adult Authority) was negligent in allowing the parole," Stephan said at the news conference.

The attorney general said he based his conclusion on interviews with parole board members and a review of Smith's psychological and presentence reports and the inmate's record while in prison.

Stephan noted that Smith had a long history of disciplinary problems in prison, including sexual assaults on other inmates.

Smith, a native of Iola, was released from the Kansas State Penitentiary in May 1982 after serving about eight years of a 12-year-to-life sentence for second-degree murder conviction in Kansas City, Kan.

That was not his first criminal conviction, however. Smith was convicted in 1965 for two counts of felonious assault on a young man and woman in Iola. He was given two 10-year prison terms, and served time in the state Industrial Reformatory in Hutchinson until his release in September 1971.

Stephan said Smith was transferred by Kansas correctional officials to the Missouri State Penitentiary in June 1979 because of his past disciplinary problems. He was returned to Kansas in April 1981 by Missouri officials who said Smith had been "a management problem since arriving and persisted in disregarding institutional rules."

However, Smith had no further disciplinary problems in the Kansas prison after his return. This change in behavior, according to Stephan, was the apparent reason the Adult Authority approved Smith's parole.

"As far as I'm concerned, he (Smith) learned to manipulate the system," Stephan said in explaining Smith's change.

Parole board members voting in favor of Smith's release were Alfredo Cavillo, Carrol Mills and Simon Roth. All three resigned from the board Monday night at Carlin's request.

"Suffice to say that for one year inmate Smith was not cited or charged with institutional rules violations or further violent sexual and criminal behavior," Stephan said.

"The Kansas Adult Authority weighed correctional staff reports indicating this apparent abrupt behavior conversion against a decade of violent, murderous rage, both in prison and out, and concluded Smith was fit to live among the good people of Iola as a free man," Stephan said.

"I am appalled. One year of acceptable institutional behavior does not outweigh an entire adulthood of sporadic violent outbursts, homosexual assaults and murder."

Smith was convicted of the killings last August of Steven Mangus, 17, Gas; Adeline Fisk, 59, rural Iola; and Thomas Walsh, 17 Iola.

In addition, he was convicted of the beating and sexual assault of a 16-year-old youth from Gas.

The seven life sentences make Smith ineligible for parole for 105 years. They were for his convictions for the three first-degree murder counts and four counts of aggravated kidnapping, one involving each of the victims.

Two of the victims, Fisk and Mangus, were shot a total of eight times with a .22 caliber pistol. Walsh had been stabbed more than 150 times. Their bodies were found in a 24-hour period Aug. 20-21, 1982.

Iola, a community of about 7,000, is about 100 miles south of Topeka.

"While we have the benefit of hindsight in examining Smith's parole, I do not hesitate to conclude the Smith record did not justify parole, and a system which allowed, and in many ways encouraged, the Smith parole demands change," Stephan said.

The attorney general, who has long been a sharp critic of the state parole board, had called for the resignation of board members that voted to release Smith. Stephan said he found it "unpardonable" that the Adult Authority reviewed Smith's record and still released him, and that the Corrections Department recommended the parole.

Smith was denied parole three times before the Adult Authority agreed to the 1982 release. Stephan said there were no written records of the board's interviews or hearings on the Smith case to accurately determine why they approved his release.

However, Stephan said former board member Roth indicated that the board did consider Smith's past problems in prison as well as "positive statements and information contained in Mr. Smith's file."

Parole system has problems

Among the many problems with the corrections system in this nation is a tendency to parole convicts who still represent a danger to society. In Kansas, Gov. John Carlin began to deal with the problem earlier this year by firing three members of the state parole board.

We do not know whether the firings stemmed from the neglect shown by the parole board in the release of Nathaniel "Yorkie" Smith from the Kansas State Penitentiary in May 1982 after he had served eight years of a 12-year-to-life sentence for second-degree murder. But Smith's release is a dark illustration of the carelessness inherent in the nation's parole system.

Smith's criminal record is a list of violent acts — threats, assaults and sexual assaults. We can see no way a responsible parole board, after examining those records, could consider Smith was a potentially law-abiding man who could blend peacefully into society. But members of the Kansas Adult Authority thought he should be given a chance. They were tragically mistaken.

After his release Smith was convicted in the kidnapping deaths of three people and the abduction, beating and sexual assault of another. Smith has since been sentenced to seven consecutive life terms in prison.

Now Smith must serve 102 years before he is eligible for parole. This should serve to keep him isolated from society for the rest of his life. But if our prisons are meant only to isolate those who break the law, we should save the trouble and execute criminals like Smith. If he had been executed when he was convicted of murder eight years before, there would be three more people alive today, and another boy would not have to live with emotional scars the rest of his life.

The release of Smith, who has been in and out of prisons for violent acts since 1965, exemplifies the failure of our parole system. Many convicts do benefit from early parole, but too many dangerous criminals are being released.

The death penalty is not necessarily the right solution to the problem. But until we have found some method of rehabilitation, then execution or long-term imprisonment without parole seem to be the best solutions to deter crime and ensure that innocent citizens are not endangered by the careless decisions of a lax parole board.

Request for student input

Jerry Katlin

Guest Columnist

Student input. Words which are difficult to define, yet always mentioned when discussing student government. Deciding an appropriate way to best utilize the $10,000 Nichols Gymnasium Account established by Student Senate in 1975 is a process which warrants student input. However, has anyone really sat back and defined a process which will best solicit input on a subject?

Some consider surveys the best way to determine student sentiment on a particular subject, but look at the way the collection of fees for the coliseum was handled. A detailed survey was designed by Dr. Don Hoyt, Director of Educational Resources, a professional who works with surveys, and data collection. The survey was conducted, and an overwhelming 75 percent of students polled supported assessing themselves fees to construct a new multi-purpose complex on campus.

With the use of this survey and further research by Student Senators in the form of visitations and tables in the Union, Student Senate by a 42-7 margin passed a bill committing $7 million in student fees toward the construction.

But to some this is not adequate student input. The coliseum is still criticized by some who say too few students were involved in the decision-making process.

So let's analyze another form of gaining student input. A student committee was formed to collect and research data concerning the possible adaptation of Holton Hall. The committee spent more than a year analyzing Holton Hall and investigating whether adaptation would improve the quality of student services within the building.

Advertisements were placed in Collegian inviting students to tour the building and fill out a questionnaire to determine their interest in financing the adaptation of Holton Hall. Included with the tours were visitations by senators to further solicit student input. Finally, Student Senate approved the funding by a 41-16 margin.

Was this an adequate process to gain student input? Evidently not. Again, shouts were heard that students were not allowed to be part of the decision.

Okay, let's try another alternative. Let's go to a student referendum where all students are allowed to cast a vote on an issue. Advertisements in the Collegian are necessary to inform students of the pros and cons of the issue in order to allow them to make an informed decision.

However, this does not seem to be an effective means either. Since 1957 only two student referendums have had enough voter turnout to be valid. Referendums were passed in 1976 committing fees to the construction of a new recreation complex and in 1978 supporting the coliseum with student fees.

Presently, I am in the situation of attempting to determine the best alternative to solicit student input on the future of the $10,000 Nichols account. The account was originally established as a contribution towards the art gallery included in a proposed set of architectural plans for Nichols.

The bill reads "in the event that there are any major alterations of the present architectural drawings...SGA reserves the right to review this allocation."

Presently there are no plans for an art gallery in Nichols. Therefore, students need to make a decision on what should be done.

With this in mind a few alternatives have been presented.

Suggestions have been made to renovate room six in the Art Building. This would provide a secure area where art can be displayed and the room closed in off-hours. However, when evaluating the long-range plans of the University, the art facility may be removed and relocated to make room for library additions or renovated as an addition to the library. Also, the connection with Nichols is lost, conflicting with the original intent of the bill.

A second alternative is to allocate the money towards an art museum. Presently the KSU Foundation has established an art museum account specifically for this purpose. However, allocating the $10,000 into this account would be a drop in the bucket and the money would lose its individuality.

A third alternative is to purchase an art piece which could rest or hang in the lobby area designed for Nichols, along the same lines as the pendulum in Durland Phase II. Architectural plans for Nichols reveal a sufficient lobby area to place artwork.

In order to honor the original intent of the bill, the money should be spent on a project that relates both to art and Nichols. Also, in order to give students the opportunity to appreciate the use of the funds, it is important that the money is not pooled into a large account where the $10,000 loses its individuality.

Therefore the third alternative accomplishes the ground rules originally established. The art would be in Nichols Hall therefore remembering the student involvement in saving Nichols. Finally the money could purchase a tangible item which all students could appreciate.

Therefore I present another alternative for gathering student input. By providing information, alternatives and one person's perspective, I am going directly to the students for the answer. I encourage you to voice your sentiments to me or your college senators. This is an approach which affirms my belief that the STUDENT should be kept in STUDENT government, including both current students and those who were here and involved during the "Save Nichols" campaign.

(Editor's note: Jerry Katlin is the K-State student body president.)

Communication breakdown

Student: I heard Student Senate has a new bill.

Senator: You heard about the new deal? But that was back in 1932. It was President Roosevelt's program for action.

Student: I said bill. You guys vote on it tonight. You know, Bill 21.

Senator: I know Bill's 21. I'm only 20, but I still drink at Bockers.

Student: The bill is titled "Student Senate's Communication Responsibility."

Senator: Student Senate's emancipation responsibility? Yes, no one tells us what to do. Non-restraint, I say.

Student: The bill says, "Student Senate needs to encourage more student input, and..."

Senator: Prudent input? Yes, our decisions are marked by wisdom and judiciousness.

Student: But the bill says, "Students need to be made aware of the decisions that affect them, and..."

Senator: Revisions that protect them? Yes, for instance the rules and regulations for posting things on campus does not include the campaign posters during senate elections.

Student: But the bill says, "Student senators are elected by the student body to represent us, and..."

Senator: Respected by the student body to spend trusts? Yes, a trust is dependent on something future or contingent, for instance our Reserves for Contingencies fund. Last week we voted to give the Ag judging team $4,048.80 more dollars out of the contingency fund. This fund is for groups with a real need, unable to continue without help and asking for extra help "just this once." But of course, when a group is in need, "it's not the money that's important," and the fact that the judging team has requested contingencies each year ("but it'll never happen again...") is besides the point.

Student: But the bill says, "It is the student senator's responsibility as an elected representative to best represent the student body, and..."

Senator: Best recollect a student's body? Spring Break last year, Fort Lauderdale.

Student: But the bill says, "Student Senate, in order to be truly representative, must communicate with the students directly, and..."

Senator: The student directory? They are 50 cents this year. You can still buy them in Kedzie Hall, Room 103.

Student: But the bill says, "Experimental visitations have been made this semester, and..."

Senator: Extra visits to my sister? No, haven't had time. Too busy writing bills.

Student: But the bill says, "Both groups and senators felt the visitations were productive and beneficial, and..."

Senator: Yes, very superficial.

Student: But the bill says that it should be enacted that "each student senator be required to visit at least two student groups per semester during the year in which they are elected or appointed." Now, what I don't understand is, shouldn't they do that on their own?

Didn't they make campaign promises of getting student input?

Does this mean that they aren't doing their jobs and someone is trying to force them to do their jobs?

Wouldn't that be like saying that Congress would make a law say that our state senators would have to go to their districts at least twice during their terms in office? They obviously wouldn't get re-elected if the people only saw them twice in the state they represent. I guess student senators don't have to worry about re-election since it's just a year-long term. And one year is good enough for their resumes.

Communication is a responsibility; should it have to be a "bill"?

Senator: Communication responsibility? Yes, I hear senate has a new bill. We vote on it tonight. It's titled "Student Senator's Communication Responsibility."

Lectionary could be beneficial

Rod Saunders

Guest Commentary

Brad Gillispie's column of Nov. 8 has several misconceptions and misstatements which need to be corrected. First, there is no new Bible of a non-sexist nature issued by the National Council of Churches. What was released was an experimental lectionary, which is a compilation of selected Biblical passages often used by clergy as a guide for a year's sermon and worship planning.

This particular lectionary is experimental in that it attempts to be inclusive of both sexes. Its primary purpose is stated in the introduction, "This lectionary tries to speak of God beyond differentiations of sex, so that when the church hears its scriptures read, it is not overwhelmed by male metaphors."

It also attempts to openly address the essential problem of male metaphors when it states in the appendix, "The image of God as father has been used to support the excessive authority of earthly fathers in a patriarchal social system." In this regards it is especially significant that this lectionary included scholars from the Roman Catholic Church among its eleven-member committee.

Second, the demeaning comment about women who read scripture only to find support for their arguments of sexism is not only untrue, but also irrelevant to the issue. A significant number of women are involved in serious theological, biblical and ministry study and work. They are joined in their questioning, faithful search by men who have come to recognize the validity of the questions and positions on the issue.

Scholars have known for years that there are far more female metaphors and images in the scriptures than we have emphasized or even mentioned, including the reference to Jesus wishing he could gather the people of Jerusalem as a mother hen gathers her brood, Jesus comparing his suffering to that of a woman in childbirth, and several other references to God that can only be translated in the feminine if the text is adhered to properly.

In addition to this, Jesus related to women in a way that challenged Israel's patriarchal system and defied the traditional Jewish prescriptions regarding relations with the sexes. No one has to read scripture to prove a non-sexist orientation. Scripture has always been better than our traditions on the issue.

Third, the column assumes a particular approach to scripture which is not supported by a vast majority of biblical and theological scholars. This bias, though somewhat obscured, is demonstrated by the phrase "the people who refuse to literally accept what the Bible says." Language has never been, nor will ever be just literal. Language is always more than literal, always reflecting its literary context, its historical context, its socio-cultural context and its personal context.

Unless one wishes to believe God transmitted this particular scripture directly to scribes who just wrote it down, then one has to face the reality of language and the subsequent meanings of proper linguistic analysis. In other words, the human factor is bound up in scripture as much as anywhere else, and the mistakes and contradictions are not a threat to a faith which joyfully understands this as the way God relates to humanity.

Fourth, the issue of the predominant male metaphors and images is a direct result of a predominantly patriarchal society and culture. This has been maintained over the centuries by a church which has also been predominantly male dominated and controlled. While this is not a single determinative factor in faith, it decidedly has had its negative effects, and it should be seen for what it is.

The real issue here is a faith that claims to be inclusive, sensitive and caring for all persons (which is why it is important to raise questions about whether or not someone might be negatively affected by using only father/male images of God). Therefore, the attempt to provide some corrective for a male dominated and maintained tradition is a welcome addition, though not a cure-all, to the faith journey. The Church has had a better tradition all along that it simply has not lived, and if this lectionary opens this up for some or many, it will be an appropriate extension of the Christian attitude in following the example of Jesus, who cared for persons enough to challenge accepted, traditional practices.

Here and Now briefs

WASHINGTON — Jesse Jackson's pledge to name a woman as his vice presidential candidate has sent chills through the ranks of feminist groups here. The groups, many of which have promised to endorse a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, will be hard-pressed to ignore any contender who puts a woman on the ticket.

When Dixie Cassell was a student at the University of Virginia during the 1960s, she thought VISTA was "an interesting way of involving people" and "a good idea." More lately, however, she's been helping to put that idea to rest.

Volunteers in Service to America, now nearing its third decade of assistance to the nation's poor and disadvantaged, is virtually a shell of the organization that Cassell, 36, found upon becoming its acting director in 1981. The agency's funding has been chopped from $34 million to $11.8 million; the number of volunteers has fallen from almost 5,000 to around 1,000.

VISTA's troubles reflect two administration assumptions: 1) that much of the organization's previous budgets went toward liberal political purposes and, 2) that part-time volunteers can do the work of full-time recruits working on federal stipends. "Right now, it's better to cut deficit spending than to put money into VISTA volunteers," said Cassell.

Yet, the poverty rate has increased 50 percent since 1969, when VISTA received more than twice what it did this year. Both sides agree that VISTA remains one of government's more cost-effective programs. Despite a virtually nonexistent promotional program, volunteer candidates still far outpace available places.

As 45 anti-poverty groups wrote in an open letter to Congress, VISTA "enables persons from all walks of life, economic levels, geographic areas and ages to serve their country and communities."

Those may be the reasons why the House on Oct. 28 voted to give VISTA a $25 million funding floor in 1984. Those who parade under volunteerism's banner would be counterproductive, let alone hypocritical, to oppose a rescue.

Last Thursday's television drama about the late Anwar Sadat seems to have pleased everybody, save the Egyptians. Diplomats here complain privately that the film projected both Egypt and Sadat in a "shabby" light. Among other things, they say the portrayal of Sadat insults Moslem traditions.

"It's trash," declared Mohammed Haki, a former Egyptian press counselor here. "There's nothing in the film that is historically accurate." The Egyptian Embassy had no public comment.

It's been 15 years since Robert McNamara left the Pentagon, but the legacy of Vietnam still haunts him. During a speech at UCLA last week, the former defense secretary was met with jeers of "war criminal." In the tradition of Nelson Rockefeller, McNamara told his hecklers to shut up.

Plessey Airports, the contractor responsible for "overall project management" of the controversial airport expansion in Grenada, denied allegations that the country's new airstrip was destined primarily for military use. A Plessey spokesman told the Financial Times of London that the new airport lacked "the hardened facilities, dispersal aprons or reinforced control tower which would accompany a military development."

Family important element of society

Editor,
Regarding "The surrogate mother issue" by Darcy Ward in the Wednesday, Nov. 2 Collegian, the most basic entity of mankind is the family. This is illustrated by the phrase "No man is an island." A society is but a group of families bonded together as one believing in a common cause. The United States started this way with the Pilgrims and has continued to grow and prosper as a family.
This is why the changes in our practices and beliefs that have come about over the past few decades sadden and anger us, and hopefully many others. Abortion, euthanasia, birth control, divorce and contract marriage have all undermined our society. Artificial insemination for single people can only weaken what little family ties we still have. Understand that we are not criticizing the practice for married couples (and we stress that phrase) who cannot, but wish to, have families.

If the family is no longer a real and viable entity, then how can our society, which depends on the family, survive?

Is it so unwise or unrealistic to compare the fading of the family to the fading of our national courage and pride? Only if we believe again in the family, and then in society, can we survive as a nation.
Darcy, I do not see the legislature taking two steps backward, but rather I see them taking a giant step forward, for us all.

Farrell inadequate for academic pursuits

Editor,
I joined K-State in fall 1983 as a faculty member in electrical engineering. I am writing this letter to express my feelings about the state of Farrell Library.
I was quite disappointed after my first visit to the library. To begin with, I had to search for the "red line" which would take me to the stacks of my interest. Upon entering the stacks I was shocked. I found the stacks area to be very stuffy and with very little space to walk. Also, it was very humid and warm because the air conditioner perhaps was not working properly (I am sure that this condition is going to affect the life of the books).

On the top level of the stacks I found that some of the racks were covered with polyethylene sheets because the roof had been leaking. On the whole I did not find the library to be very conducive for another visit.
I have done my graduate studies at two different U.S. universities and I found that they have had very fine libraries. I think a good library is a very important factor for any university to achieve academic excellence. I commend the faculty for doing a good job without a good library.
I completely support the effort of K-State libraries to obtain membership of the Association of Research Libraries (refer to article by Brice G. Hobrock, dean of libraries, in the Library's I.N.S.I.D.E.R. fall 1983). However, I request them to give some thought to improving the stacks area. Merely increasing the number of volumes will not help unless there is a decent place to keep them. Finally, I urge all the people concerned to think about the library and make efforts to make it better.

Dance neglected by Collegian

Editor,
In my three years here at K-State, I have become accustomed to surprised remarks of disbelief that we have a dance program and even a dance major. Our attempt to gain visibility has been limited by several things, one of which is the seemingly total lack of interest in dance by the Collegian staff. Why exactly do you have a title of "Arts and Entertainment Editor" when there is no readily apparent interest in reporting the arts that are fighting for survival at K-State?
I am sure you feel justified in giving pre-show publicity to our Student/Faculty Concert Oct. 28-29. The lack of any review of the performance, however, is incredible to me since this is our only fall concert. This concern is especially disappointing since the majority of the works were by student choreographers who deserve recognition for their contribution to the University. The students also are quite baffled by your lack of interest. If by chance your reason for no review was that the event was off campus, I would be happy to speak with you on that point.

At the risk of sounding paranoid (which I might be by now), I must say that I have continually encountered a negative attitude toward the arts in general and dance in particular in Collegian reporting. I am sorry for your narrow views, for my students and for cultural life at K-State

Library needs policy change

Editor,
Unlike most branch libraries, the animal science library (reading room) at Call Hall offers an atmosphere conducive to reading or studying. A constant blaring radio and the loud secretarial chitchat is extremely distracting. The ASI library committee should either instigate a policy change or install a pool table, depending upon whether a library or a recreation room is desired.

Lighting needed for protection

Editor,
Following a direct route from the Derby residence halls to the library and onto the connecting paths, the lighting is far from adequate.
Considering rape has currently been a major problem, this seems quite absurd.
We girls have been told to take advantage of the escort services available to us when going out at night. I think these services are wonderful and are highly appreciated. However, these services need at least an hour's notice. This is very reasonable, but students cannot always stick to a scheduled appointment basis.
Another suggestion offered to us is to walk with a friend. Usually this is no problem, but sometimes a last-minute decision to go to the library leaves a person unaccompanied. Even two girls walking together are in danger since many guys are strong enough to overtake both of them with little or no problem.

I'm not saying that more lights on campus should be a substitute for a companion, but it sure would make the girls feel more secure, and hopefully, the prospective rapists a little more scarce.

Rules are still rules

Editor,
Regarding Edee Dalke's article, "Rules are rules?" in the Nov. 3 Collegian, sure they are, Edee.
Unfortunately for students, every department has its own set, and every person working in those departments seems to have his or her own interpretations of them.

I've been here three years now, and can only say that I'm not getting by because of these people, but in spite of them.

Craft unfairly judged on appearance

Editor,
I write regarding the Nov. 1 editorial by Paul Hanson and Brad Gillispie about the Christine Craft trial, in which a judge recently overturned and reversed a jury's decision.
First, let me point out the rarity of a judge overturning a jury's decision because the jurors acted out of "passion and prejudice." In most cases a judge can only overturn a jury's decision if a law was violated or the jury was given outside counsel.
Secondly, I believe you wrote in favor of the judge's decision because the word and use of sexism as the cause of Craft's firing is overused. Television journalism and the nightly news are not Hollywood with blood and guts with a local angle. Television newspeople are real journalists trying to cover the story, just as your paper attempts to do.

By stating in your editorial that Craft was not a "real journalist," you open an entirely different argument about the purposes of television news. To compare print and visual media is comparing two different entities. Christine Craft has some of the best journalism credentials in the business — television or print. When the KMBC-TV management interviewed Craft for the anchor position, Craft said, "If you don't like what you see, don't hire me." Well, they liked some of what they saw, but paid no attention to Craft's warning and proceeded to change her regardless. Craft's journalistic abilities did not change because of the changes made in her appearance.

Instead of denouncing Christine Craft for having the guts to stand up and shout, "Unfair," we should be applauding her and joining in the fight to make the viewing public more aware of the discrimination that takes place in the name of ratings. Many women in television news are treated the same way, but are afraid to speak publicly because they know they will be labeled a troublemaker and will, for all practical purposes, end their careers in television. Walter Cronkite, Roger Mudd or Dan Rather would never be taken off the air because they were "too old, and not deferential enough to men." Why should women?

No misquotes in article

Editor,
I would like to clarify one point in Patti Shipp's Nov. 4 Collegian story about the Manhattan Radio Audience Survey. I had hoped that Patti would have contacted KMKF and talked to them for the story. My comments about KMKF make it look like I know everything about the station's format, when in truth I know only what I hear on the air, and I have to interpret the intent from that.
However, the real reason for this letter is to commend Patti for an absolutely accurate story. If all Collegian reporters used the same policies for news gathering as Patti, I sincerely doubt that you'd have another "I've been misquoted" letter the rest of the school year.

What did Patti do that other print reporters don't? She arrived at my office for the interview with her trusty pad, pencil — and cassette tape recorder.

Queen Elizabeth to visit Kenya

NAIROBI, Kenya — Queen Elizabeth II arrives in Kenya on Thursday for a state visit and a sadly nostalgic journey to a place in the African bush where she became the British monarch more than 31 years ago.

It was at Treetops, a game-viewing lodge perched in the branches of a giant Ficus tree, that Princess Elizabeth acceded to the throne on Feb. 6, 1952, upon the death of her father, King George VI, in London.

Except for a brief luncheon stopover in 1972 on the way home from an Indian Ocean tour, this is the first visit by Queen Elizabeth to this former British colony since that momentous day.

Jerry Brown pledges to return

LOS ANGELES — Former California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., making an infrequent public appearance at a $150,000 fund-raising dinner for 1984 U.S. Senate candidates, says he is devoting his time these days to rebuilding the Democratic Party.

But the two-time presidential candidate at the dinner Tuesday evening avoided any mention of his own political plans.

"I'm going to dedicate as much of my time as I can over the next several years to rebuilding, to strengthening and reinvigorating the party that gave me so much, and to which I would like to give as much back as I humanly can," Brown told the 750 dinner guests at the elegant new Griffith Park Equestrian Center.

After losing the U.S. Senate race to Pete Wilson a year ago this week, Brown said he planned to take "a brief respite" from politics, but that he would eventually "offer myself again...for public service."

"I shall return," he said at the time.

Little decries copyright on voices

LOS ANGELES — Comedian-impressionist Rich Little says you can copyright a character, but you can't copyright a voice.

"For instance," he says, "you could do Peter Sellers, but you couldn't do Inspector Clouseau."

Little made the comment in discussing a bill under consideration by the California Legislature that would prohibit commercial exploitation of the likeness, name or voice of deceased celebrities without the heirs' consent. It passed the state Senate Judiciary Committee last session and is before the full Senate and the Assembly Judiciary Committee awaiting action in January.

Little makes commercials using impressions of voices of famous people, but he always identifies himself in the beginning of the ads with "Rich Little for..."

"I think as long as I do that I'll be OK, because I'm not trying to mislead the public that it is actually Johnny Carson selling Hormel Chili," said Little, who has done commercials for up to 20 companies ranging from Chevron to Kentucky Fried Chicken.

Lindborg family has exciting week

TOPEKA — It's been a big week for the family of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Mattingly of Lindborg.

Monday, one of their four daughters, Betty Amos of Colby, gave birth to a daughter in a Colby hospital.

Wednesday morning, the state Board of Education named Mrs. Amos, 35, as Kansas' teacher-of-the-year for 1984, which automatically makes her a candidate for national teacher-of-the-year.

Wednesday afternoon, Gov. John Carlin appointed another of the Mattinglys daughters, Joan Hamilton of Topeka, to the Kansas Adult Authority, the state's parole board. The family has known the Carlins for years.

Stephan finds phone company gifts legal

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Attorney General Robert Stephan said Wednesday it appears Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. acted within the law by paying more than $6,500 for expenses of a political action committee of its employees.

At a news conference, Stephan said attorney general opinions issued in 1977 and 1978 conclude that regulated corporations such as a telephone company or bank can pay administrative costs of a political action committee, or PAC, made up of its workers.

Because of those opinions, Stephan said he would not file charges against Southwestern Bell even if his office determined that the legal conclusions in the two opinions were incorrect. The opinions, which are merely advisory and do not have the force of law, were issued by former Attorney General Curt Schneider, a Democrat.

"I'll be happy to review these two opinions, but I can't imagine expecting any more of anyone in the state than of following the opinion of the attorney general and state law," Stephan said.

"I'm not bound (by the previous opinions), but I'm not going to file charges against Kansas citizens who have relied on the opinion of the attorney general."

A state senator on Tuesday asked Stephan to investigate the Southwestern Bell contributions after the issue surfaced during a public hearing before the Kansas Corporation Commission.

"If the contributions were made in accordance with these opinions, then they already have been okayed by Attorney General Schneider," Stephan said, adding that he would review the case.

Earlier Wednesday, Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.'s chief executive in Kansas dismissed as unfounded and "outrageous" the allegation that the utility made illegal contributions to the political action committee of its employees.

To back up his claims, Edward Whitacre, vice president for Bell operations in Kansas, provided reporters at a news conference with a copy of the 1978 attorney general's opinion.

"I consider yesterday's (Tuesday) allegation outrageous," Whitacre said. "Southwestern Bell does not operate in an illegal manner and I am confident that any sort of investigation into this matter will bear this out."

Sen. James L. Francisco, D-Mulvane, sent a letter to Stephan on Tuesday calling for an investigation to determine whether Southwestern Bell made illegal campaign contributions to its employee PAC. Francisco asked for "vigorous prosecution if violations are found."

Francisco's request came after Commissioner Richard "Pete" Loux questioned a Southwestern Bell executive about the contributions during KCC proceedings on Bell's proposed $204.5 million rate increase. The official said the company had done nothing illegal, and explained that the more than $6,500 was for administrative expenses of the PAC.

"Obviously Commissioner Loux is uninformed about the attorney general's opinion in 1978 and the fact that we followed it to the letter," said Whitacre.

"What is not so clear to me is why this issue has surfaced in the course of discussion of our rate application. Remember, these legitimate expenses are not borne by our customers."

Southwestern Bell established its political action committee in 1979.

Whitacre said he welcomed a review of the matter by Stephan, adding that he expected "a reaffirmation of the previous opinion." In addition, Whitacre said he was sending a copy of the 1978 legal opinion to the KCC.

Tom Taylor, a spokesman for the KCC, said he saw a public purpose in bringing up the issue of Bell's support for the PAC.

"Even if it is legal, it's good for the public to realize the whole lobbying system by the phone company is pervasive," said Taylor. "They have tremendous influence over state legislatures and the federal government."

Under Kansas law, utilities and other regulated corporations such as banks cannot make campaign contributions. Violations of the law are punishable by a fine up to $10,000.

The questions raised by Loux and Francisco center on the Southwestern Bell Kansas Employee Political Action Committee, which is a group of Bell workers that make contributions to candidates.

According to campaign finance documents filed by the PAC with the secretary of state's office, the telephone utility had payments of more than $6,500 to the PAC during 1982.

WINTER INTERSESSION

January 2-10, 1984

INTERSESSION—BETWEEN SEMESTERS AT K-STATE

Come back to campus ten days early—or, if you're not now a K-State student, start 1984 with ten days on campus at a time when parking is easy and crowds are nonexistent. Intercession is a good time to be on campus and an enjoyable way to earn up to two credits in a course. Intercession is open to the public. It allows students to pursue one course topic intensively, without the interruptions and demands of other courses or other campus activities. Campus is quiet, classes usually run about three hours a day and instructors, like students, are generally devoting their time just to a single course. It's a pleasant way to earn college credit and explore topics not covered during the regular schedule.

The Winter 1984 Intercession program offers nearly 30 credit courses, representing many departments and all colleges of KSU. Fees and registration are explained in this brochure, which also lists all courses and their descriptions. If this publication doesn't answer all your questions about Intercession, please call the Division of Continuing Education at 532-5566 (toll-free in Kansas 800-432-8222 for out-of-towners). Questions about specific course content or requirements should be directed to the instructors themselves.

REGISTRATION

Intercession is open to KSU students and to the public. Prior enrollment at KSU is not necessary and registration is a simple one-step process.

Intercession registration will take place in the BASEMENT OF FARRELL LIBRARY (not in the Union, where we've been in previous years); registration dates are December 5-7 and the registration staff will be available from 8:30 to 11:50 a.m. and 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. those three days. Additional registrations will be accepted during regular office hours at 317 Umberger Hall from December 8 through January 3. Course fees are due at the time of enrollment. The decision as to which courses will "go" will be based on the number of registrations recorded during the first week of registration, and the go/drop list will be posted near the Information Desk at the K-State Union on Monday, December 12th. Go/drop information will also be available from the Continuing Education Registrar's office (317 Umberger, 532-5566).

Students are asked to check with their advisors to ensure that the Intercession class will meet degree requirements.

BE PROMPT!!

Although registrations in "go" classes will be accepted until the first day of Intercession, students are encouraged to register during the December 5-7 registration period at Farrell Library. The "go/drop" decision is based on enrollments collected during that period. Delays in student registration could result in a course being cancelled: students interested in Intercession classes should register early to be sure their preferred classes have a good chance of going as scheduled.

LATE FEE

Students enrolling after the third class meeting but before the close of Intercession will be charged a late fee of $10 and must have written permission from the instructor. Students attempting to enroll after an Intercession class is finished may do so with written permission from the instructor, and they will be charged a late fee of $20.

COSTS

Costs are $29 per undergraduate ("UG") credit hour and $45 per graduate ("G") credit hour; these costs are the same for Kansas residents and for non-residents. Some classes will require lab fees, materials fees, or other costs, and these are indicated in the course listing. The lab and materials fees will be collected by the Continuing Education Registrar at registration or by the instructor at the first class meeting. Lab fees collected by Continuing Education are non-refundable after the go/drop decision has been made (December 12th), except for courses which have been cancelled. Travel arrangements, for courses requiring them, must be made with the instructors as early as possible.

CREDIT

Classes are offered for one or two resident credit hours. This reflects a deans' ruling of one credit maximum per 15-hour week of Intercession instruction. The maximum credit allowed is three (3) hours per student. Anyone wishing to enroll in more than three credit hours must have written approval from his or her academic dean at the time of registration. STUDENTS SHOULD SIGN UP FOR COURSES ON AN A-PASS-FAIL BASIS AT THE TIME OF REGISTRATION, BEFORE ONE-THIRD OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED. Intercession grades count with G.P.A.

CANCELLED CLASSES

No individual notification about cancelled classes will be made. Students who enrolled in a cancelled class have the option of registering in another class or obtaining a full refund. The student must report to 317 Umberger Hall to officially DROP or ADD.

REFUNDS

A full refund is made if the withdrawal request is received before the second class meeting, or if the class is cancelled. One-half of the fee is refunded if the withdrawal request is received after the second class meeting, but before one-third of the class meetings have elapsed. No refund is permitted if the withdrawal request is received after one-third of the class meetings. All refund requests must be made in person or in writing to the Registrar, Continuing Education (not to the instructor). No refunds will be given after the class begins, for those taking the course for non-credit. Those lab and materials fees collected at Registration will not be refunded after December 12th except for courses which have been cancelled.

BOOKS

Textbooks (required or recommended) have been ordered for some classes and will be available at Varney's at the start of Intercession. Information about textbooks is available from the instructor or from Varney's. Classes for which textbooks have been ordered are indicated with the letters TB at the end of the course description in this listing.

SPECIAL NOTE ON STARTING DATE

Intercession classes will begin on January 2, a legal holiday for the University. Classrooms will be open for Intercession courses and instructors know that classes must meet the full nine days (January 2-10, including the weekend days) in order to qualify for two credits. Continuing Education staff will assume that instructors are meeting on January 2 unless they have made special arrangements to make up the class another time. Students should inquire at registration, or phone 532-5566 before leaving for the winter break, for confirmation.

Because classes start on a holiday and the registration staff will not be available that day, the second day of class (January 3) will count as the day from which partial refunds and drops are counted. Enrollments in Intercession classes will be accepted on January 3.

WELCOME TO OUR BARN

Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thierer

A couple swing dances outside due to crowded conditions inside. The barn serves as both a home for the Thierers and a party barn for students.

Staff/Rob Clark Jr.

By BRENDA ROTTINGHAUS
Staff Writer

Tufts of gray hair peeked out from beneath the dusty black cap and curled out around his ears. Patched overalls and a worn red flannel shirt added to the 60-year-old man's comfortable appearance.

But, his eyes twinkled boyishly and the corners of his mouth lifted as he spoke of "those college kids."

He is Lowell Thierer. He, his wife Myrtle and their son Larry operate the Mill Creek Museum and Camp Grounds nestled in the midst of the scenic Flint Hills.

The Lowells own the "Alma barn," located seven miles west of Alma on the property where both Lowell and his father were born. The barn, built in 1910, has become a popular partying site among organized living groups at K-State.

According to Myrtle Thierer, the number of college parties held at the barn has increased steadily since it was first available for collegiates' use 15 years ago. However, the Thierers have kept no formal records.

The 16 parties booked at the barn this fall keep the Thierers busy on weekends, especially since their barn doubles as a home for the couple.

Each weekend, the bed in the corner comes down and the chairs are pushed back to line the walls of the large, wooden-floored room. Wood, the only source of heat, is carried in and stacked near the huge potbellied stove near the door.

Each party usually starts shortly after 8 p.m. as the guests begin arriving. Barbeques, dancing and hayrack rides fill the groups' evening in the country.

The Thierers first used the barn for public barn dances. Then, an acquaintance suggested they use their barn for college parties as an additional source of income.

"We hadn't thought of that," Lowell said. "Besides, when the guy suggested it, we said they'd (students) break up too much stuff." With much persuasion, the Thierers were finally convinced and booked their first college barn party.

Their decision has been financially rewarding. Rental fee for the use of the barn is $200, hayrack rides lasting 20 minutes are an additional $25, and a $25 cleanup deposit, which is usually returned, helps ensure that the group "does a good job" cleaning up after their party.

The Thierers apparently enjoy their contact with K-State students, and said that 99 percent are well-behaved and respectful of the facilities.

"There is that 1 or 2 percent that you couldn't tell anything," Lowell said.

"As a rule though, there's some awful nice ones," Myrtle added.

She also said the family's cats and dogs make "quite a hit" with the students. "We had three kittens," she explained, "but, I gave one of them away to one of the girls who was here the other night."

Lowell chuckled as he spoke of one student — "Apple Bobber" — who made more than one trip out to the barn for parties.

"It was cold that night," he recalled, "and this one group had a washtub and was bobbing for apples in the barn." The group's housemother made one guy, who had been chairman for the Acacias. "It's my favorite party of the whole year — the western dancing and just getting away from town. Everybody goes and it's a lot of fun."

He did cite one problem the group had been running into — the long drive back to Manhattan after the party ends.

According to Stackley, one fraternity member has totaled his car on the return trip after each party for the previous four years. The group made it through this year's party without any problems, however.

The Thierers also expressed concern about the condition of the students when leaving the party.

"We worry about them driving on our roads," Myrtle said. This is part of the reason the Thierers have kept to a policy of not scheduling parties after Thanksgiving or before March when bad winter road conditions would add to the hazards.

Because the Thierers also operate a museum on the farm and a country store about a mile away, as well as a small sawmill, they are kept quite busy.

The museum, across the rutted yard in a metal implement building, is closed during parties but has been open to the public every Sunday for 20 years.

"We just started to collect stuff that was getting thrown away and it kind of got out of hand," Myrtle said.

Myrtle spoke with tour-guide certainty as she passed between the relics packed inside the museum.

Phonographs, a carriage, school slates and pencils, several printing presses, the family Bible, dolls and Myrtle's mother's doll buggy are among the hundreds of things packed inside the little building.

Both Myrtle and Lowell seemed to be looking forward to Thanksgiving and the end of the parties until March as a time when they can quit rearranging their home.

A time when they can roll the carpet across the wooden floor and settle back for the winter.

drinking quite a bit when he got here, position his hands in such a way on the tub so that when he bobbed, she pushed his head "clear down to the bottom" and he had trouble getting up.

'Mephisto' reveals insecurity as character seeks adulation

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

Upon hearing the thunderous applause that an actor is receiving on stage, Hendrik Hofgen is thrown into a jealous rage. He is envious because he feels he should be receiving similar adulation for his performances. His greatest fear is that he will remain simply a provincial actor.

Klaus Maria Brandauer as Hendrik in the Istvan Szabo film of the Klaus Mann novel "Mephisto" is filled with a youthful exuberance and innocence that reveals the character's inability to understand the consequences of aligning himself with Nazi Germany. Hendrik's quest for acceptance blinds him to the actions occurring in the state.

The typical approach to this type of material would have yielded a depressingly melodramatic film, but Szabo's approach is full of a vigor and energy that makes the time period seem all the more real. Szabo mixes scenes of actors on stage with scenes of actual drama in a manner that keeps the audience guessing.

In the same way as the audience has to decipher whether a scene is just a theater performance or whether it is really a drama unfolding, Hendrik is wavering between the border of reality and theater. His entire life is led as if it is one big theatrical performance.

Review

This type of approach helps the audience to sympathize with Hendrik and even makes one wonder if under the same circumstances would they have acted with any clearer vision as to what their obligations to society really are. Not until the film's end does Hendrik begin to understand just what he has done to himself in order to become successful in Nazi Germany. Until that moment he was willing to do anything to advance his position.

At first Hendrik leaves the small theater he is involved with so that he can receive greater exposure in the Communist theater. He then marries solely for the social status that his wife will give him.

As the Nazis take over Germany, he is completely oblivious to the happenings around him. He is even unaware that the election results have named Hitler as the new chancellor. His fellow actors realize that they can no longer perform with artistic freedom and begin leaving the country. Hendrik stays in Germany and aligns himself with the Nazis in control of the theater. He soon becomes friends with a Nazi general who can give Hendrik anything he wants, including the directorship of the state theater.

Hendrik even changes his own interpretation of Mephistopheles in "Faust" so that the play conforms to the wishes of the state. Hendrik's portrayal of this character is his greatest triumph. It is then that he wears the white mask which can be seen as a symbol of his own condition. As the mask suggests, Hendrik's face is like a blank slate that anything may be written upon, but his personality is blank as well, for he has no idea of what his role as a member of the German society really is.

The Oscar winner in 1982 as best foreign language film, "Mephisto" is an absorbing examination of one's obligations to the society one lives in. Hendrik chooses to believe that it is necessary for someone to continue the art of theater no matter what the condition of the state. The audience is left to examine what its own response may have been in similar conditions.

Homecoming concerts to offer versatility

By The Collegian Staff

A variety of jazz, pop music and rockabilly will be showcased with two concerts tonight and two Friday night.

Barbara Bailey Hutchison will perform at 8 p.m. tonight in the Union Catskeller. Hutchison plays acoustic pop and light rock. She has performed opening acts for such performers as Kenny Rankin, Steve Goodman and Loudon Wainwright III. The performance is presented by the Union Coffeehouse Committee.

Tickets cost $2 and will be available at the door Thursday night.

The K-State Jazz Lab Bands also will perform at 8 p.m. tonight in All Faiths Chapel. The concert is free.

Friday the Stray Cats will perform in Ahearn Field House. The Stray Cats are a three-member rockabilly group from Long Island, N.Y., that gained national notoriety through its first U.S. release, the album, "Built For Speed." The band has recently released another album, "Rant and Rave." Two bands, Roman Holiday and Fourteen Karats of Soul, will open for The Stray Cats. Tickets for good seats are still available at the Union Box Office. Ticket prices for students are $10, $9.50 and $9.

For those who aren't rockabilly fans, Matt Betton and the Big Band All-Stars will play at the Homecoming Dance Friday night. Betton has been active in the music scene in Manhattan for over 30 years. Tickets are $6 and space is limited. For reservations call the K-State Alumni Association.

Highway Patrol superintendent resigns post

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Col. David Hornbaker on Wednesday stepped down as superintendent of the Kansas Highway Patrol after more than three years in the post and was immediately replaced by former Wyandotte County Sheriff Bert Cantwell.

Hornbaker, 38, submitted his resignation to Gov. John Carlin after an hour-long discussion with the governor about the situation at the Patrol. Carlin agreed a change was needed and named the 51-year-old Cantwell to succeed him.

"I want to express my gratitude to David Hornbaker for his years of service as superintendent of the Kansas Highway Patrol," Carlin said in a prepared statement. "This job is one of the most difficult in the state. I appreciate his efforts and wish him the best in the future."

Hornbaker cited personal reasons for wanting to be relieved of command and will remain with the Highway Patrol.

Mike Swenson, Carlin's press secretary, said there have been recurring reports of dissension within the patrol's ranks and said Hornbaker discussed those concerns and some of his own with Carlin.

Swenson said Hornbaker and the governor mutually agreed the time was right for a change, but Carlin did not ask the superintendent to resign.

"Because of the importance of the job of superintendent, it is imperative that a successor be named immediately," Carlin said of his quick action in naming Cantwell.

Swenson said Cantwell was the "logical choice" to succeed Hornbaker because of his extensive background in law enforcement administration.

There have been recurring reports of dissension within the Patrol's ranks, and Hornbaker had inquired to Carlin about the possibility of being relieved from the top job before Wednesday's decision to resign.

New group to carry flags during basketball halftime

By KATHY BARTELLI
Collegian Reporter

Some of this season's basketball games will feature something a bit different than the usual halftime shows. A color guard consisting of a flag and rifle squad will perform at four men's and women's games.

Dave Dagenais, graduate in music and graduate assistant to the marching band, said he got the idea for a color guard because he was involved with one at Northern Michigan University.

He said the purpose of having the color guard at the games was to improve the quality of the performance in preparation for next year's football season.

The number of people on the flag and rifle squads depends on the quality of the auditions, Dagenais said. He said most of the flag team members intend to audition, but it will be more difficult finding people experienced in rifle squads.

Tryouts will be later in the semester, probably after Thanksgiving, Dagenais said. The color guard is scheduled to perform at the Feb. 15 men's basketball game and the women's game on Feb. 16. It also will perform for both during games on March 3.

Research discloses higher sugar intake may solve adult, infant sleeplessness

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Researchers have found they can make babies fall asleep faster by increasing the amount of sugar and one of the constituents of protein in their evening bottles.

The research shows that what newborns eat affects their sleeping habits and hints that nursing mothers may be able to make their babies doze off faster if the women eat candy before bedtime feeding.

The study is one of several recently that have examined the effect of food on behavior. Several researchers have focused on sugar. Contrary to the beliefs of some food fadists, they have found that sugar makes children and adults sleepy, not aggressive or hyperactive.

In the latest work, doctors varied the amounts of sugar and two basic amino acids in babies' bottles before they went to bed. They found a half-hour variation in how quickly the infants nodded off, depending on what they had eaten.

Although the work is too preliminary to be used to make specific dietary recommendations, one researcher said it suggests that sugar might help if a baby has trouble going to sleep.

"For a nursing mother who has a baby with difficulty falling asleep, she could try eating a candy bar or some other source of carbohydrate before the evening feeding and see if that has a more soporific (sleep-inducing) effect," said Dr. Michael W. Yogman of Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston.

Transfers to add depth to basketball squad

By KEVIN DALE
Staff Writer

The K-State men's basketball team added only two players to its roster this year, but each of these players is expected to step right in and start contributing.

Jack Hartman, Wildcat head coach, is looking for junior college transfers Eric Watson and Tom Alfaro to deliver good things right from the start.

Watson, a 6-foot-2 guard from Allen County Community College, is a strong defensive player who can provide scoring if he has to.

"Eric is a very good athlete," Hartman said. "He has good quickness and the potential to score some points. He is also very strong for his size. You will probably see a lot of him early in the season."

Alfaro transferred to K-State from Fresno City Junior College in Fresno, Calif. He played the big guard position for Fresno but will move to forward for the Wildcats.

"Tom is a good basketball player," Hartman said. "He is capable of being a very good shooter and he has all the basic skills."

Both players are having some difficulty adjusting to the system and to major college basketball, but nothing that is going to hold them back.

"There is always a tremendous transition with new players," Hartman said. "The juco players have the advantage of competing for two years and they are older. They are further along, so they are pushed in to the system faster as they should be. There are so many things they have to grasp in such a short time that there is a significant transition period."

"It is a big adjustment to the toughness of major college ball," Alfaro said. "This is big-time basketball and is a big step up from where I've been."

"The only pressure I am feeling is learning the new offenses before the start of the season," Watson said. "I know I can play at this level."

Each player has an assortment of surprises in his bag of tricks.

Despite being 6-foot-6, Alfaro can handle the ball like a guard and is a pure shooter. He averaged 18 points per game for Fresno on 60 percent shooting. He also made 74 percent of his free throws. That should help the team as K-State finished last in the Big Eight in free throw percentage last year.

Watson is a strong defensive player with outstanding jumping ability. He possesses a 40-inch vertical jump.

"I love to surprise big men," Watson said. "Sometimes they get lazy inside and they go up and think I'm not going to jump. But I'm right there with them. I am more of a defensive player, but I can get the points if we need them."

Getting the points is why Alfaro is at K-State.

"Shooting is definitely my strength," Alfaro said. "I'm mainly here for scoring. I need to work on rebounding now that I'm playing small forward. Sometimes we will use three guards and two forwards, so I will see some action at guard."

The adjustment to Kansas has been an easy one for both players as they have wanted to be here all along.

"I like Kansas a lot," Alfaro said. "The people are a lot nicer than in California. I picked K-State because I wanted to play in the Big Eight and for Jack Hartman. I've heard a lot about Big Eight basketball and that Coach Hartman is the best in the nation."

Watson spent his first year at Arkansas State on a team with a lot of turmoil.

"We had four junior college transfers my first year and they wanted to change the system," he said. "The coach would not let them, so they quit the team right before the first game. We only had seven players left on the team and we had to go get some walkons to fill the spots. I told the coach I was not a quitter and would stick with him until the end of the season."

Watson then transferred to Allen County in Iowa where he averaged 19.2 points and 7 rebounds per game.

"I never had any other school in mind," Watson said. "Darryl Winston (Wildcat assistant coach) was a major factor in my decision to come here."

Watson and Winston both went to Lovejoy High School in Brooklyn, Ill.

"When Darryl was a senior in high school, he coached my junior high team," Watson said.

Both Watson and Alfaro are anxious to get started and are looking forward to contributing a lot early in the season.

"I feel comfortable knowing I have a chance of starting right away," Watson said. "I came here to play and I know I can. I want to show the people that last year the team was good but they needed the experience. I think I can add the leadership and hustle the team needs."

"We're looking good right now," Alfaro said. "My biggest goal is to start and play a lot. The change hasn't been that bad because I had a coach who taught me good discipline at Fresno. Fresno was a running team and I think with the quickness we have this year, we will run too."

With the majority of the team being sophomores, it may certainly be up to the juco transfers to provide some maturity and leadership to get the 'Cats back on the winning track.

Returning men's basketball players Jim Roder, foreground, and Eddie Elder are interviewed by sports announcers from local television stations during basketball Media Day in Ahearn Field House Wednesday afternoon. The team had an intrasquad scrimmage following the interview session.

Hartman, 'Cats prepare for season

By GARY VAN CLEAVE
Collegian Reporter

This time a year ago, Coach Jack Hartman was unsure what was in store for the K-State men's basketball team.

The Wildcats were coming off a 23-8 season, including a spot in the Midwest Regionals in St. Louis. But gone from that Big Eight Conference runner-up team were guards Tyrone Adams and Tim Jankovich, and forwards Randy Reed and Ed Nealy.

That left the 1982-83 edition of Wildcat basketball one big question mark. With only seniors Les Craft and Ed Galvao and a bumper crop of freshmen, the Wildcats went through a rebuilding year. K-State finished 12-16 — the first time since 1970-71 that the Wildcats finished with a below .500 record.

Now, as Hartman prepares his 'Cats for the 1983-84 campaign, the 13-year K-State mentor is ready for another season of Ahearn Field House sellouts.

"They'll be much improved over last season," Hartman said. "Of course, that will depend on how some things develop. Some kids are going to have to come through and play up to where they are capable of."

"There's no doubt in my mind that we'll be a much improved team this year. The main reason why we'll be improved is that we'll be a great deal more experienced," Hartman said. "Last year was rough on the players, but they learned a great deal in the process and that will pay off for them this year."

Seven lettermen top the list from last year's squad that went 4-10 in conference play and tied with the University of Kansas for sixth place. Eddie Elder, a 6-foot-9 junior forward, is the top returning scorer and rebounder. Elder averaged 8.7 points a game and hauled in 5.1 rebounds his sophomore season.

Elder is an expected candidate for the center position left vacant with the graduation of Craft. Six-foot-eight, 198-pound sophomore Ben Mitchell, whose last year's stats include 3.1 points per game and 2.6 rebounds, is also a candidate at the post.

"Eddie has made a lot of improvement physically," Hartman said. "He's a very competitive kid. He's not lacking in 'want to.' Ben also has made great strides strength-wise, plus, he's a year older."

Between Mitchell or Elder, whoever isn't at center will likely be at a forward spot, along with either Tom Alfaro, a 6-foot-6, 190-pound transfer from Fresno City Community College in California where he averaged 13.8 points per game; Lafayette Watkins, who averaged 4.9 points per game last year; Parker Laketa, averaging 4.4 points last year; and Tyrone Jackson, who had an average of 4.7 points per game.

Neal Degner would have been shooting for a starting spot, but he left K-State and is now attending Stetson University in Florida.

"Alfaro is a good shooter and a good basketball player. He needs to improve on his rebounding," Hartman said, "but he jumps well and handles the ball well."

"Tyrone also has a chance to be a strong influence on this basketball team," Hartman said.

Paving the way at the guards' position will be playmaker Jim Roder — who is second behind Elder in scoring among the returnees at 6.5 points per game. Roder, a 6-foot-3 sophomore, gained honorable mention All-Big Eight honors last season and he also was named to the United Press International's all-freshmen team.

Roder started in 14 games last year — the most of any guard returning. Freddy Marshall started 21 times, but he has been declared academically ineligible for this year and Kenny Williams also quit the squad and is now going to school in Illinois.

"Our guards will have a real dogfight to see who ends up starting," Hartman said. "I would expect Jim to be right in the thick of the battle for one spot, but also Eric Watson (a transfer from Allen County Community College) will contribute this season along with Jonas Cody and Hal Bentley."

Watson stands 6-foot-2 and averaged 19.2 points for the Red Devils a year ago. Cody is a 6-foot sophomore who averaged 3.9 points, while Bentley is a senior but has seen little action at K-State.

"Watson is a solid basketball player, a good competitor and a good scorer," Hartman said.

"Jim developed into a very fine basketball player last year. He really worked hard on his game and shooting and is an excellent competitor," Hartman said.

Hartman's overall view of the team pictures the Wildcats being a quicker team than a year ago.

"I think we will have outstanding quickness and speed. Those two attributes will help us as much as anything," Hartman said. "We were quick last year, but we'll be even quicker this year."

"I'm also confident in our ability to pass and shoot the ball. We've got some players on the team who know how to execute those fundamentals and that will help us tremendously," he said.

Another thing which has put a smile on Hartman's face is the hustle and hard work he has seen from his players.

"These guys have been consistently working hard. We lack the power, strength and muscle, but we hope to compensate that with effort," Hartman said. "We're still a young team, but they have come back this year with a great attitude and more maturity."

Hartman would not say how and where K-State would finish in the conference race, but he thinks the Wildcats will be right up there with the rest of the pack.

"It's hard to make that assessment," Hartman said concerning conference predictions. "The Big Eight is going to be strong. There are a lot of quality players and teams this year. But until somebody proves otherwise and mathematically eliminates us from the league race, we can win the conference."

K-State opens this year's season in a 7:30 p.m. exhibition game Nov. 17 against Brandon University in Ahearn Field House. The Wildcats regular season starts with action Nov. 25 and 26 at the Tribune Charities Holiday Classic in Chicago.

Poor coverage of game

Editor,

For those that missed the article in Monday's paper, K-State pulled off an incredible Big Eight upset Saturday. It would have been easy to have missed the article — there weren't any front-page stories or photographs anywhere. What we did see was a half-page Busch ad on the front sports page. However, give us a chance to lose and the game story is front-page news complete with photos and every embarrassing detail. I thought the strategy was to downplay the losses, not victories. Luckily I can count on other papers to carry victories as well.

The Collegian is a great newspaper but definitely lacks in sporting coverage. Why strip K-State students' pride and the players' earned respect by overlooking the players' greatest accomplishments at a time when they need it most.

Osborne reacts to criticism from K-State coaches, team

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tom Osborne says he's tired of people accusing his Nebraska football team of running up the score.

Moreover, he says he did not respond to the criticism by vowing to score as many points as possible against hapless opponents.

There was talk around the Big Eight Conference over the weekend that Osborne had said in a radio interview that because people think the Huskers run up scores, they might as well try to run them up.

"No, I didn't say that at all," Osborne said during the Big Eight's telephone news conference with head football coaches. "I said we're tired about complaints about it because we don't feel we have done that. And if they interpreted that to mean we were going to run up the score as much as we can, that's not true at all."

The Huskers' powerful offense has put some impressive numbers on the board this year.

Sporting the No. 1 ranking since the pre-season polls in August, Nebraska has scored 44 points against Penn State, 56 against Wyoming, 84 at Minnesota and 63 against Syracuse. After dipping to a mere 14 points against Oklahoma State and 34 against Missouri, Nebraska pounded Colorado, K-State and Iowa State with 69, 51 and 72 points, respectively.

"We had complaints early when we scored 84 points against Minnesota, but the interesting thing to me was that the Minnesota coaches, the Minnesota writers and those in attendance at the game that actually saw what happened did not complain," Osborne said.

"The Minnesota papers indicated we were fairly kind. We had complaints in Missouri. Coaches there said they didn't think we did anything out of the ordinary at all."

The most outspoken complaints came from K-State coaches and players, who came out in the second half and, despite being down by 33 points, scored three unanswered touchdowns in the fourth quarter. The Wildcats said their second half surge was triggered by a fear that Nebraska was trying to embarrass them. The first half ended with Nebraska calling time out at midfield and throwing long passes toward the K-State end zone.

"But if you have to be concerned with running up the score when you're throwing the football in the first half, then I'm just going to forget about the whole thing. I'm just so tired of hearing this talk. The thing that has kind of riled us a little bit is that most of these articles have come from writers on the Eastern Seaboard or places that have simply picked up the linescores and have made assumptions that we're running up the score because we're scoring lots of points."

Osborne said that in Nebraska's first 10 games this year, "we've not had our first team in in the fourth quarter."

O'Brien announces retirement

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Larry O'Brien brought a politician's touch and a mediator's skill to the job of National Basketball Association commissioner.

He was one of John F. Kennedy's closest advisers during the 1960 presidential campaign and was later named postmaster general.

O'Brien, 66, also served as an aide to President Lyndon Johnson; chairman of the Democratic National Committee in 1970-72; and director of Sen. George McGovern's unsuccessful 1972 presidential campaign against incumbent Richard M. Nixon.

It was O'Brien's office in the Watergate Hotel which was broken into, an incident which was the spark that kindled the Watergate scandal.

O'Brien, who announced his retirement Wednesday, effective Feb. 1, 1984, became NBA commissioner on June 1, 1975, succeeding the late Walter Kennedy.

Last March, as the NBA season rushed toward the playoffs, it also appeared to be rushing toward a strike. O'Brien, however, participated in every negotiating session and a settlement was achieved without a strike.

Major league baseball's departing commissioner, Bowie Kuhn, and National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle were widely criticized for their non-involvement during their sports' labor disputes, both of which resulted in long, costly and acrimonious strikes.

Earlier this year, O'Brien and Bob Lanier, president of the NBA Players Association, announced a policy under which a player found guilty of drug use or possession can be suspended for life.

Perhaps the most noticeable rules change during O'Brien's tenure was the 1979 adoption of the three-point field goal. It had been one of the unique pro basketball rules which had seemingly died with the NBA-ABA merger.

But the most important change in the league under O'Brien occurred in the relationship between the players and owners. In 1976, the NBA and the Players Association settled the so-called "Oscar Robertson suit," creating a free agency for veteran players.

On March 31, 1983, the league and Players Association signed a labor agreement making the owners and players virtually partners in the sport's future.

Also under O'Brien, the league-wide gate receipts doubled and the revenues from television networks increased 300 percent, according to NBA statistics.

He also has overseen the development of NBA Properties into a full-fledged licensing and marketing arm of the league.

Women's team defends title...

Here's a question for all basketball fans that are worried about having to sit through the winter with no exciting games to watch, "What about the other 'Cats?"

If you're worried about Jack Hartman and his band of youngsters not being able to keep up with the opposition, drop in on a K-State women's basketball game sometime.

Not only is the team extremely talented, but it also can produce excitement and intensity that the men's team cannot always match.

Excitement? In women's basketball? You're kidding, right? Wrong!

If you were at Ahearn Field House when the women upset then third-ranked Old Dominion 58-50, or if you were there when they beat the University of Nebraska 104-103 in overtime, then you know just what I'm talking about.

Yes, that score was over 100 points. As a matter of fact, the women topped the centure mark three times last year. The men's team never even came close.

This is not high school where the girls may only score ten points a game. Last year they averaged 81.3 points per game. Compare that with the men's average of 57.4. There is no comparison.

Okay, so they can score points, but can they win?

Last year the women finished with a 25-7 record and made it to the final "Sweet 16" of the National Collegiate Athletic Association championships. They also were ranked as high as sixth in the nation and finished the season ranked 17th.

In Big Eight Conference games, the squad went 12-2 and finished as the regular season champions. They were beaten by Missouri in the finals of the Big Eight post-season tournament, but still went on to the NCAA regionals where they destroyed Illinois State 91-72. Their season ended when they lost a heartbreaker to the University of Texas in overtime.

A quick check of the men's post-season play last year will show the Wildcats were knocked out of the Big Eight tournament in the first round by Oklahoma State.

Big deal. That was last year. Besides, they lost an All-American in Priscilla Gary to graduation. Well, they also replaced her with three outstanding recruits.

One of the recruits, Carlisa Thomas, was outstanding in high school. For her efforts she was tabbed as a prep All-American. The front line returns intact and they also return two outstanding guards.

Cassandra Jones has been described as having the same tools as Gary and she is only a sophomore. Sheronda Jenkins, also a sophomore, has defensive skills that would make Jack Hartman crack a smile.

With their returning players and the new recruits, the team should be stronger this year than last. Street and Smith magazine has the women ranked seventh in its preseason poll. That's seventh in the nation, not in the Big Eight.

Now, for those of you who complain that K-State basketball is slow and somewhat less than dazzling, come and watch Lynn Hickey turn her team loose. The 'Cats love to run. The only problem one might encounter is a sore neck from watching the ball go up and down the court.

The women's squad also utilizes the 30-second clock which speeds up the game even more. There's no time to run to the concession stand to pick up a hot dog and a coke.

There has been a lot of complaints about high ticket prices floating around. Many students do not want to pay $42 for a ticket, which is exactly the cost of a season ticket for the men's home games. For a mere $6, a student can walk away with a season ticket to the women's home games. Even if you decide not to get a season ticket, it still will only cost you $1 at the door.

Women's basketball has come a long way and it deserves the same amount of recognition as the men. If you go to one game, you'll be hooked. And if you love basketball, you won't be able to stay away.

If you are sitting home some night this winter complaining of nothing to do, come join me and cheer on the 'Cats. This is basketball as it was meant to be — fast-paced, high-scoring and intense.

... men to continue rebuilding

"I feel good about it. We have maturity, a year's experience and the team is doing well."

These are the words of Jack Hartman, head coach of the K-State basketball team, as he surveys the team's outlook for this season before a group of reporters in Ahearn Field House, Wednesday, which was the Wildcats' "Media Day."

Hartman, who is beginning his 14th year as head mentor, added that his team has indeed made strides from last year's dismal showing of 12 wins and 16 losses, which is only the second losing season in his career.

"There's no doubt in my mind that we'll be a much improved team this year," Hartman said with confidence. "And the main reason why we'll be improved is that we'll be great deal more experienced."

"Last year was rough on the players, but they learned a great deal in the process and that will pay off for them starting this year."

K-State's team was said to be going through a "learning experience" last year, said Hartman, who saw his streak of 12 straight winning seasons snapped. Hartman, who currently ranks fifth among active coaches, will be looking forward to joining an elite group of coaches who have 400 or more wins. He enters the season with 395 victories.

With a total of seven returning lettermen, all of which have started for the 'Cats one time or another last season, there are no senior starters and only one two-year letterman returns — forward Lafayette Watkins.

The weakest point for the 'Cats is the absence of a natural center. With the departure of Les Craft due to graduation and Neal Degner, who transferred to Stetson University in Florida, the center position is a crucial spot.

Despite the lack of a big man in the middle, it would be presumptuous to write off the 'Cats.

During its 1976-77 campaign, the team, without the aid of a cager over 6-foot-5, made it to the NCAA (National Collegiate Athletic Association) playoffs in which it lost a heartbreaking 67-66 decision to Marquette, the eventual national champions.

While the squad is not as short in stature as the '76-'77 unit, there are no returning double-figure scorers. Eddie Elder a 6-foot-8 junior who averaged 8.7 points and 5.1 rebounds a game, is the 'Cat's leading returning scorer.

Once a center is decided upon from the likes of Alex Williams, a 6-foot-8 freshman who was redshirted last season and Ben Mitchell, a 6-foot-8 sophomore who has unlimited potential, the 'Cats will know for certain who will play the forward position. The candidates for forward are the 6-foot-6 Watkins; Tyrone Jackson, a 6-foot-6 jumping-jack; Parker Laketa, a 6-foot-7 sharpshooter; and junior college transfer Tom Alfaro, who also is 6-foot-7. However, Williams and Mitchell have the mobility to play forward and Alfaro could lend a hand at guard when his long-range shooting is needed.

The strongest point for the team is the guard situation. With the return of Jim Roder, who earned Big-Eight Conference honorable mention honors and made United Press International's all-freshman Big Eight team. Roder, a 6-foot-3 defensive standout who set a K-State shooting percentage record (.548) and is the leading returning assist man (2.5 a game) is a tremendous plus for a "still young team."

"Our guards will have a real dogfight to see who ends up starting. I would expect Jim to be right in the thick of the battle for one spot, but also Eric Watson (a juco transfer who, along with Alfaro, are the 'Cats' only newcomers) will contribute this season along with Jonas Cody and Hal Bentley," Hartman said.

In preseason polls, many have picked University of Kansas to finish first, followed by Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri, Iowa State, K-State, Colorado and Oklahoma State.

The main reason for Kansas being picked so high is by virtue of the firing of Ted Owens and the hiring of Larry Brown, who defected from the pro ranks to inherit the Jayhawk helm.

The 'Hawks' have size, experience, talent and the addition of newcomer Greg Dreiling, a 7-foot-1 transfer who averaged 8.1 points a game for Wichita State University as a freshman.

Nebraska, which lost a total of eight players from last season's squad, still ranks high in the Big Eight primarily because of the return of 6-foot-11, 235-pound Dave Hoppen, who averaged 13.9 points and 5.0 rebounds a contest last year as a mere freshman.

Oklahoma has Wayman Tisdale, a 6-foot-9 All-American who helped the Jack Hartman-coached U.S. Pan American squad to a gold medal this past summer. However, the loss of four senior starters from last year's team will hurt "Wayman University," a name coined by the Sooners' coach Billy Tubbs. However, the Sooners will be relying on three outstanding freshman recruits to pick up the slack.

Missouri also lost some fine performers to the graduation bug — Steve Stipanovich and Jon Sundvold, who helped the team to four straight Big Eight championships. Trying to fill their shoes will be Greg Cavener, Ron Jones and Prince Bridges.

Andropov goals lie dormant amid ill-health speculations

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Yuri Andropov took power vowing to overcome the Soviet Union's economic inertia, to give the nation a new sense of direction and to seek better relations with the West.

One year later, the 69-year-old Andropov is in frail health, little headway has been made in improving the economy and relations with the West have seldom been worse.

Andropov, named general secretary of the Communist Party on Nov. 12, 1982, has not appeared in public for nearly three months. He even missed the annual Revolution Day parade Monday, prompting speculation that he is seriously ill.

Despite Andropov's medical problems, some attempts to revitalize the country are going forward, including Andropov's use of regional Communist Party elections to weed out party hacks from their long-held political fiefdoms.

But with Andropov sick and his old rival, Konstantin Chernenko, back at the head of the Politburo during its rare public appearances, it's doubtful changes in the provincial party apparatus will be sweeping.

To ram through the changes he wants, Andropov must install his own men in regional party posts. Chernenko, the senior national party secretary, reportedly has sought to block such revisions and has supported officials currently in power in the provinces. They, like the 72-year-old Chernenko, owe their allegiance and jobs to Leonid Brezhnev, Andropov's predecessor.

Andropov appeared to offer a tough style contrasting with the inactivity and drift of the last years of Brezhnev's 18-year tenure.

One of the first signs of his style was his decree on worker discipline, the cornerstone of his plan to improve the economy.

In January, police and party officials began raiding bars, barber shops, movie theaters and ordering slackers back to work. Punctuality on the job became a virtue.

But Andropov, his health declining so rapidly that he required hospitalization in April, seemed unable to sustain the drive.

Some Soviet citizens now call the campaign a joke.

"Nothing's changed a bit. They (the leadership) didn't have the will to follow through. I don't think anybody does or will," said one Soviet citizen who declined to be identified.

In one area, however, Andropov's resolve remains undiminished — his campaign to block the NATO deployment of 572 new American medium-range missiles in Western Europe beginning next month.

The centerpiece of Andropov's foreign policy has been to divide the NATO alliance, using the missile issue as the cutting tool.

With the United States and Kremlin each accusing the other of intransigence at the missile reduction talks in Geneva, Andropov appears ready to order his negotiators to abandon the discussions once the deployment starts.

Will the walkout be for dramatic effect, lasting only until spring like the Americans and their NATO partners suggest, or will it mark a new militarization by the Kremlin and further belt-tightening for the populace as official Soviet sources claim?

The answer probably depends on Andropov's health and which Kremlin faction takes power if it continues to deteriorate. Andropov, despite all his tough talk about missiles, has always softened his threats with appeals for better relations with the West.

Will the military get a bigger say in the making of foreign policy than it already has? Andropov is believed to owe a big debt to Defense Minister Dmitri Ustinov for his quick assumption of power.

Book about Italian Red Brigades shatters gang's mysterious image

By The Associated Press

ROME — A repentant terrorist has shattered the image of the Red Brigades as cold-blooded professionals in a book that portrays the feared leftist gang as often bungling and plagued by mishaps.

Patrizio Peci describes his life-on-the-run as a string of bombs that would not explode, shots fired accidentally in secret hideouts and cars trapped in traffic jams in the middle of an escape.

"People imagine the life of a 'brigatista' (Red Brigades guerrilla) is all violence, mystery and adventure," writes Peci in his book "Io, L'Inferno" ("I the Inferno"), the first public glimpse into the daily life of an Italian terrorist.

"Those moments are very few. The rest is nothing but problems because the 'cause' hardly distracts you or helps you make peace with your girlfriend...that is if you manage to have one," he says in the book co-authored by historian Bruno Giordano Guerri. It's now No. 3 on the national best-seller list.

The Red Brigades are believed to have participated in nearly 100 attacks between 1974 and 1980, according to government statistics.

Fifty-five people died. Since then they have been blamed for dozens of other attacks, although the numbers have declined.

Its most spectacular blows were the 1978 kidnapping and murder of five-time Premier Aldo Moro and the abduction of U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier in 1981. Dozier was rescued by police after 42 days in captivity.

Peci, 32, was "sentenced" to death by the Red Brigades for helping police arrest scores of terrorists after his defection in 1980. He served more than two years in a high-security prison, was paroled and now lives in police custody.

His younger brother, Roberto, was kidnapped and shot to death in 1981 by the Red Brigades in a futile attempt to stop Peci from talking.

"Even the most beautiful moments of underground life end up being ridiculous and grotesque," says Peci, who was found guilty by Italian courts of several terrorists attacks that killed seven people and wounded 17. Under a controversial law designed to encourage terrorist defections, he was given a reduced sentence.

Peci, who lived in the central coastal village of San Benedetto until he joined the Red Brigades in the mid-1970s, says his first armed action was a knee-capping — a terrorist tactic aimed at wounding Red Brigades targets in the legs.

"We waited for hours in a garage. When my target, a high-level Fiat employee, was finally few steps away from me, I pulled my pistol aimed, and...Click. No shot. I had simply forgotten to load it."

Unfortunately, for the intended victim, Peci had another pistol which did function.

"When people now talk about the military training of the Red Brigades they make me laugh. It's all kids' stuff," he says.

Peci says bad luck also dogged the group. He tells a story of when he and a fellow terrorist agreed to meet with a third party at the doorsteps of a Turin church to plan an attack. As they waited for the third man, a young couple holding hands approached them.

"I thought they were undercover cops and we began to sweat as we went to our weapons inside our pockets. Instead, the young man said: 'We are in trouble and have to get married now but we don't have witnesses. You gotta help us...'"

Home brewing offers alternative to high cost of commercial beer

By KIM HUTCHISON
Staff Writer

Turn it loose, turn it loose, turn it loose tonight — for just a fraction of the cost to drink in Aggieville. For some K-State students, home brewing is a fun, inexpensive, easy hobby and an alternative to the high cost of commercial beers.

In his first attempt at home brewing, Rod Urbanek, junior in electrical engineering, concocted five cases of beer. He began brewing his beer in August while at home in Topeka. Urbanek became interested in making beer after talking about it with a relative.

"My brother-in-law in California gave me a book on beer-making for Christmas. He was always talking about making beer when he was in college," Urbanek said. Urbanek's father also makes wine.

"I got all the equipment to make it from him (his father)," he said.

To make beer there are four essential ingredients: malted barley extract, corn sugar, yeast and water. The flavor of the beer depends on the extract used. The alcohol content is achieved by varying the amount of sugar added. White sugar may be used as a substitute for corn sugar, although it is more difficult to mix. The brewing process usually consists of two stages.

The primary stage of brewing begins with mixing the malted barley extract and sugar together and boiling them to kill germs. The mixture is then allowed to cool before adding the yeast. If the mixture is too hot the yeast will die. The mixture is then diluted with water and maintained at a temperature between 65 and 75 degrees Fahrenheit.

The beer is put into a container and allowed to ferment. The container should be of a material that will not affect the taste of the beer. Urbanek used a trash can lined with plastic. The can was covered with plastic wrap to prevent air and bacteria from entering.

The beer is left in the container for a week and allowed to ferment. During this time the yeast eats the sugar, creating a bubbling action.

"You're exchanging sugar for alcohol," Urbanek said.

Most of the alcohol content is acquired during this stage of the brewing. The escaping carbon dioxide forms a cushion on top of the mixture which also helps to keep out bacteria.

Maintaining the beer at 65 to 75 degrees allows the mixture to ferment slowly. Basements are recommended for storing the beer during this stage.

"The longer it takes to ferment, the better the beer will be," Dean Taylor, owner of The Palace, said. His business carries a full line of beer-making products. About 12 varieties of malted barley extracts are sold at the store.

"Now is a good time to make beer because the temperature is cool and you can store the beer almost anywhere," Taylor said.

"Some real beer connoisseurs lager the beer," he said. Lagering refers to slowly fermenting the beer at a cool temperature, often using a refrigerator. Lager beer is characterized by its full body.

During the secondary stage, the beer is siphoned out of the container into a large, narrow-necked bottle. Urbanek used a distilled water bottle. The narrow neck prevents the least possible amount of carbon dioxide from escaping. A fermentation lock in the neck of the container prevents air and bacteria from getting to the beer.

The beer ferments for four weeks, although this time period varies, Urbanek said. The fermentation of the beer is complete when the bubbling stops. The beer is then measured with a hydrometer, which measures specific gravity and alcohol content.

When the fermentation is complete, the beer is siphoned into individual bottles. Care must be taken to avoid siphoning sediment from the yeast on the bottom. A half teaspoon of sugar is added to each bottle.

"The yeast cells work on the sugar to make more of the byproduct carbon dioxide. That's where you get your carbonation from," Urbanek said.

Acacia gum can also be added to hold the head on a beer longer. Once the beer is bottled it is aged for a minimum of two months, he said.

For beer on tap, the liquid may be siphoned into a tank and hooked up to a tap.

"It's like a pop tank and it holds about five gallons," Urbanek said.

Urbanek has been taste-testing his beer every week to see if it has aged long enough. The beer has a somewhat cidery smell.

"It might still be a little green yet," Urbanek said. The hydrometer tested the beer at about 6.5 percent alcohol content by weight. The alcohol content was about 3 percent higher than what the recipe should have made. Urbanek attributed this to too much sugar.

"My dad got a little anxious this summer and added some more sugar," Urbanek said.

The cost of home brewing was relatively inexpensive for Urbanek.

"I made five cases which averaged out to about 25 cents a bottle," he said.

The brewing process may be simplified even further by eliminating the secondary stage.

"Most people are using the one-stage system," Taylor said. The beer is drinkable after three weeks, but is clearer and more appetizing after six weeks. The one-stage process was used by Dan Burnett, a K-State alumnus in physical education.

Burnett allowed the beer to ferment for nine days in the primary stage. He then siphoned it into another container and added more sugar before putting the beer into the individual bottles. Unlike Urbanek, he did not add sugar to each individual bottle.

"You have to be careful about adding sugar to the beer while it's in the bottle," Burnett said. Too much sugar can create an excess amount of carbonation and cause the bottle to explode.

"You can drink the beer one week after it is bottled, but it will be flat," he said.

He became interested in beer brewing when he "got on a kick to be self-reliant."

"I was looking for ways to make things on my own," Burnett said. He saw an ad in a magazine on home brewing. Burnett and his roommate, who had made root beer and wine, decided to attempt brewing beer. An advantage of home brew is that it doesn't have to be stored in refrigeration, unlike many commercial beers.

"Commercial brewers use preservatives and additives and tell you to keep the beer cold," Burnett said. By keeping the beer cold one can't taste the additives as much. Commercial beer begins to lose its taste after about six weeks, he said.

An initial home-brewing setup may cost between $20 for an economy kit and $40 for a deluxe model. Among the items included in a deluxe kit are a bottle capper, caps, hydrometer, siphon and extract.

Acquiring enough bottles for the beer may present a problem. The beginning brewer will need between 55 and 60 bottles, Taylor said. Urbanek and Burnett bought their bottles from local taverns for approximately two dollars per case.

However, distributors have a tendency to frown on this, Taylor said. The cost for the distributor to make the bottles is greater than what the taverns charge, he said.

If the letters could talk...

By Pamella Johnson

Members of Tau Beta Pi, an engineering honorary, whitewash the "KS" letters after the 1983 K-State vs. University of Kansas football game.

Standing out atop Prospect Point, or "K-Hill," as students have nicknamed it, the "KS" letters are a bigger than life-size tradition. For the story's essence to unfold, the 62-year-old giant letters would need to talk.

It all began in 1921. Construction of K-Hill started with a "K" symbolizing K-State. Measuring 80 feet long, 60 feet wide and 1 foot deep, it was made at a cost of $350.

Five hundred to 1,000 students from the engineering department cleared the ground, excavated the area and made the form for the letter. Concrete was poured into the "K" and the job was completed in one day.

The "K" was then whitewashed and lined with a luminous paint. In the center, a bronze star, no longer visible, was placed in memory of K-State alumni who died in World War I.

In 1930, engineering students climbed K-Hill to construct an "S" beside the "K." To raise money for construction costs, students held boxing matches, showed movies and sponsored a tagday (a day when student charity collectors received contributions; in turn giving each contributor a tag). Five hundred dollars was spent in constructing an "S" a foot higher and wider than the "K."

Since the 1960s, considerable interest has existed to add a "U" to the "KS" on the hill. In the early '60s, the University received a quit claim deed, clearing the title to approximately two acres of land on K-Hill.

Interest calmed after a $10,000 price tag was submitted for the cost of the additional letter. In addition to the economic problems, the physical conditions on the hill served as a deterrent to the "U" addition.

"A large gully exists where the 'U' is to be placed," said John Alexander, senior in electrical engineering and president of Tau Beta Pi.

"The latest cost estimate of adding the 'U' up there is $20,000," Alexander said. "No plans are underway to add the 'U.' I'd like to see the 'U' up there. In the past, putting it up with the help of students lowered the cost. Today, the building up of land around it which is needed next to the 'S' takes a lot of money," he said.

"We have and will look to all of the University for donations," Tillman said.

Uncertainty of who owned the land the letters "KS" sit on was cleared after a deed was handed over claiming K-State as owner of two acres of land on Prospect Point.

"At one time, (the University of) Tennessee had title to K-Hill," said Tillman. The deed was passed from Tau Beta Pi of Knoxville, Tenn., to the K-State chapter. Tau Beta Pi could not own land, so the honorary turned ownership rights over to the University in exchange for K-Hill maintenance rights.

"Building of a letter hill was the thing for college students to do in the 1920s," said Frank Tillman, head of industrial engineering and faculty adviser for Tau Beta Pi, an engineering honorary.

"Kansas State, Arizona State and a lot of other schools built a letter hill. The reasoning behind it at that time may have been for the 'K' to visually symbolize K-State."

Lighting festivities began in 1947 as Homecoming projects for the engineering honorary Sigma Tau, which later merged with Tau Beta Pi. They lighted the "KS" letters for three hours, from 7 to 10 p.m., illuminating the hillside for a symbol and guide to returning alumni.

Later the letters were lit in an arrangement with the military science department, and a search light beamed across Manhattan to the letters.

In the early '50s, 12 athletes, each carrying a lighted oil-soaked torch, ran from Seaton Hall to K-Hill to light torches atop "KS," honoring the beginning of engineering Open House.

Further drawing attention to the letters were Manhattan businesses which located near Prospect Point and incorporated "K-Hill" into their names.

Besides providing annual maintenance for K-Hill, Tau Beta Pi has to deal with pranks. "Each year after the fall game, students try to deface K-Hill," Alexander said.

A former KU student recalls the events of the night the "KS" letters were the target of an attack by KU culprits.

"From KU, a group of 16 in five cars left about 2 a.m. to make it to Manhattan by 3:30 a.m.; to get there after the security guards would have gone home.

"When they got to town, they sent one car ahead to see if anyone was still up on the hill. The car on the hill called down (by walkie-talkie) to say it was clear. A perimeter was set around the hill so if anyone had come, the ones on top could be warned and get out of there on time.

"They worked very hard transforming the letters and spray painting them for a blue 'KU' to be spelled just before daybreak. The group was able to leave while it was still dark.

"Returning home, the only problem they encountered was at KU. They found the Chi Omega fountain was filled with purple detergent. A jayhawk was spray-painted purple, and 'KSU' was written on buildings, monuments and trash cans. They (KU) were much more perpetrated against; however, KU won the game that year."

Teddy O. Hodges, faculty adviser of Tau Beta Pi at the time of a 1971 attack, said he had heard it took the culprits, allegedly from KU, two nights to transform the "KS" letters into KU letters by painting the "S" blue.

In addition to receiving numerous attacks after the KSU-KU football game, the K-Hill letters often get painted with graffiti. Each year since the '30s, Tau Beta Pi has whitewashed the rocks.

The whitewashing is a Tau Beta Pi's standard pledge project. Engineering students are invited to join in the event. A group of 50 to 60 Tau Beta Pi members meet at Seaton Hall and take the bumpy road up to K-Hill on a Sunday following the KU game at 1 p.m.; spending all afternoon on the project, Alexander said.

"This year the whitewashing project took place on Sunday, Oct. 16. A water truck was donated by the University for help in mixing of the whitewash solution," Alexander said.

"The whitewashing procedure is a type of cookbook operation," he continued. "We pour the whitewash mixture down on top of the letters and brush it across with brooms. After the painting and clearing of bushes around the letters, it does a lot toward making it look better.

"It really sparkles up there."

unraveling threads of evidence

By Joel Torczon

The murder trials of Wayne Williams in Atlanta and the Hillside Strangler in Los Angeles were woven with a common thread: both used microscopic fibers as evidence. During the trials, a K-State professor was brought into the national spotlight when he was called upon to analyze the fibers with techniques he developed.

Randall Bresee, an associate professor in the Department of Clothing, Textiles and Interior Design, and other researchers in the field of fiber forensics (use of fibers as evidence in court proceedings) are trying to develop analytical methods that will increase the evidential value of fibers.

Some of Bresee's techniques, such as one which involves the use of a low-energy laser, have yet to be admitted as evidence in courts. Widespread acceptance of proven investigative techniques is a basic requirement, as contained in a 1923 case, Frye vs. United States. This precedent has been accepted in courts of 45 states.

However, Bresee feels confident his techniques will soon be admissible in court. "My techniques," he said, "provide more discrimination than conventional fiber analyses, such as electron microscopes."

"It is hard to analyze fibers," Bresee admitted, "but in cases where you really don't know if a defendant is guilty, then you are going to have to rely on science," adding that "fiber forensics is a relatively undeveloped science that needs more work. I am going to stay there and keep working on it."

Bresee uses his laser light scattering technique to study structural fiber changes, physically and chemically, as they become weathered and worn from consumer usage — a difference from current fiber forensics which establishes only similarity between fibers.

The fact that almost everyone wears common fibers, such as the cotton fibers found in denim, has made it difficult to identify the source of fiber evidence, Bresee said. He added that his research is focused on synthetic fibers, which have more distinctive traits than cotton. "Age, origin and owner's lifestyle can impart uniqueness to a fiber," Bresee explained. His analytic techniques can trace the source of fibers with remarkable accuracy in much the same manner as fingerprints.

"You and I each buy the same polyester shirt from Sears," Bresee said, "but after we wear them awhile, the fibers are going to be different. Exposure to sunlight, body oils, perspiration salts, laundering in hot or cold water — all of these things change a fiber."

Because his techniques allow for much greater accuracy than conventional techniques in determining whether two fibers came from the same source, Bresee has received national publicity. Science 81 magazine published a special report in the September issue titled "Common Threads From Atlanta," which details the growing sophistication of fiber analysis.

Despite fiber evidence becoming more valuable than ever, Bresee warns that there are many possible sources for a fiber. "We have to see how common the fiber is," he said, "and look for other sources to determine whether they may have provided the fiber evidence."

"Looking for other sources" is exactly what Bresee did when he testified in defense of Wayne Williams, a black free-lance photographer and aspiring talent promoter who was charged with murder of two of 28 young blacks in Atlanta over a 22-month period.

During a preliminary hearing, the prosecutors told the jury that 18 different fibers and dog hairs found from 18 different sources in Williams' home and car were microscopically similar to fibers found on a total of 12 slain young blacks. Bresee admitted that it was difficult to disprove the prosecutors' contention as he went over the evidence at the Georgia State Crime Laboratory — particularly when he found in Williams' bedroom, matching fibers from a rare green carpet which was made by a small South Carolina company.

However, in defense of Williams, he testified that fibers used to link Williams to the murders "were similar in important respects" to fibers taken at random from a lawyer's office and a fabric store.

In addition, he submerged a pillowcase in the Chattahoochee River near where two black youth's bodies were found and collected "an amazing number of fibers" on the cloth. "The river seems to be full of fibers," he said.

The suggestion that the fibers could have come from the river or other sources despite microscopic similarities, and that fiber identification was an inexact science "had the prosecution on the run," Bresee said.

Bresee denied that his methods were only experimental despite the fact that they had only recently been applied to murder cases. However, he failed to prove his case as Williams was convicted to serve two consecutive life-terms in prison.

Bresee said his reputation as an authority on textile fiber identification was enhanced as a result of his testimony in the case.

Soon after the Williams trial, Bresee was placed in charge of acrylic fiber evidence for the Hillside Strangler defense team in a murder trial in Los Angeles, Calif.

His gallery of picture profiles includes fiber samples of polyester (there are more than 1,000 types used in everything from carpets to umbrellas), wool, nylon, acrylic and cotton clothing, as well as hair from dogs, cattle, horses, deer, mink, fox and fur.

His laboratory analysis, with the aid of sophisticated laboratory equipment, involves two steps.

"We try to show where the fibers are similar," Bresee said, "and then to evaluate the fibers' evidential value."

Bresee's laser technique reveals more than could be learned from electron microscopes and is less expensive — about $1,000 as compared to more than $50,000 for the electron microscope analysis. In addition, his technique is quick, simple and completely nondestructive, unlike other methods.

Bresee has adapted three forensic tests, already used in analyzing other types of evidence such as blood and dirt, to fiber analysis, and is working on others to obtain even greater evidential value from fibers. They include:

Density gradient analysis. A method commonly used by crime laboratories to compare glass and soils, it can measure fiber density to four or five significant figures — enough to distinguish a fiber laundered in cold water from a fiber laundered in hot water — when dropped in a density gradient column, a vertical tube containing liquids mixed so that density changes continuously from top to bottom.

Dilute solution viscometry. This method involves examining changes in molecular weight which result from consumer use, instead of the physical characteristics which are determined by laser and density analysis. It determines the change in a fiber at the molecular level by measuring the length of time it takes a solution made from a fiber to flow through a small capillary.

Thermal shrinkage. Information from a fiber about one-half millimeter long placed between special heat blocks is revealed through a microscope as it shrinks at a certain temperature.

Currently Bresee's research includes chemically "branding" the hair fibers of livestock and domestic animals. Animal owners can mix one to three non-toxic minerals in their animals' diet at variable intervals and sequences. Traces of these harmless minerals deposit in each hair, thus creating a "brand" which can be detected by X-ray analysis.

Bresee is also characterizing aging fibers and dating old fibers by looking at changes in mechanical properties during aging. He said he is expecting a fiber sample from the "Shroud of Turin," and may be able to determine its authenticity. The shroud, which has a likeness of Jesus Christ imprinted upon it, is thought to be Jesus' burial cloth.

FINNEGAN uncovering the past

By Joel Torczon

Michael Finnegan measures a skull with a caliper.

Every odd summer, a K-State professor ventures along with a group of American archaeologists and anthropologists to Jordan to excavate what may be the biblical cities of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Michael Finnegan, professor of anthropology, has participated since 1975 in identifying the remains of the two cities which, according to the Bible, were destroyed for the people's immoral ways.

"Bab edh-Dhra' and Numeira are ancient cities that were alive 4,000 to 5,000 years ago," said Finnegan. "They may be Sodom and Gomorrah, as they are in the right place and are from the right time period described in Genesis."

Finnegan, who is a physical anthropologist (scientist who studies the origin and culture of man in present and past time), pointed out that "most of the archaeology I do (at the site) is as a consultant in understanding a village of a particular time period."

The project, Expedition to the Southeast Dead Sea Valley, Jordan, currently involves aiding in excavating two of the five ancient cities that the group hopes to discover, Finnegan said, adding that the purpose of the excavation is "to reconstruct the past."

Finnegan pointed out that all five cities are located on alluvial fans in the Dead Sea Valley.

The two cities were covered with silt deposits 7 to 8 meters (19 to 22 feet) deep, Finnegan said. He added that the Dead Sea Valley's depth, 400 meters (approximately 1,300 feet) below sea level, made things uncomfortable for the crew members.

"Think it was hot in Kansas this past summer?" Finnegan asked. "Well, we'd work until 11:30 a.m. or 115 degrees — whichever comes first. The hottest day was 122 degrees."

Finnegan explained that everything at the site has to be carefully analyzed.

"We take notes, pictures and measurements of everything we dig up," Finnegan said, "because what we're doing is a systematic destruction of the site."

During the past summer, Finnegan also participated in an archaeological research on human and animal material at a Qarqur (an Arabic name for a mound) in Syria, as part of a project sponsored by the American Schools of Oriental Research. The organization consists of about 400 members of colleges who are interested in oriental research.

Besides being a leading world expert in the study of archaeological remains, Finnegan also is one of the nation's foremost forensic anthropologists. He spends a portion of his time examining skeletal remains to provide answers for law enforcement authorities, particularly in criminal cases.

Much as law enforcement authorities receive reports from criminologists concerning fingerprints or toolmarks on various pieces of equipment, Finnegan inspects materials sent to the osteology laboratory in Waters Hall and submits a report after completing his examination.

"The fairly unique cases, involving skeletal material, or when the soft tissue is greatly deteriorated and most internal organs are missing, offer a challenge usually met by a forensic anthropologist," said Finnegan in an article he published for law enforcement purposes.

Finnegan's osteological report identifies factors such as age, race, sex and stature that may help answer law enforcement officials' questions, such as "was murder involved?" and "how long ago did the individual die?" Occasionally Finnegan will testify in a murder trial to verify his findings.

In finding the cause of a person's death, Finnegan said he searches for trauma on the body, which can be found in three types.

"The first, and possibly the most important, is trauma which may have resulted in the death of the individual," he stressed. "The second of these is trauma which may have happened to the person earlier in life — broken bones, amputations and other injuries which may serve in the identification of this individual based on earlier medical records, histories or X-rays."

"The third purpose of an analysis of trauma relates to the environment in which the body was deposited and possible trauma which occurred sometime after death — rodent gnawing, destruction of bone due to cattle or some other animal wandering through the site, or destruction of material involved with laboratory analysis."

After listing bone material or other foreign material for evidence purposes, Finnegan inspects the condition of the material with reference to which joints are clearly presented and how much soft tissue remains on the various bones.

"It helps to have a certain amount of pathology," Finnegan explained, "to find what the person's life was like." The identification of diseased conditions and other pathological changes is more often useful as an investigative aid rather than a means of identification, he added.

"For example, a skeleton that shows severe degenerative arthritis or rheumatoid arthritis might be helpful in limiting the search for an identification."

There are many methods of determining skeletal age at the time of death, Finnegan said, and which method is used "depends on which bones are present, the condition of the bones, and the expertise of the forensic anthropologist."

"Most methods are fairly easy and have good documentation, while some methods require a fairly elaborate laboratory setup."

Finnegan can also determine sex, race and stature. Stature is typically estimated from one or more of the long bones of the individual, he pointed out.

"Additionally, recent material has come to light where the bones of the head or bones of the arch of the foot might also be used for stature estimation," he said, "although they are not as reliable as stature estimated from the major long bones."

Dispersal of adherent soft tissue on the bones, covering (such as clothing) and environmental cover (such as tall grass and brush) all help in determining the time of death, Finnegan said. "It is most critical that the forensic anthropologist see the material when it is first found or be at the site during the original investigation."

Possible cause of death and identification of the individual are factors to determine, he said, but often no trauma or medical records can identify the person.

In that case, Finnegan will "conclude that the bones give no indication of the possible cause or causes of death and that the individual cannot be identified at the time."

Finnegan said he is "fairly accurate" on his reports for law enforcement officials, but there have been times when he has to confront relatives to convince them that "these are the bones of your son."

Such a confrontation, he said, "is an emotional and psychological thing. They don't want to believe or accept the fact that their daughter or son died."

Finnegan recalled an unusual experience in which he inspected some bones that a plumber brought up through a toilet. He dispelled suspicions that the young couple murdered a newborn child and concluded that the bones "were fish bones."

This year Congress enacted legislation to start an information system on missing persons similar to NCIC (National Criminal Information Center), Finnegan said.

"It (the act) is something new," he said. "They can call up in the computer a listing of all the people reported missing that fit a particular description."

"For example, in the case of a missing 18-year-old girl, the computer can give a list of all the white females in the United States who are 16 to 18 years old and between 5-foot-6 and 5-foot-9, and there may be 50 to 60 of them who fit the description."

Finnegan remarked that it is important to keep records, because there is an increasing number of missing persons each year.

"Every year, there are 10,000 persons who are reported missing in Chicago alone," he pointed out, "and there are another 30,000 to 40,000 missing that are not reported."

The four-faced clock on midcampus was a gift from four classes — 1968, 1971, 1973 and 1974.

Gifts of Class

By Melinda Brzon

The pedestrian court north of Anderson Hall was given by the class of 1969. The lights, moved from Nichols Gymnasium, were a gift from the class of 1913.

*"I know a spot that I love full well,
Tis not in forest, nor yet in dell,
Ever it holds thee in magic spell,
I think of thee alma mater."*

For one week I was held in the magic spell that only the past can give. In stack 4A of Farrell Library, I pushed open volume after volume of Royal Purples, desperately searching for something that had been lost — senior classes of Kansas State University.

I wanted to write a story about gifts senior classes have given to K-State. The four-faced clock on campus was a gift. Each face of the clock shows a different time and class year. How many classes endowed K-State with a gift?

My quest for the answer led me to the Hollis House. The Hollis House, a small stone building overshadowed by Throckmorton, shelters the Alumni Association. A receptionist led me through a maze of offices to stairs that ascended to Amy Button Renz's office. Renz is assistant director of the Alumni Association.

She said that for about the last 15 years, seniors have sold senior T-shirts to raise money for class gifts. "The past three or four classes have not had enough money to spend on a project," Renz said.

Two classes, 1975 and 1976, she added, have money but haven't decided what to do with it; a project hasn't appealed to them.

Senior class gift proposals are made from someone within the University. From these proposals, class officers decide what they want to spend their money on.

As Renz talked, she looked for the information I was really after — a record of senior class gifts. Neither folders, file cabinets nor old magazines held the answer. After a trip into another room, Renz said she could not find any record of gifts.

Wanda McVey, Renz said, would know where or if there was a record of class gifts. Leaving Renz with my name and phone number just in case she found more information, I followed my imaginary bread crumbs back to the receptionist. McVey's office was in the same building. The receptionist said McVey was a gold mine of information. I could only hope.

After being informed of the search for a record of senior class gifts, McVey, accounting clerk for the KSU Foundation, consulted her files and called University Facilities. She then told me no record of class gifts were kept.

No record, no history existed. How was I to know which classes had left K-State with a present?

From the Hollis House I drifted past the aromatic flowers in front of Ackert Hall to continue my quest for senior class gifts. Through campus I wandered. Amidst the trees, buildings, and students I found eight gifts, each proudly displaying their class year.

Looking at each gift and writing down the class year, I realized it wasn't the gifts that matter. The past senior classes are important — the people behind the gifts.

Farrell Library was approached with great apprehension. I knew I would end up wandering through some ancient part of the library. Stack 4A wasn't as bad as I had envisioned, but standing on a plywood floor was not reassuring.

The Royal Purple, a yearbook of past classes, helped show me what the senior classes who gave gifts were like.

The earliest class gift I found was a stone entryway on the south end of campus between Thompson Hall and Nichols Gymnasium given by the class of 1911. The yearbook from 1911, with the senior class of Kansas State Agricultural College (KSAC), had somehow vanished from the shelves in Farrell.

"Class of 1913" is engraved in two plaques placed on each end of four lamps on the patio, or Pedestrian Court, at the north end of Anderson Hall. The lights were relocated from the Nichols Gymnasium site. The senior class of 1913 boasted champion football and basketball teams in its Royal Purple, which was dedicated to Professor H. H. King. A bit of humor from the class of 1913 was a poem from a section of the yearbook called "Too Tired."

*"Rock-a-bye senior on the tree top,
As long as you study, the cradle will rock,
But if you stop digging, the cradle will fall,
And down will come senior, diploma and all."*

A stone gateway from the class of 1916 opens the drive that starts from Anderson Avenue and extends past Calvin and Kedzie halls. The class of 1916 started the custom of wearing freshman caps. Caps were to be worn by freshmen on Tuesdays and Thursdays and on athletic game days. Capless freshmen were paddled in Aggieville. This custom seems to have disappeared; too bad, freshmen.

The class of 1916 witnessed the first annual Homecoming Day on Saturday, Oct. 23, 1915. It also saw its Aggies (now Wildcats) defeated 14-6 by archrival University of Kansas.

A stone bulletin or notice board by Eisenhower Hall was given by two classes 20 years apart, the classes of 1937 and 1957. The class of 1937 celebrated Homecoming with a pajama parade and went on that day to beat KU 26-6.

The class of 1957 was the first senior class to go through enrollment in Ahearn Field House. The first greek week was in the spring of 1957.

The class of 1948 also left a stone bulletin or notice board between Thompson and Nichols. Milton Eisenhower was president of K-State during the 1947 to 1948 school year. Milton's brother, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, who would later become president, was guest of honor for Homecoming weekend. On Oct. 25, 1947, 25,000 alumni and visitors heard Gen. Eisenhower speak at the Danforth All Faiths Chapel dedication before the game.

The controversial clock east of Seaton Hall was given to K-State by four classes — 1968, 1971, 1973 and 1974. These senior classes attended and graduated from K-State during years of controversy. The Vietnam conflict, the women's liberation movement and Watergate were events of this era. Perhaps the classes never wanted each clock to show the same time.

The mobile in the Union courtyard was a class gift. I spent one afternoon in the Union trying to find the plaque. The plaque, in plain sight by the Student Government Services office, was given by the class of 1970. The class of 1970 saw former President Nixon speak at K-State. It, for the first time, had the option whether to attend graduation exercises, which had been mandatory, or not.

Recently (in October), a plaque was added to the patio on the north end of Anderson Hall. This plaque reads: "This Pedestrian Court constructed in May 1969 is a gift to Kansas State University from the senior class of 1969." Before the plaque was put up, the Pedestrian Court didn't have its name, and it wasn't known that it was a gift from any class.

These classes have left something concrete to K-State that bears their name. Their gifts remind us they were here, or sometimes that they are no longer here.

The bulletin board and gateway sit at the south end of campus between Thompson Hall and Nichols Gymnasium. The gateway is from the class of 1911, and the bulletin board was given by the 1948 seniors.

Urban Forestry

Leafing Out

By Jeanie Johnson

Trees in city environments are usually taken for granted...until they're missing.

When the tornado swept through Clay Center in 1973, it humbled stately trees which lined Sixth Street. The tornado, coupled with the disastrous Dutch elm disease of the 1960s, left barren paths once shaded by a green canopy.

Today much of Clay Center's street sides are planted with young trees, and although the replacements lack the grandeur of the stately giants, they represent a dedication to the city's future.

Other Kansas towns, like Clay Center, are rejuvenating their tree populations. Greening up a city is accomplished with the help of state and extension foresters. The first step is creating a tree board, composed of community volunteers who are charged with carrying out a city's tree plans.

Since 1972, the Clay Center Tree Board has overseen the addition of 1,245 trees to the community, according to the July 1983 report prepared by the K-State Department of Forestry.

In Clay Center, new species replaced dead or dying American elms and Siberian elms to reduce vulnerability to Dutch elm disease. New and replacement plantings in the 10-year period resulted in a 35 percent increase in tree numbers. When increases in tree size and tree dollar values are considered, street-side trees' economic value shot up 64 percent, the report said.

What is happening in Clay Center is typical of a nationwide trend called "urban forestry" — the care and improvement of the total forest environment where people live.

R. Max Peterson, chief of the U.S. Department of Agriculture Forest Service, calls urban forests "our undesignated national forests." Nationally, the urban forest consists of 69 million acres.

Also referred to as municipal forestry, city forestry and community forestry, the urban forestry concept is relatively recent, according to Gene Grey, professor of forestry.

In the past, foresters and arborists focused on managing city trees individually; now the focus is shifting to collective management, Grey explained. Foresters are altering their approach by managing urban trees as an ecosystem, or integrated natural system, in the entire area used and influenced by the city.

The changing management philosophy is a result of increased concern for protecting and preserving city trees. Tree diseases, such as Dutch elm disease, phloem necrosis and oak wilt, caused the demise of vast numbers of city trees.

In Kansas, Dutch elm disease destroyed more than 1.5 million American elms in the past 20 years.

Insect problems have also plagued urban forests. Expanding urban areas have swallowed naturally forested areas, alarming environmentalists.

"In the mid-1960s, hand-in-hand with the environmental movement, citizen concern was brought to bear on the USDA Forest Service to develop a forestry program for metropolitan areas," Grey said.

The Forest Service was besieged with questions about how to approach problems of erosion, insects, disease and tree destruction, he added.

When Congress gave the Forest Service authority to assist state forestry agencies in establishing urban forestry programs in 1972 (by amending the Forest Management Act of 1950), Kansas was already moving ahead.

In 1971, Kansas was one of four states to initiate a pilot program in community forestry, Jim Nighswonger, professor of forestry, said.

At that time, Kansas was in particular need for city forestry programs. Some cities in Eastern Kansas once consisted of 90 percent American elms, so removing the trees killed by Dutch elm disease became a major problem. A costly and time consuming chore, large scale tree removal required a whole new plan for city tree planting, care and maintenance.

Trees in Kansas towns also were dying as they reached the end of their lifespan, Nighswonger added. Many Kansas towns are either nearing or have already celebrated a centennial anniversary, and trees planted then are a uniform old age and need to be replaced.

Kansas was a pioneer in developing forestry programs for small communities, Nighswonger said. In 1971, other pilot programs in Missouri, Georgia and Florida were used in metropolitan areas.

"In Kansas, the towns that really need help are small," Nighswonger explained. Smaller towns have a lower tax base, so they are in more need of assistance than large cities, which often have resources to conduct their own programs. Topeka, Kansas City and Wichita have their own forestry programs.

The small community forestry program has been successful in Kansas and has served as a model for other states. "The step-by-step procedure (for implementing a community forestry program) was adopted nationally,"

Nighswonger said. "All states follow it or a facsimile of it."

Nighswonger is currently the head of Kansas' community forestry program. His duties as an extension specialist include assisting communities with developing plans and procedures.

A landscape architect, Nighswonger can provide detailed landscaping plans for cities. He and other state and extension foresters guide tree inventories, demonstrate correct pruning methods, mark trees for removal, answer questions, suggest ideal planting species, advise on disease and insect problems, and evaluate the tree boards' goals.

In Clay Center, the community forestry program began as a gathering at the First Christian Church in the summer of 1972.

"I went as well as many of my friends," Betty Sharp, current Tree Board chairman, said. "Just a crazy volunteer," the enthusiastic middle-aged woman is employed at Jentronics in Clay Center. She was an original member of the board, and her philosophy, "to help and do what I can," is still her motivation after six years as Tree Board chairman.

Once the nine-member Clay Center Tree Board was appointed by the mayor in 1972, a tree inventory determined the exact location and condition of every street tree (trees between the curb and the sidewalk). After the survey was conducted, information about planting, pruning and removal needs was available.

Using the survey as a guide, the board placed orange markers on the curb to indicate what species to plant and planting location. A nursery was contracted to plant the street trees.

An ordinance, enacted to legalize the city tree program, provided for creation and duties of the Tree Board, which requests funds for planting projects from the City Council.

Funds also are available from a tree trust, which is supported by private donations. Residents are encouraged to donate the cost of purchasing a tree in honor of birthdays, anniversaries, memorials or holidays.

Once the tree is planted, the property owner is responsible for watering, pruning and caring for it.

The board is currently seeking authority and funding to remove dead trees, Sharp said. If the city removes a dead tree, the cost is passed on to the private landowner by adding the removal fee to the utility bill.

This poses a problem for citizens on fixed incomes, Sharp pointed out.

One benefit of a forestry program is community pride. Sharp is one who is proud of the trees in the 110-year-old town of Clay Center.

"Aren't they beautiful?" she said, admiring the young trees planted along a city street. "Without a forestry program, it would not look like it does."

Clay Center has been designated "Tree City, USA" for five years in a row. The award, sponsored by the National Arbor Day Foundation, was established in 1976 to recognize outstanding forestry programs in cities.

To qualify, a city must have a legally constituted tree board, an ordinance guiding tree planting and maintenance, a minimum funding of $1 per capita, an Arbor Day Proclamation and commemorative tree planting.

"Our state was the leader for years in the number of towns that qualify for 'Tree City, USA,'" Nighswonger said. In 1981, 24 communities won the award. For the past two years, Kansas was exceeded only by California and Ohio in the number of towns given the award, he said.

Planting a predominant species was a common practice when towns were established. Ideally, no species should make up more than 12 percent of the total species, Nighswonger said.

Bogue, a city in northwest Kansas, was an example of tree monoculture; nearly all of its trees were Siberian (Chinese) elm, Grey said. When beetles began turning the leaves brown, it had a dramatic effect on the town's appearance.

Fred Atchison, Bogue's area forester, worked with the town to appoint a tree board, and Nighswonger drew a total landscape plan.

The plan included tree removal and planting. Workdays were organized, and people of the town pulled together to saw down and haul away the dead elms and plant a variety of young trees to replace them. Farmers brought chain saws, trucks and equipment.

"It made all the difference in the appearance of the town," Grey said. "There is greater community pride."

A continuous problem for community forestry projects is lack of funding. Forestry is a low priority item for budgets at the city, state and federal level. The federal role is shrinking; in the past it provided cost sharing for community forestry; now it simply gives token support.

Government funding was once available for purchasing and planting trees, as part of a community development, conservation or park plan grant. Now the lion's share of work is done by volunteers.

"We will not reduce community forestry programs in Kansas, but find new and innovative ways to get them accomplished," Nighswonger said.

Nighswonger said it is easy to get the money for tree planting, but difficult to get the town to commit to a maintenance program, particularly a five-year commitment. Typically in cities, most of the effort goes toward planting, while the greatest needs exist for pruning, removal and care for established trees.

Taking good care of trees once they are planted can be beneficial for several reasons. According to an urban forestry textbook written by Grey and Fred Denecke, tree uses include temperature control, energy conservation, erosion control, air and noise pollution abatement and wind protection.

At the second annual National Urban Forestry Conference, held October 1982 in Cincinnati, tree benefits were discussed. Robert Lederer, executive vice president of the American Association of Nurserymen, said foliage from one mature tree can remove up to 20 percent of gaseous pollutants from the air as they fall to the earth. "One tree in its green period can consume the carbon dioxide emissions of 800 homes and return them to the air as fresh oxygen," he said at the conference.

In addition, a 100-foot wide green belt can absorb six to eight decibels of urban noise, he said.

Trees also can contribute to cities by attracting jobs or residents and contributing to property values.

"Trees, urban parks and green spaces can contribute a great deal in shaping urban environments which are livable, which grace their surroundings and which build community pride," Peterson said at the 1982 conference.

In addition to providing shade and beauty, trees provide sentimental value. "Urban and community forestry helps to bring us, as an urban society, more in touch with nature," Rex Resler, executive vice president of the American Forestry Association (AFA), said.

Perhaps Thoreau said it best: "there is something indescribably inspiring and beautiful in the aspect of the forest."

Betty Sharp, Tree Board Chairman, and City Park Superintendent Clarence Weller prune lower growth from a thornless honey locust in Clay Center. The honey locust, one of 1,245 trees added to Clay Center since 1972, was planted as a result of the urban forestry program.

THE SWITCH IS ON

Foreign exchange program is an illuminating experience

By Denise Chartier

Following a siesta, about 4 p.m., out comes the traditional coffee and cake.

"This is the most important thing for me — German coffee," said Juergen Schwarz, a graduate research assistant at K-State. The rich-flavored coffee arrived by airmail from Juergen's family at the Lake of Constance, Germany.

Juergen is an exchange student from Justus Liebig University in Giessen, Germany. Located 30 miles north of Frankfurt, Giessen has a population of more class time, than Justus Liebig, where his studies were more independent.

"You have no freedom to study here. You go to classes. And if you don't go to class, the instructor will ask why you weren't in class. There would be no questions in Germany because the classes are much larger."

Justus Liebig classes consist of 400 to 1,500 students. Juergen likes the high level of interaction between instructor and students at K-State.

"Here in Manhattan, you have one campus. At Justus Liebig, the separate colleges are scattered throughout the city of Giessen," Juergen said. "There is not one conglomerated campus."

For Juergen, the benefits of coming to K-State include more than getting a master's degree. Improving his English and learning about the American way of life are also advantages. He is pleased to be in the Midwest, because he believes it "is more representative of most Americans" than the East or West.

Juergen is active in H.I.S. (Helping International Students), a campus organization. Fewer student organizations exist on the German campus, he noted. "The social life concentrated on campus here doesn't exist in Giessen." For example, there is no student union.

Juergen will return to Giessen in October 1984 and is considering accepting a position with an American company. He hopes to someday return to the United States, although the requirements of his grantor contract (Fullbright commission) prevent him from applying for immigration for two years.

She just cannot get anyone to understand.

Debbie Scherer, senior in modern languages and former foreign exchange scholarship recipient, believes Americans lag behind citizens of other countries in knowledge of political issues and foreign relations.

"The German students were so aware of the political issues; how the United States places missiles throughout Germany and how our soldiers are stationed over there," she said, explaining that Germans are much more aware of different government systems in surrounding countries.

Debbie believes American students are not as aware of foreign relations and tend to live one day to the next; not thinking about a future with nuclear weapons. "Rather, we think about going to the football game Saturday or about who is dating who," she said.

The many differences between Germany and the United States were difficult for Debbie to adjust to upon her return.

"I saw so many things I wished I could change; so many things I felt I had broadened my horizons and not everybody cared to listen. I wanted them to just sit down and read a newspaper, but they said they didn't have enough time or that they weren't interested in politics."

This attitude, she said, has caused Europeans to look upon Americans as naive and arrogant.

German students at Justus Liebig criticized the U.S. government for spending extreme amounts on nuclear weapons while allowing many poor people to live within American borders. However, Debbie remarked that she was prepared for this type of scrutiny.

"I think that in order to enjoy the exchange program and to be able to cope, one must be stable mentally. It's a trying time if you let it be, but if you prepare yourself mentally, you can handle anything."

She applied for the exchange scholarship as a sophomore, but was rejected.

Juergen Schwarz

60,000. The number of students enrolled at Justus Liebig and K-State is approximately the same.

"When I started my studies at Giessen, I was going to parties and swimming. The only thing I had to do during the first semester was take a calculus test," he said.

Although it sounds great, the failure rate on single class tests is 70 to 80 percent, Juergen said. There are only two chances to pass a test for the class.

A German student attends classes occasionally and takes a test every two or four semesters, he explained. For Juergen's degree, a Dipl. Kaufmann in business administration, he is required to write a thesis for three or six months and take five written and five oral exams.

A business administration/economics degree takes about 10½ semesters to complete. It is a master's degree; there is no bachelor's in Germany, he said.

"The kind of studying at universities in the states is, in ways, similar to the German gymnasiums (high schools)," Juergen said. For example, both give daily homework and test frequently.

Juergen is currently enrolled in three courses: Accounting Controls, Managerial Economics and Advanced Management Information Systems. He plans to take three courses in the spring semester and two in the summer session.

"This is a restrictive curriculum because my classes are all required," Juergen said. In addition, at K-State his course work is structured, requiring

Debbie Scherer

The following year she was selected to attend Justus Liebig University along with five other students. Debbie left for Giessen Sept. 23, 1982, and returned July 21, 1983. All six American students lived in a residence hall, but on separate floors, she recalled.

Many differences existed in the university classroom at Giessen, Debbie said. For instance, girls would often sit and knit during lectures. "If we did that at K-State, we would probably get a stare from the teacher, like 'don't come to my class anymore!'"

One situation taught her how important student-teacher communication can be. "A visiting American professor from Texas was friendly to the students in his class," Debbie said. "They instantly warmed up to that treatment. He was able to be a productive teacher and still be on the same level of communication with the students."

Her coursework included problems in the German political system and the society and system of the German Republic. "My major interest was seeing the cultural and political differences; just to have the opportunity to know the people and learn the language."

"It is such a weird feeling knowing there are so many people in the world, and you can't speak their language. Some of my best friends in Germany, that I intend to go back and visit, I would not have known if it were not for learning German and having a program available that gave me the opportunity to know these people."

K-State Program Unusual

In 1958 former K-State president James McCain began negotiations with Justus Liebig University at Giessen, Germany, to establish a student exchange program with K-State. The program was finalized in 1960.

K-State's program was one of the earliest between German and American university students. The exchange program's success led to the development of exchange programs with the University of Munich and the Technische Hochschule in Switzerland.

According to John Noonan, associate dean of the Graduate School and coordinator of the exchange program at K-State, one scholarship is arranged with Munich, one with Hochschule and six with Justus Liebig University.

Foreign students coming to K-State are required to be graduate students, while K-State students in the exchange program are mostly undergraduates.

An exchange student studies at K-State for one school year. Occasionally a student working on a master's degree will stay an extra summer. The stipend for a graduate research assistant is $6,500 per year.

Any K-State student is eligible to apply for the exchange program. Students who are selected for the program receive money to pay for room, board and tuition.

Of the 20 to 25 students who annually apply for the exchange program, eight are selected for the scholarship. High academic standing and German language proficiency are a criterion for selection to the exchange program.

Carol Miller, assistant professor of modern languages and a member of the Student Exchange Board, has worked with exchange students for 13 years. She believes K-State's exchange program with Germany and Switzerland is different from many other programs.

"So many times the programs are set up almost like an American university in Europe," Miller explained. For instance, in many exchange programs, a faculty member chaperones the American students. Classes are conducted in English, and the accompanying teacher helps students adjust to local customs and language.

K-State's program is different, Miller explained. Students are on their own, away from familiar people, to experience different European cultures.

EXIT EXAMS

Hands-on experience. Kick them out of the nest. These terms have been used to describe classes which require students to interact with the community in order to receive credit. Several colleges have a class in their curriculum set up in this way.

Preschool Child Lab

The Department of Family and Child Development gives students a chance to see what it's like working with children.

Some education students get to their last semester and discover after student teaching, that they can't stand children, explained Susan Wanska, assistant professor of family and child development. Preschool Child Lab is an initial lab experience for students in the department, she pointed out.

Class lecture covers children between ages 2 and 6 in all developmental areas: motor, cognitive, language, physical and social, she said. For lab credit, students are placed in preschools on and off campus for two hours a week.

According to Wanska, students taking all sections of the course — the lecture, lab and recitation — are required to keep a journal and complete a case study of a child they observe at the preschool.

"I like for them (the students) to look for some of the characteristics I talk about in class and see it being applied, or trying to see children operating in that fashion in the preschool," she said.

Students watch gross and fine motor development, she added. They check children's fine motor skills by watching them paint, work with clay, use a pencil or cut with scissors. Gross motor skills are usually observed outside and include walking, skipping, galloping, throwing and catching.

"I strongly emphasize to my students that at any point in the day, you can be observing a behavior and learning something from that behavior; that it's not really confined to planned activities," Wanska said.

"At snack time, you learn if the children pour their own juice. At lunch time, (you notice) how they use a spoon, or when having raisins if they have a pincher grasp or not. When children go outside, you notice whether they zip or button their own coat," she added.

Headstart and Manhattan Day Care Center Inc. are two centers Wanska has placed students at since she started teaching the course six years ago.

"I have a problem keeping up with requests from the community; I have more requests than I can fill, and that is a very nice feeling," she said.

Gail Seiler, senior in speech pathology/audiology, works with Brandon O'Neill at the Speech and Hearing Clinic in Leisure Hall. Speech pathology/audiology majors are required to gain 300 clinic hours and a master's degree before entering the field.

Purebred Livestock Sale

Students interested in hands-on experience in the planning, promotion and production of a purebred livestock sale can take a class titled Livestock Sales Management. Miles McKee, professor of animal science, was involved in creating this class in 1977.

It was his idea that hands-on experience in producing a sale would give students a better appreciation and a deeper understanding of the many facets involved in merchandising a product — in this case, registered livestock. The first class had 35 students; the current class has almost 75.

"Seven of the eight sales have been involved with three breeds of cattle: Angus, Shorthorn and Simmental," McKee said. "Nov. 22 will be the third time Angus cattle have been sold. We had one sale of Suffolk sheep, but now the flock is quite small," he said, adding that it isn't possible to have enough animals in the same breed to hold a sale every year, so the breeds are rotated.

"We need a minimum of 40 to 45 lots — or head — of livestock to hold a sale," McKee said. The animals are usually sold to buyers coming from a four- or five-state area, including Colorado, Nebraska and Missouri, although the first year, the animals were sold to eight states and Canada.

A workable budget was established the first week of class, McKee explained. "We said, we're going to sell so many head of cattle and we estimated they will bring a $70-80,000 dollar income." Ten percent of that amount was budgeted for advertising and about $7,200 in expenses was anticipated this year.

The sale is advertised throughout the local area — usually within a 75-100 mile radius of Manhattan. "In most cases, that's where we'll catch 80-90 percent of our buyers," McKee said. They (the students) saturated the county papers with advertisements such as the Council Grove Republican and the Chase County Leader News.

The students also put together a sale catalog which is distributed to livestock producers and breeders throughout the country. Advertisements also are placed in various monthly livestock and agricultural publications such as "Grass and Grain," "Kansas Stockman" and "Farm Talk."

Students are responsible for planning all facets of the project except hiring the auctioneer and setting the sale date. These things must be taken care of at least two years in advance, McKee said.

Students are in charge of renting pens, taking pictures, hanging decorations, selling food and drink, and parking. Everything from pre-sale music to loading the animals after they're sold is student labor.

The class meets one night a week for one hour of credit. Students are not tested, but are graded on their class notes. A good job of taking notes will leave them with a folder full of all the material they would need to hold a sale, McKee said.

On sale day, the students get started about 4 or 5 a.m. The cattle are sent through chutes one at a time and the students comb the cattle and put coat dressing on to make them shine. Then the cattle are penned in the arena so buyers can walk around and decide which animal to bid on.

"When the sale starts, the animals are run back through the same line where we got them ready in the morning and the students do touch-ups," McKee said. "They fix the hair, put a little more oil on them and clean them up so that when they walk into the sale ring, we hope they sparkle like a diamond."

"Now I tell them, and I really believe this, that this class carries over not only to the merchandising of purebred livestock but the sales involved in any product, and I tell them this even means yourself if you're trying to sell yourself to someone for employment."

Public Relations Campaigns

In the Department of Journalism, Nancy Hause, temporary assistant professor, teaches Public Relations/Advertising Campaigns. Otherwise called the department's "kick them out of the nest" course, it is an attempt to simulate a real public relations job for a client.

"There aren't any tests in the course because you don't get tests in the real world — you get fired," Hause said.

The students are required to complete a report to the management. In the report students identify the specific public relations problem of the client, research it, and recommend a plan, outlining steps and communication tools to implement the plan, Hause explained. In the real world, the fourth step is to evaluate the plan's effectiveness.

Last year, the Department of Journalism requested a plan for its 75th anniversary. Citizens Bank and Trust Co. requested a public relations team for its expansion project and then actually used the newsletter the students designed for their special grand opening.

This year, student teams are working for Southwestern Bell, KSAC Radio and University Open House.

Hause thinks the whole point of the class is to toss students out of a structured situation (learning and taking tests), and into a real-life situation, which requires students to make their own decisions because values are less defined. "You're out in the three-foot water; you're not thrown in," she said.

Speech and Hearing Clinic

Students majoring in speech pathology/audiology interact with people between the ages of 18 months and 79 years who come to the Speech and Hearing Clinic in Leasure Hall. Clients, who come from as far as 60 miles away, are referred by doctors, speech pathologists or other clients. Full-time K-State students can use the clinic's services free of charge.

At the clinic, a diagnostic evaluation can be scheduled to determine whether a hearing or speech problem exists. If so, it may be recommended the client see a doctor and get medical clearance.

"We want to get the OK from the physician who looks at the vocal chords that the exercises and practice we're going to do in management will not be damaging to the person," said Lillian Larson, assistant professor of speech pathology and director of the Speech and Hearing Clinic.

This semester, the center has been averaging five hearing and two or three speech diagnostics a week. About 35 clients come in for ongoing management, Larson said.

Two K-State students are currently undergoing voice management because they have a condition called vocal nodules. The nodules may be caused by excessive yelling, talking, laughing or coughing improperly.

Ken Kallail, assistant professor of speech, supervises the voice clinicians. When a patient comes to the center with vocal nodules, the source of voice abuse is first identified. Then the clinician tries to change the speaking style. "We try and reduce the forcefulness in their speech to a softer, easier manner of speaking," Kallail explained.

Completion of 25 hours of clinical observation is required before students begin seeing clients with speech, language or hearing problems. Students must complete 300 hours of client contact and a master's degree before they can become certified by the professional organization.

To accumulate those hours, students sign up for a lab in speech pathology or audiology, depending on whether they are working with speech-handicapped or hearing-impaired clients.

"For children, their work is their play, so they are watched to see how they play," said Joan Robinson, graduate in speech pathology. Toys are occasionally used as tools in evaluating progress during treatment. Children are observed while playing with toys to see if they use them in an appropriate function, she added. Whether the children pretend or role play or if there is a "mommy" or "daddy" when they want to play "house" are things that are looked for by the student clinicians, Robinson explained.

Some articulation problems the clinicians work with include substitution, omission, distortion, addition and dysfluency, commonly known as stuttering.

For example, in substitution, a child uses another sound in place of an "r" or an "l." A clinician begins work with a child by saying a list of words and getting the child to indicate when he hears that sound.

If the child is saying "wed" instead of "red," then the clinician instructs the child to use his tongue instead of lips to form the correct sound. The child is encouraged to produce the correct sound, first by itself, then in simple words and gradually express a sentence.

Design Matrix Class

Karol Winegardner, assistant professor of graphic design, teaches a design matrix class for students who have completed two advanced art classes. Prospective clients from campus or surrounding communities contact Winegardner and make an appointment to talk to the class. Winegardner said she's never had to advertise to get clients for her class.

In 1980, Manhattan's Chamber of Commerce asked the class to design a logo, using the "little apple" theme, for Visitors Bureau publications.

After a client presents the problem to the class, interested students accept the problem or wait for the next project. "As long as the students keep busy, they can receive a good grade out of the class," Winegardner said.

Many clients come from campus, but mastheads were designed for United Telephone in Junction City, and a logo was made for Lario Enterprises of Topeka.

Recently the class completed posters for Gerry Brady, director of Manhattan's Sunset Zoo. Brady submitted several of them to an international competition sponsored by the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums. Todd Meyers, senior in fine arts, had the winning poster. His poster will be used to publicize 1984 Zoo and Aquarium Month in June.

Other projects completed this semester were posters for Ebony Theatre's first production and a design for flyers, programs and posters for "A Little Night Music."

Presenting the KSU Ambassadors

By Suzanne Larkin

A K-State ambassador's job is more than accepting an honor at Homecoming halftime festivities.

For Julie Martin, senior in life sciences and Jeff Dillon, senior in agricultural economics, student ambassador roles began Oct. 9, 1982 in a cloud of excitement. The positions offered opportunity, yet also demanded dedication to a year of work.

Being a student ambassador involves representing the student body, University and Alumni Association at many functions on and off campus. The ambassadors help with Landon Lectures and also travel to state alumni meetings, giving alumni student input on problems or changes at the University. The ambassadors attend Board of Regents meetings, serve punch and help clean up at presidential functions, talk with people, and help with freshman campus tours.

Both ambassadors are involved in numerous activities, ranging from interests in sports to involvement in Student Senate.

Dillon has been active in agriculture clubs, the open house committee and Student Senate. He has been an agriculture ambassador and has lived in both a residence hall and a fraternity house.

"I look at my position as an ambassador as an extension of other things that I am or have been involved with," Dillon said. "I like to meet people and get out and promote the University as a student body representative," he added.

Martin holds similar interests. She has been chairman of the student advisory board to the alumni association, a Bible study leader, a member of the Open House committee and treasurer of the Blue Key honorary. She has held various Student Senate positions.

"I enjoy playing racquetball and am also active in the Alpha Delta Pi house," Martin said.

The ambassadors participate in an average of one activity a week related to their position. "We usually attend at least one function a week, and some weeks it is two or three," Dillon said.

In previous years, according to Amy Button Renz, assistant director of the Alumni Association, ambassadors participated in an average of 20 functions a year. Now they participate in about 80 a year.

The ability to budget time is a necessity for student ambassadors. "This position is really time consuming," Dillon said. "Finding time to study can be difficult."

"Sometimes we have even studied by flashlight, but if you are really serious about the position and serious about serving the school and Alumni Association, then it is not impossible," he added.

"The ambassadors take a more active responsibility in the position now than in past years," Renz said. "The enthusiasm is really evident," she added.

"Sometimes I feel, though, that we have to live up to this image — an image which many fellow students cast upon us, and it can be difficult to have our own separate world."

— Jeff Dillon

The opportunities available to the ambassadors, coupled with personal rewards gained, make the time and dedication required from each ambassador worth giving, Martin said.

"I have gotten a lot of worthwhile experience talking with important people, well-known and not so well-known. I have traveled to different places, while at the same time, I have matured by learning how to handle myself," she said.

Dillon added, "The opportunities we have been offered and the knowledge we have gained make up for the parties and activities we have had to miss."

"Sometimes I feel, though, that we have to live up to this image — an image which many fellow students cast upon us, and it can be difficult to have our own separate world. It is an image which we have to uphold, though, because we represent the University, the students and their beliefs."

Dedication is one key word used when describing a student ambassador.

"To be a really good ambassador, you have to totally dedicate your year to the work involved with the position," Martin said.

"The more you do, the more you get involved, the more you will get out of it," Dillon added.

Many people take for granted, according to Dillon, that the University continues to function, although it would not be possible without the help of various groups.

"The key function in support of the University — and any university — is the support demonstrated by its alumni and friends. I give my time through being an ambassador to help encourage alumni to help the University continue to function," Dillon said. "People have to talk about and be involved with the University in order for it to function."

"I am just paying back what the University has given me through my education."

The monetary reward for being a student ambassador in previous years has been a $250 scholarship, donated by Blue Key. This year the scholarship will be a $1,000 award, donated by the Alumni Association.

The association feels that the time and work put forth by the ambassador merits the scholarship. It also helps the students out financially because it is not feasible for an ambassador to hold another job, Renz said.

"The scholarship really helps us out, but if someone were running for the position of ambassador just because of the scholarship, then the University wouldn't benefit and neither would the person running," Martin said.

"The scholarship pays for my entire year's tuition and compensates for all the time the position requires," she said, "but I feel it is an honor to be a student ambassador. It is a privilege."

"The experience of becoming a student ambassador and then serving out the year is irreplaceable. Anyone with a lot of dedication and pride for the school could do it. It has been well worth my time."

Financial aid deadlines set for next year

By CAROL BELL
Collegian Reporter

The time is approaching for students to start thinking about money for the 1984-85 academic year.

On Dec. 1 and 2, the applications for financial assistance will be distributed in the Union.

"I call this our financial aid days," said Robert Evans, director of student financial assistance. "We do this every year to distribute the (application) packets and answer any questions that a student may have."

"The scholarship priority deadline is Jan. 15," he added. "The final deadline is March 15, except for the Guaranteed Student Loan program which is later in the spring."

To apply for aid, a student must fill out both the ACT Family Financial Statement and the Kansas Student Data Form, Evans said.

By completing these forms, a student can apply for any of the two grant programs, five different loan programs, college work-study or scholarships offered at K-State.

"The KSDF should be returned directly to the (financial aid) office, unless they have more than one form," he said. "If they are applying to more than one school (using more than one form), then they should send it to Iowa." The national student financial assistance office is in Iowa.

The FFS cannot be completed and mailed to Iowa until after Jan. 1, Evans said.

A list of scholarships is available to students in the financial aid office, but a student only needs to complete the KSDF to be considered for any and all scholarships they may be eligible for, Evans said.

"If they do everything correct and in the right order, there should be no delay," Evans said.

"Two years ago, K-State had about a 50 percent error rate. I would say that now we are around 20-25 percent. This is time-consuming and causes delays in the students getting the money."

"To eliminate errors, we took the most common mistakes made, turned them around and added 'Eight Steps In the Financial Aid Process' to the information brochure we give to students."

"We also are sending a checklist to students who have made mistakes, showing them the mistakes they made so they won't do it again when they apply the next time," he said.

All students who receive financial assistance this year must reapply in order to be considered next year.

Reagan makes appeal to Japanese leaders for trade balance shift

By The Associated Press

TOKYO — President Reagan, making no apparent headway in his bid to expand American access to Japanese markets, appealed directly to Japan's legislators today for help in shrinking the huge U.S. trade deficit giving him political headaches back home.

In a prepared speech, the first by an American president before the Diet, the Japanese parliament, Reagan said, "We need your help in demonstrating free trade to address concerns of my own people."

The president told the lawmakers that "Americans believe your markets are less open than ours. We need your support to lower further the barriers that still make it difficult for many American products to enter your markets easily."

While strongly castigating the Soviet government, Reagan promised that the United States would never abandon arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union.

"Our great frustration has been the other side's unwillingness to negotiate in good faith. We wanted to cut deep into nuclear arsenals and still do. But they are blocking the dramatic reductions the world wants," the president said.

In urging a lowering of trade barriers, Reagan denounced legislation passed by the House last week over his objections that would attempt to curb Japanese auto imports by mandating inclusion of a percentage of U.S.-manufactured parts.

"This would be a cruel hoax, raising prices without protecting jobs," Reagan said. "We would buy less from you. You would buy less from us."

Referring to complaints by American businessmen that trade barriers are deeply entrenched in Japan, Reagan told the legislators, "It is not easy for elected officials to balance the concerns of constituents with the greater interests of the nation. But that is what our jobs are all about."

He said Japan had taken steps to lower its barriers.

On the troublesome issue of trade, which ranks high in Reagan's talks with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, there was no apparent movement on U.S. demands for greater access to Japanese markets and an easing of quotas on American beef and citrus imports.

U.S. finds stash of weapons, ammunition on Grenada

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — U.S. Army spokesmen said Thursday that 6,322 rifles of all types have been confiscated on Grenada, along with about 5 million rounds of ammunition and a variety of heavier weapons.

That amount of arms appeared to exceed the needs of the Grenadian People's Revolutionary Army, whose size has been estimated anywhere from 800 to 2,000 people.

The Cuban-backed government of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop, killed in a coup Oct. 19 by radical-leftist military officers, had announced more than two years ago that it wanted to build a militia of up to 20,000 Grenadians.

Capt. David Boggs, a U.S. Army

Command spokesman, said Thursday that the equipment already counted — which does not include all the ammunition but does include virtually all rifles known to be on the island — could supply a force of about 6,000.

U.S. officers say they do not know how many members there were in the People's Revolutionary Army or the militia.

At the time of the invasion Oct. 25, U.S. officials cited the discovery of crated weaponry at the airport as evidence of Cuba's intentions to use Grenada as a training base for terrorists.

The U.S. military press center here posted the latest figures of U.S. casualties as 18 killed in action, 113 wounded in action and 31 non-battle injuries.

Fort Hays shares slow Stray Cats ticket sales

By KIM HUTCHISON
Staff Writer

If there's one place K-State Wildcats aren't making tracks, it's to the Stray Cats concert. However, the problem isn't unique to K-State. Fort Hays State University is also experiencing difficulty in selling tickets to the Stray Cats concert scheduled for Saturday in Gross Memorial Coliseum.

"We haven't figured out why tickets are selling slow," Dave Brown, Fort Hays State director of student activities, said.

"Saturday is the first day of pheasant season, maybe that has an effect on ticket sales," he said.

As of Wednesday, 1,300 tickets to the Hays concert had been sold. The concert needs to sell 3,300 tickets to break even, Brown said.

According to Barbara Burke, Union program adviser, 2,700 tickets have been sold to the Friday concert in Ahearn Field House. The concert includes two warm-up bands, Roman Holiday and 14 Karats of Soul, a black a cappella group. Burke said she is not sure why tickets are not selling.

"We had wonderful feedback on the group. Students have been waiting for a top group,"

Burke said. "I don't know why they aren't going."

"We were at a regional conference last week and a lot of other campuses were jealous that we had the Stray Cats," Brown said.

The Stray Cats seem to have a negative influence on students at Hays, he said.

Burke said she doesn't believe ticket prices are too high, but said money may be tight for students now.

People are driving to Kansas City to see the Romantics at $9 a ticket, so I don't think are tickets are too expensive," she said.

The tickets, selling for $9, $9.50 and $10 for students and a dollar more for the general public, are the lowest in the area, she said. Tickets in Hays cost $9, $10 and $11 for students and a dollar more for the general public.

"However, November might be a tighter month for money," Burke said.

Many students are going home or on a vacation during Thanksgiving break, she said.

"Homecoming was scheduled in October, earlier in the year," Burke said.

Prior to a policy change, Ahearn was reserved from Oct. 15 through March 15 for the basketball season. The change allows concerts to be performed after the Oct. 15 deadline, if it is scheduled during an all-University holiday.

"We could have had Pat Benatar last year if it hadn't been for the Oct. 15 deadline," Burke said.

Both Burke and Brown express the sense that maybe students are expecting too much in concerts.

"I think we've spoiled the students with too many number one acts," Brown said.

Hays has had several top artists play recently, including Pat Benatar, John Cougar, Hall and Oates and J. Geils, he said. "We were one of only two campuses to get Pat Benatar," Brown said.

Hays competed with Salina in securing Benatar's performance. Aside from the bids, groups consider the reputation of the organization, past ticket sales and the cost of putting on the show.

However, this year "a number of performances were not up to expectations," Brown said. The Dallas Cheerleaders and Chet Atkins both did poorly.

"I've been told that Memorial (Memorial Auditorium in Kansas City) is nice to put shows on," Burke said.

Memorial's smaller size, 7,000 seats, compared to Ahearn's 11,000 seats is easier to work with acoustically. Memorial also has its own stage. Stages must be rented for shows in Ahearn.

"The cost to put on a show is considerably less at Memorial," Burke said.

"If students are expecting super groups like Journey, then we shouldn't be bringing any shows in," Burke said. "Maybe we need to reevaluate the market."

A variety of bands have played at Ahearn including Joan Jett and Ronnie Milsap. Both those performers received negative feedback and yet, so far have outsold the Stray Cats, Burke said.

UPC needs to sell another 2,100 tickets to break even on the concert, Burke said. She anticipates ticket sales at the door to be down slightly, because Manhattan High School is in the football district play-offs Friday.

"Although we don't gear our shows for the high school students, they help to put us over the break-even point," Burke said.

"This is a business just like anything else. We need to make money or at least break even," Burke said.

Syrian gunners fire at U.S. aircraft

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — U.S. jets came under attack for the first time in Lebanon Thursday when Syrian gunners fired missiles at carrier-based planes. At Beirut airport, small-arm fire hit Marine positions.

Pressure mounted on Yasser Arafat to leave the northern city of Tripoli and end the Palestinian guerrilla war that has killed at least 1,000 people. The PLO chief said he might return to Tunis.

Syria said its missile batteries in central Lebanon drove off four U.S. F-14 Tomcats. No hits were reported. Lebanese radio stations said the Syrian firing began in the early morning when the jets scrambled from the carrier Dwight D. Eisenhower on reconnaissance sorties.

Assistant White House press secretary Anson Franklin, with President Reagan in Tokyo, said the jets were on a "routine" mission when they came under fire from an unidentified ground site in central Lebanon. He did not specify the type of fire, but Beirut radios said surface-to-air missiles were used.

American Marines came under small-arm fire in the afternoon along the eastern perimeter of their base at Beirut airport. The Marines returned fire and the shooting ended in about 2½ minutes with no casualties, said Marine spokesman Capt. Wayne Jones.

The shooting heightened tension that has been escalating since suicide bombings killed 239 American and 58 French troops in Beirut Oct. 23, and 28 Israelis and 32 Lebanese prisoners in Tyre Nov. 4. The U.S., French and Israeli governments blame Moslem fanatics operating behind Syrian lines in Lebanon.

Italy Thursday ordered two helicopter-equipped warships to stand by for a possible evacuation of Arafat from Tripoli, where a cease-fire collapsed less than 24 hours after it was arranged by oil-rich Arab nations.

Rockets and artillery fire poured on residential neighborhoods of the port 50 miles north of Beirut.

Rashid Karami, a former prime minister and a prominent Sunni Moslem politician from Tripoli, said Arafat "should be out of Tripoli at this crucial time so that he can work with his brothers on confronting the dangers threatening the revolution."

Karami, currently in Damascus and unable to return to his home because of the fighting, said the Palestine Liberation Organization leader "must leave Tripoli."

Peruvians face arrest, death whether they vote or not

By The Associated Press

AYACUCHO, Peru — Peruvians will choose municipal governments Sunday and citizens of this military-governed guerrilla zone face a special choice — arrest if they don't vote, and possible death at rebel hands if they do.

The military commander of this embattled Andean state capital has ordered the arrest of anyone who appears on the street Sunday without a voter registration card and the military is censoring campaign speeches. The Maoist guerrillas of the Shining Path, strongest in this area, have repeatedly threatened against people who vote.

In Lima, 350 miles to the northwest, congressional leaders Thursday condemned the killing of Mayor Victor Arias Vicuna of Cerro de Pasco, 110 miles northeast of Lima, who was slain by guerrillas Tuesday.

Two candidates to succeed the mayor withdrew from the race. Two candidates remain.

Congressional leaders called the killing blackmail aimed at keeping voters away from the polls. Guerrillas there have threatened to attack those who do vote.

Congressman Victor Alfaro de la Pena called for special protection for political leaders and candidates, and the Senate judiciary committee approved a bill to restore the death penalty for terrorism.

The Shining Path guerrillas have been waging a guerrilla war against the government and have attacked and killed residents of Ayacucho who they say cooperate with the government. Ayacucho is the state capital, 350 miles southeast of Lima.

Police and the military command reported new attacks by the Shining Path to disrupt the elections.

Campus

Plains architecture to be featured

Work of the Gould Evans Partnership of Lawrence will be featured at the next "Architecture from the Plains" exhibit, Nov. 14-18. The exhibit will be in Room 205 Seaton Hall.

Robert Gould and David Evans, partners in the firm, are currently working on the renovation and addition to Weber Hall and on a team project involving renovation of the Riley County Courthouse.

They will deliver a presentation describing their philosophy and design methods at 7:30 p.m. Nov. 16 in Room 179 Durland Hall. "Architecture from the Plains" exhibits and presentations are open to the public without charge through sponsorship of the Department of Architecture with the cooperation of the K-State student chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

Hawes speaks to Phi Delta Kappa

Joseph Hawes, head of the Department of History, will be the featured speaker at the Nov. 16 meeting of Phi Delta Kappa educational fraternity at 6 p.m. in the Union Cottonwood Room. He will discuss "The History of Childhood and Its Relationship to Schooling."

Phi Delta Kappa fraternity is dedicated to service, leadership and research in education.

Art department plans auction

"Limey," a lithograph by Kansas artist Henry Varnum Poor (1887-1970) is the most important work to be sold at the 1983 art scholarship auction at 8 p.m. Nov. 19 in the Union National Bank. A silent auction from 7 to 8 p.m. will precede the live auction.

Other signed works to be auctioned include Jamie Wyeth's "Moon and the Horse" and a lithograph by well-known Southwest artist Peter Hurd titled "Ranch at Dawn."

The works will be on exhibit in the bank lobby beginning Nov. 12. The works have been donated to the Department of Art by faculty, students, alumni, area artists and friends of the University.

The K-State Collegium Musicum, directed by music instructor Sarah Funkhouser, will perform renaissance music prior to the auction.

UFM to represent U.S. in India

The University for Man has been selected as one of 20 projects to represent U.S. community development learnings at the International Exposition of Rural Development in New Delhi, India, in February.

More than 50 nations are expected to participate in the exposition for an interchange and exhibition of successful rural development projects, said Vernon P. Deines and Howard Kessinger, Kansas members of the U.S. National Steering Committee for Sharing Approaches that Work.

Wednesday was proclaimed "Rural Success Day" in Kansas to mark the designation of UFM as an outstanding example of providing practical education to isolated rural people. The proclamation was signed in the governor's office in Topeka.

TELENET served 15,000 last year

In its thirteenth year of operation, TELENET, the Kansas Regents Network, served 15,000 persons, 53 percent more than the previous year.

TELENET is an audio teleconferencing network with 36 regular sites, 20 Social and Rehabilitation Services sites and 13 special sites at high schools, hospitals and cooperative extension offices.

During the last year the network reached more than 2,000 Kansans with university credit courses offered by the six Regents universities. The other 13,000 persons served by the network participated in professional updating, training sessions and consumer meetings.

The system reduces travel time and costs for persons taking university courses and attending professional meetings, said Jan Kruh, network director. In addition, through TELENET rural areas have immediate access to information from universities and other sources, high school students can come in contact with national experts in many areas and the network provides an electronic hook-up with similar networks in Oklahoma, Texas and Montana.

Senate designates money for Nichols' artwork

By LAURI DIEHL
Collegian Reporter

Money set aside for an art gallery in Nichols Gym may be used to buy art for the entrance of the renovated building.

Jerry Katlin, student body president, spoke to Student Senate Thursday night about possible uses for the $10,000 fund, which was established in 1975 to show student support for an art gallery and the renovation of Nichols.

Katlin said the original guidelines set up for the bill could not be followed because there is no room in the new floor plan of Nichols for the gallery.

He presented three possible uses for the fund. Senate could use the money to:

— Renovate Room 6 of the Art Building as art display space. Future library expansion could cause the Art Building to be removed or renovated, leaving no gallery space, Katlin said.

— Contribute to a KSU Foundation fund to build a campus art museum.

"The $10,000 will only be a drop in the bucket compared to what it would cost," Katlin said. The Foundation is not actively seeking funds for the museum account due to fund raising for the coliseum, he said.

— Buy art for the entry of Nichols. A bill establishing a committee to look into the purchasing of the art will be presented at a future senate meeting, Katlin said.

During other business, a bill revamping the senate aide program was passed after considerable discussion about whether aides should receive class credit.

The bill calls for establishing a 20-member aide pool and eliminating the one-hour credit aides receive.

An amendment, stating aides may have the option of receiving the hour of credit if they meet the program requirements and the requirements of the faculty member in charge of awarding credit, was proposed by Catherine Saylor, veterinary medicine senator.

"The problem was we had 150 people in the aide program last year,"

Saylor said. "Dwayne Hemphill (instructor of speech and faculty member in charge of aides) had no idea who was and wasn't an aide. Having only 20 aides would eliminate this problem. I think the aides deserve the credit, they do more than one hour worth of work."

Jeff Gates, business senator, supported the amendment. "Sometime in the past we (senate) lobbied for some kind of incentive to get people involved in student government. I don't like to see the effort go for nothing," he said.

Most aides at the meeting agreed with aide Cyndy Woelk, junior in pre-professional business administration.

"I think no credit is a good idea," Woelk said. "The program will get more high-quality people."

Steve Line, business senator and one of the bill's sponsors, supported the idea that senators, but not aides, should receive credit.

"When the committee (Senate Operations) reviewed the aide program, we noted some of the differences between the aides and senators," he said. "First, senators must go through the rigors of a campaign. Second, senators have speaking privileges. Third, the vote is in the hands of the senators."

After much discussion, the amendment was defeated and the original motion passed.

In other business, a first reading was heard on a bill proposing to fund 15 members of the K-State chapter of the Association for Student Chapters of the American Institute of Architects to attend the organization's national convention.

Library recovers terminal months later

By KATHY BARTELLI
Collegian Reporter

A $2,000 computer terminal stolen last April from Farrell Library was returned Tuesday night.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said the serial number on the terminal was checked to verify that it was the same terminal that was stolen.

"When the terminal was stolen several months ago, there was a note left in its place that said, 'I've taken the terminal. I will return it on Tuesday,'" Hobrock said. "The irony is that it was returned on Tuesday, six months later."

Hobrock said one of the library employees found the terminal in a box by the back door. Hobrock was notified and he turned it over to the K-State Police Department.

Lt. Charles Beckom, operations officer for the K-State Police Department, said they are processing the equipment and any information or evidence they can attain from the terminal.

The return of the terminal has added to the information accumulated by the department as to who may have taken it, Beckom said.

Beckom said the department intends to follow up on the leads they have concerning the theft of the terminal.

"As far as we're concerned, whether the property was returned or not is second to the fact that a crime was committed," he said.

"We're glad to have it back," Hobrock said. "We'll be taking precautions so that it doesn't happen again, but we're just grateful that it was returned."

Carlin announces completion of administrative shakeup

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. John Carlin said Thursday the restructuring of his administration is nearly completed and that he anticipates making no more "shocking" changes.

In the past two weeks, Carlin has replaced his secretary of administration and his Highway Patrol superintendent, revamped the state's parole board and lost his chief of staff.

"I'm not done, but certainly the bulk of the work has been done," the Democratic governor told his weekly news conference.

He called the changes "a natural restructuring" which he knew "would come at this time," as he gears up for his final three years in office. His second term expires in January 1987.

The few changes which are still to come, Carlin told reporters, will be "nothing shocking" and he hopes to complete them before the 1984 Legislature convenes Jan. 9.

He has said he will hire a liaison to the Kansas Senate, a post held the past two sessions by Bert Cantwell, who Carlin on Wednesday named as the new Highway Patrol superintendent to replace David Hornbaker, who resigned by mutual consent with the governor.

"We're talking a small number" of additional changes, said Carlin.

He said the changes reflect no altering of any of his basic philosophies, adding, "You do re-evaluate, and some of that re-evaluation comes when you lose a person as talented as Pat Hurley."

Hurley, Carlin's secretary of administration for five years, resigned last week to become a lobbyist for a group of banks dedicated to legalizing multibank holding companies in Kansas. Hurley is expected later to join a big Wichita bank in an executive position.

Carlin has named political science professor Mike Harder to replace Hurley.

Hoch, Carlin's press secretary for four years and his chief of staff the past year, left to enter private business in Kansas City, Mo. Carlin said Wednesday he will not hire a replacement for Hoch. He retains his executive assistant, Shirley Allen.

"We intend to adjust to the fact Mr. Hurley and Mr. Hoch are gone," Carlin said.

A governor doesn't replace people of that caliber overnight, Carlin conceded, but said he believes the quality of assistants he now has is "far broader" than it has ever been and from that reservoir of talent his administration will continue unimpeded.

"In some ways, I think we'll be better prepared to handle things than we have been," he said.

As an example, Carlin said,

Hurley tended to delegate very little authority in the Department of Administration, yet Carlin feels he had subordinates who are now ready to "take their place in the public spotlight" in assuming many of those duties Hurley handled himself.

"Statistically speaking," Carlin said, he doesn't think the rate of turnover in his administration has been as high as it traditionally is in national and state administrations.

Some of those who have left their original positions continue to hold important positions in his administration, Carlin noted. He cited former administrative assistant Dan Watkins, who now mans a similar job in the Transportation Department; Larry Wolgast, another former administrative assistant who now is deputy secretary in Human Resources, and Joe Harkins, former Health and Environment secretary who now is director of the Kansas Water Office.

Of Hornbaker's departure and the hiring of Cantwell, Carlin said he believes it will improve administration and morale in the Highway Patrol.

He said it was a mutual decision by him and Hornbaker for the Junction City native to return to the ranks of the Patrol with the rank of captain and for Carlin to name a new superintendent.

"I don't think anybody 'did' Col. Hornbaker in," the governor said.

FBI chief analyzes Capitol blast

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — FBI Director William H. Webster said Thursday the bomb detonated in the Capitol this week had a dual firing mechanism similar to that in 10 or 11 other bombings in the nation over the last two years. But he said the bureau has neither suspects nor firm evidence to link the episodes.

Webster also told reporters at FBI headquarters that two FBI laboratory technicians in Beirut have concluded that more than 12,000 pounds of dynamite was used to destroy the U.S. Marine compound there Oct. 23. He called the truck bomb, which killed 239 Marines and sailors, "one of the largest explosives we've ever encountered."

Webster said three or four pounds of dynamite rigged to a dual firing mechanism using two watches produced the blast that severely damaged a corridor and lounge outside the Senate chamber Monday night.

He said that 10 or 11 other bombings along the east and west coasts since 1981 had similar mechanisms, but declined to specify those bombings.

He said the Armed Resistance Unit, which claimed responsibility for the Capitol explosion, was the same name used by those who placed a bomb outside the Army War College at Ft. McNair here last spring. Neither explosion injured anyone.

"I wish we had more information about the makeup of that organization," Webster said. "But we have no specific subjects of this investigation" into the Capitol bombing and "we don't know who did" the Ft. McNair bombing.

He said there have been 29 bombing incidents in the nation so far in 1983, and in 14 of those cases explosives actually were detonated.

He said there were 51 incidents during all of 1982.

Thus far this year, the domestic bombings have caused six deaths and two injuries compared to seven deaths and 26 injuries last year, Webster said.

"The bombings come from a number of organizations but about 50 percent of the incidents will relate to Puerto Rican independence movements of one kind or another," he said.

He said some people involved in those Puerto Rican groups "have gone to Cuba at various times for various purposes but it would be a mistake for me to say Cuba is in control of those groups, manipulating them, or providing financial support for them, because we haven't established that."

The Beirut bombing was investigated for more than a week by two FBI specialists.

Senators propose gas contract reforms

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Saying "we must get on to legislation that we can pass" on natural gas, the unlikely alliance of Sen. John Danforth and Sen. Howard Metzenbaum on Thursday proposed a pared-down bill aimed primarily at reforming gas contracts.

The natural gas issue has been tied up in the Senate, the victim of wrangling between those like Danforth, R-Mo., and Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who would like stricter federal gas price controls and gas producers who want price ceilings lifted altogether.

Danforth said in a statement that he still supports legislation offered by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., that would roll back gas prices and extend controls for two years, but believes the bill cannot muster the votes needed to pass. A Kassebaum aide agreed with that assessment.

He introduced the new, less ambitious version to attract a broader coalition of senators, Danforth said. But even the most optimistic assessments give little chance for passage of any natural gas legislation before Congress adjourns for the year next week.

The bill would neither extend nor shorten price controls, keeping the gradual decontrol schedule called for in the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 and keeping permanent controls on "old" gas discovered before 1977.

It would, however, create an "out" for pipelines and utilities bound by taker-or-pay contract clauses, which commit purchasers to pay for set amounts of new, high-priced gas even if they have no market for it.

Taking action against rape

A local forum last night kicked off the whistle alert program in Manhattan. The program was designed to promote rape awareness and to organize the city against rape.

The Manhattan Coalition Against Rape initiated the action and it is now up to the people of Manhattan to ensure its effectiveness. Public support of the program is needed if it is to work.

The subject of rape is now at the forefront of many people's minds, due to a rash of incidents reported recently. Some say that there were no more rapes in Manhattan this year than in the past; that there were just more reports of rapes. While this may be true, and while some of the recently reported rapes have not been confirmed, there is still a great need to take public action against the threat of rape.

Action should not be taken only after a number of assaults have been reported. It is a sad reflection when women cannot walk alone at night, and even sadder in a city the size of Manhattan. The entire city must cooperate to ensure that people are safe while walking alone in any public neighborhood.

The whistle alert program is only one way of doing this. The greatest need is to make people more aware of the problem and alert them to what they can do to be part of the solution. This is the goal of the Manhattan Coalition Against Rape.

The program will not work without public support. Everyone can, and should, make a contribution. There are roles for everyone — from financial contributions to being alert for sounds while sitting at home in the evening.

We must pledge to take a part in fighting rape in Manhattan. The best way is to join a community effort and become part of an organized plan. There are many parties involved in the Manhattan Coalition Against Rape. Judith Davis, director of the Regional Crisis Center, and several others who are active in the group are willing and eager to advise people how to get involved.

Manhattan will never be a safe community unless its citizens get involved and commit themselves to making it that way.

Saving the grade point average

Undergraduate students who are wondering about their class grades may soon be able to get a better idea whether to bail out in midsemester.

Currently only freshmen and incoming students receive a midterm letter grade. If Faculty Senate agrees to a new proposal, students doing unsatisfactorily in a class will be notified at midterm of their lack of academic progress.

Many students know how they are doing in their classes, so for them, the system is not necessary. For those who float through the semester without stopping to consider or worry about their grades, the midterm report would be a great service. Students who are doing poorly in classes will be informed of the fact and drop the class before it is too late, thus saving the semester grade point average.

With the overemphasis on the cumulative GPA, practicality dictates the need for students to know if they are doing poorly in classes. Even if the opportunity exists to retake the course the following semester, additional information could lead students to drop classes and preserve a higher semester GPA. This could mean the difference between being eligible for scholarships and other financial aid.

The alarm needs to be sounded for those students who are about ready to sink below the waves. Send out the midterm grade reports...

Rape reports show racial bias

Editor,

I, and many other black men and women, have found some recent incidents in Manhattan not very amusing. These incidents are false rape reports by local females. There have been four such reports in Manhattan since July, all by white females. What is even more appalling is that three of the four claimed they were raped by black males. There also is another report still being investigated. But according to a reliable source, in all probability it is headed in the same disgusting and unnecessary direction as the other three. Being that these women aren't black, I think it would be safe to say their choice of suspects didn't come as an afterthought.

It is bad enough that there exists here in Manhattan the ever popular "national myth" that black men hide behind every bush waiting for a white woman to come along so they can rape them. But when white females here and elsewhere file false rape reports claiming to have been raped by a black man, it doesn't help the situation any.

With three such reports in Manhattan, imagine the number of apparently racially motivated false reports in major metropolitan areas across the country. I know; my father was a policeman in St. Louis for 17 years. And if anyone was questioned by police here, I'm sure they didn't find it amusing in the least. Only 20 years ago we usually didn't even make it to the police station, and if we did, it often turned into the "Scottsboro Boys" revisited. Black people have it bad enough in this country without people lying about us. It seems white America remembers the guilty black man and not the innocent one. The year is 1983, but I guess most old habits are hard to break.

Perplexing portrait problems

Editor,

Does anyone have the scoop on the yearbook portrait controversy? Or is there even a controversy? Well, if not, I'm starting one.

I just have a few simple questions. First, why did K-State switch from Blaker's to some Massachusetts-based photography studio? Second, was that a professional who took my picture, or a student? And finally, what in the world is a Florentine finish?

All I want is a 5 by 7 portrait for my mom to put in a frame on the TV set. But there's no way I'm paying $20 for the photo, five dollars for retouching and three dollars for postage and handling after paying $3.50 just for the sitting. My mom won't even pay those prices, and she likes my face a lot!

Not only do I feel deceived, but frustrated as to where to turn. Massachusetts, maybe?

Lafene is good health care facility

Editor,

It seems like a lot of people use this column to air various gripes, but I would like to brag about a facility at K-State that is one of a few of its kind.

Recently, I was hospitalized in Lafene Student Health Center and, prior to that time, had no idea such services were available. The staff was very competent and attentive. The care I received was no different than that of a private hospital. Lab work, medicine and hospital expenses were a fraction of the cost other health-care facilities charge. The staff was very personable and did not hesitate to explain the procedures and answer my questions. I feel student fees that are utilized by this health center and hospital are fees well invested. K-State is very fortunate to be able to boast such an efficient and elaborate health care facility.

Remembering the veterans

Today is Veterans Day. Surprised? I was. I almost forgot about this holiday. It isn't included in our vacation schedule, so I guess it kind of snuck up on me.

Veterans Day, a day to honor veterans who fought in wars, was originally known as Armistice Day. The armistice which ended World War I was signed Nov. 11, 1918. The celebration of the end of "the war to end all wars" later was turned into a day to honor American war veterans of the Civil War (or, if you prefer, the War Between the States), Spanish-American War, World Wars I and II, Korean War and Vietnam War.

There are no more living veterans who fought in the Civil War. I don't know if there are any veterans from the Spanish-American War still alive. There are still veterans from the other wars listed above. The new veterans from the latest confrontations in Lebanon and Grenada will add to the number of Americans who have fought for their country.

It seems kind of odd for a university with a conservative atmosphere, such as K-State, to not give a holiday on such a day. I realize budget cuts and high salary costs are reasons for not giving us the day off, but there's something uniquely American about this holiday.

I remember spending Veterans Day marching in parades in my hometown. The first few parades were spent, while in a Cub Scout uniform, either on a float or by leading off the parade in a color guard. In my junior high and senior high days, Veterans Day meant marching in a band.

One thing I remember about these parades is that the weather was unpredictable — either it was so cold my lips stuck to my mouthpiece, or it was a warm Indian summer day, which made the wool band uniforms uncomfortable.

The parades started on Main Street (where else?) and ended at the American Legion, where the Legionnaires served hot dogs, potato chips, pop and hot chocolate to the parade participants.

I can remember a couple of years when they tried to hold school on Veterans Day back in my hometown. Parade participants were excused for the morning, but everyone else was supposed to attend classes. Well, it didn't work. People moaned and groaned and complained. Veterans Day became a school holiday once again.

You may think I'm complaining just because today isn't a holiday from classes. I'm not. I'm complaining because I believe there is something about Veterans Day which should make it a day for reflection. Without veterans, there wouldn't be an America.

Without having men fight — and some give up their lives — on Omaha Beach, there probably would be no United States. There would be no freedom of the press, no freedom of speech and no freedom of religion without some kind of sacrifice.

When President Reagan told the medical students who were evacuated from Grenada that it's easier to criticize from a safe position than to actually be on the front line, I agreed (even though I still disagree with the decision to exclude the press from the invasion of Grenada). It is easy to sit back here in Kansas and gripe about actions taking place across the globe. I can write what I think and crawl into bed every night and not worry about having some agents drag me out and interrogate me about my beliefs.

I have the right — no, make that the privilege — to write this column because of sacrifices others made long before I was born. In Romania, the government keeps tabs on authors by registering typewriters and taking sample typewritings from each machine. In many other countries, it is illegal to speak out against the government's policies.

I can't imagine what life under this type of suppression is like. I hope I never have to find out. To lose the right to have differing opinions is akin to losing the right to think. Without these rights, life is cheap and meaningless.

Not everything in America is perfect. People still discriminate against different groups. There is somewhat of an unwillingness to accept different ideas and different ways to do things. Rights are sometimes denied to groups or individuals because "they are different." The mass media sometimes "forget" to cover events or present the opposition's arguments.

But Americans can change, because they have the right to change. Government, no matter how impersonal or self-serving it may seem to be, are servants of the public who elected it. The media watches the government and presents its triumphs and tragedies. People are allowed the right to present and represent unpopular views because most realize that freedoms end when the minority views are oppressed.

This is why I believe Veterans Day should be celebrated. Parades and time off from work and school are meaningless without understanding the freedoms Americans have been given. The price which has been paid for these freedoms is steep. One day a year is not much of a payment, but it's a start.

A brighter future

A regular feature in the Kansas City Times purports to give a daily activity guide according to the stars. Of course the stars don't really have anything to do with the statement made. Instead, it's supposed to have something to do with astrology. But even that connection is pretty vague. Whatever, I'm curious about things like that — so I read this feature each morning.

Two days ago the statement for those born under the sign of Aries (which is what I am) was, "You see the light of a brighter future."

All right, I thought, but what else is new? I've always seen the light of a brighter future. The only trouble is, too many other people don't. To make a judgment on the basis of what is in the newspapers each day would seem to indicate that hardly anybody at all sees the light of a brighter future.

"Israel buries dead, vows massive retaliation" the headline proclaimed recently. On network television, pictures are shown of Syrian women biting the heads off snakes and men butchering dogs, an action supposedly showing what needs to be done to the enemies of Syria. The Syrians also vow massive retaliation against these enemies. So do the Iraqis against theirs. So do the Iraqis. So do the Cubans. The length of the list of nations vowing retaliation against their enemies goes on and on.

So, one-two-three-four, let's all get together and retaliate. That will certainly bring about a brighter future!

Over in the Argentine district of Kansas City the other night someone burned a wooden cross on the front lawn of a black family's home. Hooray, the KKK rides again! Atta-way to go. Burn, burn, burn! One sure way to get rid of all differences is to burn 'em up. Right? And fire does make things brighter.

In just a few more weeks, all those new missiles will be deployed in Europe. I see by the papers where the Warsaw Pact nations have approved deploying new missiles on their side of the border. Goody, goody! All those missiles are going to be pointed right smack-dab at each other. That'll be sure to make the future brighter. Funny thing, though. The image of missiles pointing at each other seems somehow indecent to me. More than indecent, even. Outright obscene. Visualize it. Several hundred missiles pointing at each other. Come on, admit it. A row of man-made implements evoking the image of giant phalluses all in a row. The only trouble with those missiles is that they can't ever grow soft. And there is no seed of the future to be found in them. All that could happen with them is explosion — an explosion which would tear up a lot of landscape, as well as people, in the process. Now, what the hell kind of brighter future is that?

But you know how it is these days. We say the only good Russian is a dead one. They say the only good American is a dead one. The Syrians say the only good Jew is a dead one. Yesterday morning I heard Ariel Sharon, former defense minister of Israel, blame the Syrians for everything. And so on and on and on the list goes.

Well, after we've seen to it that all humans have become "good" by being dead, maybe then the planet can get back to the business of letting trees grow without having their leaves killed by acid rain and letting sheep graze without having their stomachs swell up and their legs lose strength from radioactivity. And the trees and sheep and plants and rocks won't remember all those people who died of cancer in Grand Junction, Colo., because of living next to uranium waste or all those veterans of Vietnam who carried the aftereffects of Agent Orange with them into their final hours.

I'm reminded of a poem written by a friend of mine. Perhaps fortunately for him, he's now dead. His name was Kenneth Patchen. He once wrote a poem called "Because Sometimes the Handwriting Eats Away the Wall," in which the last two lines are: "Yeah! the Loonies! the Loonies are really loose! / And it's much, much later and lousier than anybody thinks!" The volume of poems in which that appeared was published in 1960. 23 years ago! I wonder what he would think if he were still alive now.

I know, I know, I sound terribly grim today. But as a species we're going to have to face facts — or else as a species we won't be facing anything.

I do indeed see the light of a brighter future. But the horse-blinder vision of the world has got to end for it to ever be able to see that future.

Let's all take these horse blinders off our eyes, turn around, and look in the other direction. I mean in the direction of not going on any longer in this preparation for killing each other.

Whatever the rest of you do, I plan on watching the sun rise each morning next week and the week after that, etc. Perhaps one of these mornings, Blake's angels actually will come dancing toward me out of the rising sun. I pray to God that happens soon — before it's too late for any of us to appreciate it.

We can have a brighter future. Not only for those born under the sign of Aries — but for everyone! Let's start.

Wichita police book man in fugitive slayings

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Two men were arrested Thursday in connection with the discovery of two skeletons believed to belong to a federal fugitive and his wife who have been missing since 1979.

Assistant District Attorney Hank Blase confirmed LeRoy L. "Lee" Wilcox, 45, of Wichita, a computer programing supervisor for The Wichita Eagle-Beacon, was booked into the Sedgwick County Jail to be held pending the filing of formal charges. His bond was set at $5 million.

Robert W. Armstrong, 51, was arrested by FBI agents at the Manhattan office of the New York welfare department, an FBI spokesman said. He was employed at the office as a computer programmer.

Armstrong was to appear before a U.S. Magistrate to answer a warrant charging him with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution for the murders of Donald and Norma Earl, the FBI spokesman said.

Earl, 49, Clearwater, and his 43-year-old wife disappeared shortly before Earl was to appear for a June 15, 1979 federal court bond hearing in Wichita.

Earl was indicted on 12 counts of interstate transportation of false checks. The hearing was requested by federal prosecutors who wanted to increase Earl's $3,000 bond after they became acquainted with his extensive criminal record.

Sedgwick County Sheriff Johnnie Darr said a Texas informant in custody on an unrelated charge led officers to the bodies about five miles northwest of Kingman and 18 to 20 miles west of the Sedgwick County line.

The sheriff said he believes the victims were strangled in Sedgwick County and taken to Kingman County for burial. He said investigators think the Earls were killed because it was believed they were informants.

Deputy County Coroner William Eckert was examining the bones and personal belongings found with the skeletons in a common grave Thursday in an attempt to make positive identification.

Wilcox and Armstrong are both former NCR Corp. computer department employees. At one time, they lived in the same Wichita apartment complex, Darr said.

Formal charges won't be filed until Monday, Darr said.

U.S. offers disaster aid to 23 Kansas counties

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Thirty-five eastern Kansas counties were designated drought disaster areas Thursday by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, making farmers eligible for low-interest disaster loans.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said the USDA would consider six other eastern Kansas counties which were included in Gov. John Carlin's Oct. 13 request. Carlin's office said the governor plans to request a similar designation for up to 30 other counties, mostly in central Kansas.

Carlin originally requested the disaster declaration for 41 eastern Kansas counties because of the summer drought that caused an estimated $320 million in crop damage across the state.

Dole said he was "gratified that Secretary (John) Block has acted promptly on these first applications for relief of the severe crop losses caused by this summer's searing heat." Carlin has been critical of the USDA for not acting sooner on his request.

The disaster declaration covers losses between June 15 and Oct. 1.

"I have asked the USDA to further review the six requested counties which were not approved today," Dole said. "In addition, a damage assessment of other counties in central Kansas is being made by state Farmers Home officials in Topeka.

The disposition of the six remaining counties is expected in two weeks."

Counties approved for low-interest loans were: Allen, Anderson, Atchison, Bourbon, Brown, Chase, Chautauqua, Cherokee, Clay, Coffey, Doniphan, Douglas, Elk, Franklin, Geary, Greenwood, Jackson, Jefferson, Johnson, Labette, Leavenworth, Linn, Lyon, Marshall, Miami, Montgomery, Nemaha, Neosho, Osage, Potawatamie, Riley, Shawnee, Wabunsee, Woodson, Wyandotte.

Dole said the USDA would seek additional information about losses in the other six counties: Butler, Cowley, Crawford, Marion, Morris and Wilson.

Dole said farmers in the eligible counties who suffered at least a 30 percent crop loss will be eligible for loans of 5 percent on the first $100,000 and 8 percent on the balance to a maximum of $500,000. Carlin said last month that more than 37,000 agri-business operators in the 41 eastern Kansas counties "suffered over 30 percent crop production loss with many being in the 50 percent to 70 percent range."

Carlin's press secretary, Mike Swenson, said in Topeka Thursday the governor was pleased that the USDA had "finally" acted upon the Kansas request. Carlin criticized the agency last week for not acting more timely on the Kansas application for the declaration.

Jury convicts professed mass killer

DENTON, Texas — A jury Thursday sentenced professed mass murderer Henry Lee Lucas to life in prison for killing his teen-age common-law wife with a butcher knife.

The panel deliberated 3½ hours before sentencing the drifter who claims to have killed 165 people across the country.

Lucas was convicted Wednesday just hours after tearfully telling jurors that he stabbed Frieda "Becky" Powell during a quarrel.

Lucas was the only defense witness. Testimony began Tuesday and the trial ended after less than two hours' deliberation Wednesday by the seven-man, five-woman jury.

Defense lawyer Tom Whitlock had said an appeal would probably depend on the sentence.

The prosecution relied heavily on a videotape of Lucas' description to police of how he stabbed the 15-year-old Miss Powell after a quarrel the night of Aug. 24, 1982.

Man wins $40.5 million verdict

LOS ANGELES — A janitor who sued when Allstate Insurance Co. delayed payment on a $36,000 accident claim says he'd like to open a truck repair shop with his $40.5 million jury award.

The claim stemmed from an accident involving the Henry Fellows family and an uninsured motorist. The most serious injury was a broken arm.

Fellows works for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios. He and his wife, Alice, have seven children ages 14 to 23.

The Fellows, their son and two nieces were in a car that collided in 1976 with that of an uninsured motorist, who illegally made a U-turn on the freeway, said the Fellows' lawyer, Michael Puize.

After a dispute on payments, the case went to an arbitrator, who awarded the family $36,000, which Allstate paid after a substantial delay, Puize said.

Romain Nelsen, attorney for Allstate, said the company will ask the Superior Court judge to rule in the company's favor in a new trial, or seek a reduction of the damages, which the judge can do.

Teenager returns $75,000 prize

CHICAGO — A teen-ager who won $75,000 in a Juvenile Diabetes Foundation raffle says she decided to return the money out of love for her stepsister, who has had the disease for seven years.

"They said my name — I was in hysterics. My dad just looked at me, and I said I knew what I wanted to do," Eva Braverman, 15, said Thursday. "My stepsister's a diabetic and we live with it every day in our house and I just thought it was the right thing to do, I mean it's important."

On Wednesday night, more than 2,000 people gathered at Navy Pier for a party and drawing. Braverman, an investment broker, said he bought 50 of the $100 raffle tickets — 10 for each of his family members.

California camel startles motorist

PORTERVILLE, Calif. — A startled motorist told the highway patrol he saw what looked like a dinosaur trotting down Main Street, but it was just Guinevere, an unsteady runaway camel.

A son of the camel's owner, Annabelle Goebel, had set out with Guinevere for nighttime practice for a Veterans' Day parade.

Guinevere unseated him at the Goebel farm north of this central California city and took off on her own Tuesday at 10 p.m.

In her haste she bounced off a utility pole and a tree before veering down Main Street and scaring the motorist.

Officers found the camel and helped return her home, and the Goebels promised there would be no more night rides with Guinevere.

Non-smokers breathe easier in San Francisco

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — After a campaign that cost the tobacco industry and its allies more than $15 a vote, San Franciscans have narrowly approved an ordinance giving non-smokers more clout than in any other big city to demand smoke-free zones in private workplaces.

A tiny margin of victory emerged late Wednesday, more than 24 hours after the polls closed, when more than 12,000 absentee ballots finally were tallied. Proposition P passed 80,740 to 79,481. About 300 ballots remained to be counted, not enough to change the outcome.

The vote marks San Franciscans as "a health-conscious electorate, not easily hornswoggled by a high-priced ad campaign," said Supervisor Wendy Nelder, who drafted the law.

Once the Board of Supervisors confirms the results, employers have three months to draft a smoking policy accommodating the preferences of both smokers and non-smokers. If non-smokers are dissatisfied with the arrangement and want smoking banned, employers must honor their wishes or face fines of up to $500 a day.

"This vote indicates concern for health problems that inhaling tobacco smoke causes," Nelder said. "It upholds the right of everyone to choose whether to breathe tobacco smoke. It doesn't dictate personal habits, it doesn't preclude smokers from smoking. They just have to pick their spot, walk into the hall, wait a while.

The law was enacted in June, but has not been enforced pending the election because opponents organized an initiative petition, signed by more than 40,000 people, that forced it onto the ballot.

Until the polls closed, residents were bombarded with radio and TV ads, brochures and phone calls in a David-and-Goliath fight for votes by pro-ordinance forces operating on a shoestring and opponents funded largely by tobacco company contributions.

San Franciscans Against Government Intrusion, which collected more than $1 million from tobacco companies along with contributions from other businesses, spent more than $1.2 million to oppose the issue — equivalent to more than $15 for every vote favoring repeal. San Franciscans for Local Control raised less than $85,000 or $1 for every vote favoring the ordinance. It was the most expensive referendum campaign in city history.

The campaign focused less on health issues than on government's reach into private lives and outsiders' lobbying in local politics.

Proponents argued that city lawmakers had a right to pass public health legislation and criticized tobacco industry contributions as an attempt to undermine local democracy. Opponents blasted the law as unwarranted meddling by government and tyranny by non-smokers.

Officials term waste dump request incomplete

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — An application to reopen and expand the operations of the Furley hazardous waste dump in Sedgwick County is incomplete and the dump owners must provide more information to state and federal environmental officials, it was announced today.

Waste Management Inc., owners of the facility, must submit the additional information by Jan. 6, according to Barbara Sabol, secretary of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

The 80-acre Furley dump, about 10 miles northwest of Wichita, was closed in January 1982 by the state because chemical wastes had leaked into surrounding groundwater. A clean-up is under way, but recently dioxin has been found in a sample taken from a groundwater test well at the dump.

In September, Waste Management submitted an application to reopen the dump and expand operations onto an adjacent 80 acres.

Both the Department of Health and Environment and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency reviewed the application to determine whether it was complete. The review did not address the "technical merits" of the company's proposal, according to Mrs. Sabol.

Allan Abramson, director of environment for the state agency, said KDHE and the EPA asked the dump operators for answers to "over 150 very specific, line item questions."

"It was just a host of things," said Abramson, adding that the questions had to do with "clarification and inconsistencies" in the Waste Management application.

"Obviously we're in a position of wanting to be very, very careful, and as complete as we can," he said.

The state environmental agency has given the dump owners 60 days to respond to the request for additional information. After that, KDHE and the EPA will review the responses to determine if they are adequate.

Once the application has been deemed complete, the Department of Health and Environment has 240 days to either approve or deny it. If approved, the application must then be reviewed by the Hazardous Waste Disposal Facility Approval Board, a five-person group including the state geologist, secretary of health and environment and secretary of transportation.

Waste Management proposes to conduct several new operations on the existing site, including solvent recovery, reclamation of waste containers and a disposal well. Also proposed for the present site are additional liquid waste treatment and storage facilities.

Finally, the company wants to expand to the adjacent 80 acres and open seven landfill "cells" for storage of wastes.

Calendars reflect interests, society's obsession with time

By KELLY ROBINSON
Staff Writer

It has been said that ours is a society preoccupied, obsessed, consumed with time. Americans live their lives by the clock. They eat when they are not hungry simply because it's time. They go to bed when they are not sleepy simply because it's late.

He who leaves home in the morning forgetting his trusty Timex is usually he who spends the rest of the day habitually glancing down at a bare wrist and searching walls feverishly for a clock.

Perhaps an outgrowth of this attachment to the timepiece is the calendar — a handy little device that has been around since who-knows-when B.C.

The calendar, in its earliest form, was most likely an invention of necessity. It was designed to aid people in keeping track of the day, week, month and year and viewed primarily as a tool, not unlike the wheel.

Modern society, however, has improvised on the notion of the calendar, turning it into something more than a tool. Calendars today, with themes ranging from art to athletics, tend to be reflective of the people who use them.

Luann Baker, trade buyer for the Union Bookstore, said she has been selling 1984 calendars since August. A few favorites have already been sold out, including the 1984 Chippendales Calendar which features a color photo of a conservatively clad (that is, the amount of clothing is conservative) man each month.

Never fear ladies, she reordered. Baker said she ordered about 250 different types of calendars this year. She is assisted in making her selections by various publishing companies' catalogs and an occasional visit from a sales representative.

Knowing which calendars will sell well is based on Baker's personal judgment and past experience.

"The Norman Rockwell (calendar) always does well," she said. "Doonesbury is always a favorite. And your scenery calendars do really well, too."

Another popular choice is the Word-a-Day Calendar, Baker said. This tear-off sheet style calendar features a word and its definition to be learned each day in an effort to enhance one's vocabulary. These calendars are available in adult and children's versions.

Following the same principle, there are tear-off sheet calendars with 365 jokes, riddles, and puns — one for each day of the year.

For example, here is the riddle for Feb. 25:

NOT FOUND IN WEBSTER'S:

Sled dogs: mush puppies

Physical fitness calendars and workout books are in abundance this year. For instance, Richard Simmons' calendar features an exercise-of-the-month and a low-calorie recipe-of-the-month. The post-up calendar coordinates with a weekly planner to record the progress and pitfalls of dieting diehards.

On the other hand, there are calendars which celebrate the great pastime of spectating, as opposed to participating, in physical activity.

ABC's National Football League Calendar, complete with action photos, game schedules and trivia information, is such a calendar. In addition, there are calendars depicting such sports as horse racing, sailing, windsurfing, kayaking and crevasse jumping.

Perhaps, as a way of keeping in tune with the times, noted musicians such as the Beatles, Duke Ellington and Mick Jagger are also common monthly subjects of calendars.

In the maze of calendars which feature scenery, animals and art reproductions, one might think it a nearly impossible feat to create a unique calendar. Nevertheless, it has been done.

Baker said one of the most unusual she has seen this year is a German-published calendar titled "Finger Theatre." Each month features a photo of a man's two hands shaped, painted and intertwined to resemble animals, or "hanimals."

Another possible candidate for this unorthodox category might be The Mating Calendar 1984 in which pen-and-ink sketches of animals and information about their mating habits are revealed monthly.

The month of June, titled "Making it Snappy," tells all about how the common snapping turtle reproduces. The month of November, titled "Horny, deer?" explains how white-tailed deer make white-tailed fawns.

Craft lawyers ask for new trial

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Lawyers for Christine Craft on Thursday asked for a new trial on the charge that she was demoted from the anchor desk of KMBC-TV because of sex discrimination.

Craft's attorneys also asked U.S. District Judge Joseph E. Stevens Jr. to reconsider his decision denying their client a new trial on a claim that she was paid less than her male counterpart at the Kansas City station.

A federal court jury decided Aug. 8 after a two-week trial before Stevens that Craft was the victim of fraud and awarded her $500,000 in damages. The jury also issued an advisory verdict that Metromedia Inc., the former owner of KMBC, was guilty of sex discrimination. The six-member panel ruled against Craft on her claim that equal-pays laws had been violated.

But on Oct. 31 Stevens threw out the jury award, ruling that her demotion from the anchor desk was not the result of sex discrimination, and denied a request for retrial of the equal-pay claim.

Stevens said the jury's fraud verdict was the result of "passion, prejudice, confusion or mistake," and ordered that a new trial on that count be held outside of Kansas City the first of next year.

Thursday's motion said that the plaintiff "vigorously disagrees with the propriety and validity" of Stevens' order for a new fraud trial and with his conclusion that the jurors were guided by "passion and prejudice."

But, the motion said, if a new trial is warranted on the fraud claim, a decision to disallow a retrial of the other two claims "would appear to be inconsistent."

"It is wholly inconsistent for the court to find that the jury's supposedly 'unprincipled award' cannot be the basis of a valid verdict for plaintiff on Count III (fraud), and yet the verdict against plaintiff on Count II (equal pay) can be the basis of a rational principled decision."

The motion said that, if a new trial is to be held, it should address all three claims.

Craft, 38, contended in her suit that she was demoted from co-anchor of news broadcasts to reporter because she wasn't attractive or deferential enough to men.

But Stevens concluded that the station had to contend with Craft's "below-average aptitude in matters of clothing and makeup." And citing Craft's "affinity for the beach life and her apparent indifference to matters of appearance," the judge wrote in his decision that the station's actions were "appropriate to her unique circumstances."

Stevens criticized the publicity surrounding the case, and said the new fraud trial would be held in Joplin, Mo., 120 miles south of Kansas City. Jurors in that trial will be sequestered, unlike those in the first trial.

The judge said the jury might have been prejudiced by news accounts, particularly those repeating Craft's contention that she had been told by then-News Director Ridge Shannon that she was "too old, too unattractive and not deferential enough to men."

"The court has concluded as a matter of fact that Shannon said no such thing," Stevens wrote.

Craft had sought $1.2 million in her suit, in which she alleged that KMBC told her she was being hired for her journalistic skills, when station management actually considered personal appearance the most important qualification of its on-air personalities.

Student career seminar aids in job selection

By ANDY SCHROCK
Collegian Reporter

Students trying to decide on a major or career should assess their values, goals, interests and talents in order to choose a field that best suits them.

That was the point emphasized at the first of three career exploration workshops sponsored by the Counseling Center and U-Learn. The workshops are designed to help students choose a suitable career and major, said Susan Angle, coordinator for career programs.

Eleven people attended the first session Thursday afternoon. Two other sessions are scheduled for Nov. 17 and Dec. 1 in Holton Hall 10.

The workshops are designed for individual participation so each person can determine his or her own goals and interests.

"The more you, as individuals put into this search, the more you'll get out of it. You'll have some skills to help you decide on a career or major," Kathy Burkle, graduate in counseling, said.

Burkle said most of the participants were there because they were confused and frustrated about choosing a career.

"Those feelings can cause a lot of problems," she said.

The workshop began with the discussion of external and internal factors that influence the decision-making process. External factors might include parents and teachers, while internal factors might be personal interests, goals and talents. These factors can often conflict, especially when one makes a decision to please a parent or another person.

"Try to find a happy medium between what you want to do and what your parents or friends want you to do," she said.

The main factor that should be taken into consideration when choosing a career is whether the career would be enjoyable.

"It's not so much what you're doing as whether you enjoy it. You can become a doctor or lawyer because someone wants you to but if you're not happy, what difference does it make?" said Ben Campbell, graduate in counseling and workshop facilitator.

One of the group participants told about a policeman he knew who was a member of Mensa, an organization for people with high IQs.

"He was able to fulfill all his needs through being a policeman. He probably could have been a doctor, but he's happy with what he's doing," the participant said.

Dislikes are as important as likes in determining what field one should be in, Burkle said.

"You know you're in the wrong major if you hate your classes, you're not interested, or you have an inability to do classwork successfully. Knowing what you don't like is a really good way to start to decide what areas you do have interests in," she said.

Participants were encouraged to share their own experiences and they spoke of disillusion and wrong turns.

"I expected to do well and found out I just didn't like it — that it just wasn't for me," one student said about a major.

"I'll always be worried about my career," another said.

Once a career decision is made, it needn't be forever binding. It can and possibly should change, Burkle said.

"Once you make a decision, you don't necessarily have to live with it the rest of your life. It's something that changes all your life," she said.

Several myths surround career choice. One myth is that there is a single right career for everyone. This myth is not true, Campbell said.

"You can go into other areas. You can take some of the skills and knowledge you have and apply it somewhere else," he said.

Another myth is that everyone can satisfy all their needs through their occupation. Actually, very few people are so wrapped up in a career that they don't need some kind of outside diversion to make their life well-rounded, he said.

In order to assess interests, the participants chose personality characteristics which best identified themselves.

The workshop was concluded by having the participants complete an interest inventory titled "The Self-Directed Search: A Guide to Educational and Vocational Planning," an in-depth analysis of interest and personality characteristics.

Despite adequate planning, analysis and introspection, the decision of a career can be quite difficult at times.

"There is no easy way to choose a career or major," Campbell said.

Bird seasons open Saturday; plenty of quail, pheasants

By The Associated Press

PRATT — Pheasant season opens Saturday and state biologists say there should be plenty of birds to hunt despite an estimated 22 percent decline in population since last season.

Quail season also opens Saturday, but surveys show the quail population is at about the same level as last season.

Last year's pheasant harvest of 1.5 million birds was an all-time record for Kansas, a Fish and Game Commission spokesman said.

Shooting hours run from one-half hour before sunrise to sunset.

The daily pheasant bag limit is four. Possession limits are eight the second day, 12 on the third and 16 on and after the fourth day.

For quail, the daily bag is eight with possession limits of 16 the second day and 24 on and after the third.

Oil company pays patrons to convert

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A Colorado-based oil company began issuing checks Thursday to some of its natural gas customers in southeast Kansas to help them convert to another source of fuel for heating and cooking.

The action by the Zoandra Petroleum Co. came after a meeting Wednesday with the Kansas Corporation Commission, which late last month ordered a shut-off of gas service to the company's more than three dozen customers. The commission said the gas system posed a danger to customers because of low pressure.

"What they are doing is issuing checks out of their Yates Center office," Charles Jones, a KCC spokesman, said late Thursday. "So far, six checks have been issued."

The company, under an emergency plan agreed to by the KCC, is paying for the installation and one year's rental of a tank for liquefied petroleum gas, or LPG — about $48 — and the conversion of appliances to LPG, about $50.

In addition, Zoandra said it would offer $50 to any of its customers who already have a supply of LPG.

Still, customers must pay for all the costs of the fuel, which will be substantially higher than the $1.50-a-unit most were charged for the natural gas by Zoandra. The average price of natural gas statewide is $4.30 a unit or 1,000 cubic feet.

Bob Storey, a Topeka lawyer representing Zoandra, which is based in Aurora, Colo., met with the KCC on Wednesday to outline the proposal to provide an alternative source of fuel for the company's customers in rural areas of Wilson, Woodson and Allen counties.

The commission, which regulates utilities in Kansas, accepted the proposal as a temporary solution to restore heat to some customers. However, commissioners have yet to decide what will be done permanently and in the Wednesday meeting expressed concerns that the Zoandra proposal was inadequate.

One problem plaguing both the commission and Zoandra is that neither definitely knows how many customers were connected to the 31-mile natural gas line, which is called the Buffalo gas system because it begins near the tiny Wilson County community of Buffalo. So far, the KCC has pinpointed 38 customers.

There are no Zoandra customers in the town of Buffalo itself, but they are scattered across outlying rural areas. Some are just west of the Allen County community of Humboldt, which is about 100 miles south of Topeka.

The gas pipeline is a gathering system for wells in the area, and over the years customers have been allowed to connect to the line. Some customers, in fact, received free gas.

American general inspects Korean border

By The Associated Press

DEMILITARIZED ZONE, Korea — Gen. Robert Sennewald, the top American military man in South Korea, "walked the tape" with Korean officers, stepping along the southern boundary of the DMZ for a first-hand look at the terrain, positions and state of readiness of Korean military units.

His commander-in-chief, Ronald Reagan, is due in South Korea Saturday to visit U.S. and South Korean units stationed along the bleak, barren border with North Korea.

And Sennewald is making sure everything is ready along the DMZ, the demilitarized zone which has divided North and South Korea since the Korean War armistice was signed in 1953.

"It's up here (the DMZ) that you get a sense of feeling of what it's all about. I try to convey the message to the young soldiers that what they are doing is really appreciated," said Sennewald, who gets out in the field with the troops or visits the units in his command at least twice a week.

"In the final analysis, it's right here on the ground where you're going to win or lose."

On this day in the field, Sennewald was carrying that message to South Korean troops and their officers.

One of his jobs is commander in chief Republic of Korea-U.S. Combined Forces Command. He also is commander in chief United Nations Command, commander U.S. Forces Korea, and commander U.S. 8th Army.

After early morning meetings, including breakfast with Defense Ministry officials, the American commander was in a helicopter heading north over traditional invasion routes to Seoul and on to South Korean positions along the central front.

The chopper made its first landing, and Sennewald was off with Korean officers in open jeeps for a bumpy ride to this desolate portion of the DMZ.

After briefings from on-site commanders, it was back in the jeeps and to another area, where the general "walked the tape."

Such walks are customary for the trim, 53-year-old Sennewald. He estimates he has gone by foot over one-third of the 151-mile long, 2.5-mile wide barrier that divides the peninsula.

After more briefings, questions and praise for the line troops, the helicopter was airborne again, heading for a firing range.

With scores of officers and enlisted men looking over the rugged terrain, strike aircraft, artillery, rockets, small arms and troops on the ground and in tanks and armored personnel carriers demonstrated their effectiveness.

Back in the helicopter and heading for his headquarters in Seoul, Sennewald, who saw combat duty in the Korean War and in Vietnam, talked about his job and the Reagan visit.

He spoke with enthusiasm of the combined forces command that makes a team of U.S. and South Korean military men.

There are about 40,000 U.S. troops in South Korea, with 1,500 American infantrymen helping the South Koreans patrol the DMZ.

Since the 1953 armistice, five dozen Americans have been killed along the DMZ. One of the most publicized incidents was in 1976 when two American officers were slain by ax-swinging North Koreans when the Americans tried to prune a tree near a United Nations guard-post. In a show of determination three days later, the tree was cut down.

Sennewald said, "Everyone believes there has been a raising of tension" on the Korean peninsula since a bombing in Rangoon, Burma, Oct. 9 killed 17 South Koreans, including four members of President Chun Doo-hwan's cabinet.

But he feels confident that Reagan will be safe here. "As you noted, there is always some anxiety, but if I had significant qualms I certainly wouldn't be a party to it," Sennewald said.

House passes bill to avert phone access fees

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A bill designed to save consumers money on their telephone bills passed the House on Thursday night, with its sponsors predicting it would go a long way toward maintaining universal phone service for all Americans.

Opponents charged the bill amounted to a "great deception" and would maintain subsidies for phone customers who didn't need it while doing little to control local telephone rate increases.

The measure passed on a voice vote, after a key test vote on a Republican amendment failed earlier in the night by a margin of 142-264.

The bill, the first major telephone legislation to clear the House in 49 years, would overturn a regulatory plan that requires consumers to start paying a portion of the subsidies for local service that are now collected through long-distance rates.

To accomplish that, however, the measure would prevent interstate long-distance rates from falling as much as they might otherwise under a plan adopted by the Federal Communications Commission.

The bill now goes to the Senate, where its future is uncertain. The Senate Commerce Committee has passed a similar measure, but Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., indicated last week he did not expect the Senate to consider the matter before next year.

The FCC's plan, which would impose a monthly "access charge" of $2 a month on all consumers, would take effect April 3 unless a law is enacted by Congress.

The House bill would prevent consumers from paying roughly $2 billion through access fees in 1984. The bill would have no effect, however, on the roughly $6.7 billion worth of local rate increase requests now pending.

R.E.M. LP exemplifies trend; music turns back to basics

By ANGIE SCHARNHORST
Collegian Reviewer

The "back to basics" movement in rock music has produced, or reshaped, a number of talented performers.

One of the characteristics of the movement is the elimination of unnecessary instrumentation and vocals found in "art rock" and the return to music for enjoyment. As a consequence, music by the "back to basics" artists (they are still classified as artists) often sounds sparse by comparison.

"Murmur," the latest R.E.M. LP, is a study in sparsity.

The album doesn't feature the "wall of sound" style about which many bands proudly boast, but instead highlights simple rhythm, well-placed acoustic and electric guitar and eloquent, but not complex, lyrics.

The band also uses piano and

Review

keyboards as a highlight to the other instruments.

Fans of the Queen/Electric Light Orchestra school of rock complexities might have trouble enjoying R.E.M.'s basic style. But those who appreciate music in which the fine instrumentation and simple harmonies can actually be heard without dissection should love it.

"Murmur," R.E.M.'s second release, is a loveable album. Bill Berry, Michael Buck, Peter Mills and Mike Stipe work tightly to produce music that is easy to listen to and memorable.

There are several especially strong cuts on "Murmur." In addition to the hit "Catapult," strong tracks include "Perfect Circle" and "Radio Free Europe," which also has been receiving quite a bit of local airplay.

The lyrics of "Perfect Circle" are an introduction, if not an exemplification, of "Murmur" as a whole:

*put your hair back,
you get to leave,
eleven gallows,
on your sleeve,
shallow figure,
winner's pain,
eleven shadows,
way out of place...*

The lyrics on the album, often obtuse, are an integral part of R.E.M.'s unmistakable sound.

"Murmur" is one of the best LPs to be released by a young American band in the past six months. As strong followers of the "back to basics" movement, R.E.M. and "Murmur" are welcome relief from the schlock produced by many others.

Jury convicts Lawrence man in Seurer case

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — Bryan Keith Bell was convicted of second-degree murder Thursday in the stabbing death of Frank Seurer Sr., a restaurant owner and father of University of Kansas quarterback Frank Seurer Jr.

The jury also convicted Bell of aggravated robbery for taking $466 after the murder.

The jury of eight women and four men deliberated more than three hours before returning its verdict. The jury was given the case at 10:55 a.m., took a 90-minute lunch break at noon and returned with the verdict at 4:10 p.m.

Bell, whose family was in the courtroom, was expressionless as Associate Douglas County District Judge Mike Elwell polled each member of the jury.

Seurer's widow and three of her children held hands as the verdict was read. Frank Seurer Jr. had left the courtroom at mid-afternoon before the jury reached its verdict.

Elwell scheduled a pre-sentence investigation. Bell was to remain in custody until sentencing Dec. 6.

Both charges carry a minimum sentence of 5 to 15 years and a maximum of 20 years to life.

Bell, 23, did not present any evidence in his defense. In closing arguments, defense attorney Robert G. Duncan challenged the confession Bell made Aug. 17.

Duncan said the confession, related Wednesday by Lawrence police officer Kevin Harmon, was similar to a story police suggested to Bell when Bell said he knew nothing about the murder.

"Keith confessed to what the officer suggested happened," Duncan said. "... Boy, they (police) would have been disappointed if they hadn't gotten a confession."

Duncan also downplayed fingerprints of Bell found on an envelope on the restaurant floor near Seurer's outstretched hand. Duncan said the fingerprints could have been left before the murder.

"I'm surprised they didn't find fingerprints of his all over the place," Duncan said.

Seurer was killed Aug. 2 in his restaurant, Pop's Bar-B-Q. He had been stabbed 23 times, including six times in the heart, according to prosecutors.

Seurer had moved his family to Lawrence from California after his son, considered one of the best Big Eight quarterbacks this year, enrolled at KU. The elder Seurer bought the restaurant from Bobby Bell, the former Kansas City Chiefs linebacker who is Bryan Bell's uncle.

Sue Seurer, wife of the Frank Seurer Sr. and mother of Frank Seurer Jr., testified Wednesday that Bryan Bell "taught us the restaurant business."

Judge fines Amway $20 million for fraud

By The Associated Press

TORONTO — Amway Corp., which uses an army of part-time distributors to sell household items door to door, was fined $20 million Thursday after pleading guilty to criminal charges of defrauding Canada of $23 million.

Chief Justice Gregory Evans of Ontario Supreme Court ordered Amway Canada, the company's Canadian subsidiary, to pay $4 million, with the remaining $16 million to be paid by the parent corporation.

The charges, involving customs duties, alleged that Amway cheated on its invoices between 1965 and 1980 and hid the true value of the Amway products brought into Canada by 70 percent.

Ontario prosecutor Paul Lindsay termed the fine the largest fraud charge in Canadian history.

Evans said one of the factors in deciding the amount of the fines was the financial benefit the two companies obtained from the scheme. He also said he wanted it to act as a deterrent.

Calling the guilty plea a "deathbed confession of guilt as we were getting closer to trial," Evans said U.S. Amway founders Jay Van Andel, chairman of the board, and Richard DeVos, president, were "not very responsible corporate citizens in Canada."

Jones depends on natural ability

By VIKKI WATSON
Staff Writer

Many think she's shy, hiding behind her ever-present smile. But this sophomore from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. claims she's really outgoing if only people get to know her.

And knowing her is a possibility — if all goes as planned for K-State women's basketball player, Cassandra Jones.

Jones begins her second season on the women's basketball team with a long list of high school accomplishments. Those accomplishments include being named Florida's player of the year for three straight seasons and also being selected on the Converse all-America squad for three consecutive years.

During both her junior and senior years her squad finished second in the state with a 26-1 record.

That's not bad for a 5-foot-7 swing guard who didn't start playing basketball competitively until she was in seventh grade. It was all to show her boy competitors that girls can be good athletes, too, she said.

"I had a lot of natural ability," Jones said, "but the real reason I went into it (basketball) was to prove that girls can play basketball as well as guys can."

And Jones has done a lot of proving since then — earning a starting guard position last season for K-State, becoming the 'Cats fourth leading scorer and averaging 2.6 assists per game. She had a game-high 24 points against Oklahoma State University midway in the '82-83 season.

"It (high school basketball) really wasn't a lot of pressure like it is in college," she said. "The toughest part is that you have so much to accomplish; trying to impress yourself as well as impress your coach."

And even her impressive statistics as a freshman weren't satisfactory to the goal-oriented, achieving Jones.

"I wasn't as successful as I would have liked," she said. "Last year, I played point guard and that was the first year I'd ever done that. But I learned that you can contribute to the team by doing a lot of other things (besides scoring)."

And those "other things" must have helped pay off — the 'Cats finished last year as Big Eight Conference champions with a 25-7 record, made their eighth post-season tournament appearance and finished in the top 16 teams.

Lettermen who are gone from that successful squad include Sharon Carr, Becky Dobbins, Betsy Sloan and all-American Priscilla Gary — K-State's leading scorer with an 18.3 average.

That leads quite a void for a young team with only one senior to fill in for the lost lettermen. But the fact that the team is youthful doesn't bother Jones — she has confidence in her teammates' abilities.

"I think we have a good chance to go undefeated," Jones said. "We're still young, but I feel very strong about our team."

And strong is what this year's team should be — physically, that is — following a six-week conditioning program and a strong daily dose of running and conditioning now.

This hard work, and the dedication it requires, is the line separating the world of high school basketball and that of college, Jones said, who also added that even very talented high school players may find the going tough on the collegiate level.

"It's not as easy as it seems," she said. "In high school the coaches baby you because you're their superstar. In college, there are 10 superstars."

"Don't go into college with a big head," Jones advised. "You have to slow down a bit. You have to play team ball."

And when this quick guard takes the court with the team, she's a blur of dynamic aggressiveness. Off the court? She's more laid-back, but still outgoing, she said.

"At first I really lie back and observe," Jones, who believes that many people find her quiet and shy, said. "But I really think I'm an outgoing person. I like to be around a lot of people."

So what has a year of competition done for Jones? It has made this already aggressive player more involved with team leadership, she said.

"I'm an aggressive player (but) I play a little conservative at times. Last year, I didn't talk much on the floor but this year I've kind of taken the initiative to talk and get everybody fired up."

And it won't take much to get this young lady fired up when it comes to basketball — she's already eagerly anticipating the 'Cats season opener Nov. 25-26 when K-State hosts the Converse Little Apple Classic.

"We've been practicing for about eight weeks and I really want to play," Jones said. "We've played a lot and we should do real well."

"I think we can go out and beat any team on any day," she said.

'Cats to face Cyclones in homecoming match

By SEAN REILLY
Sports Editor

K-State Wildcats will play their final football home game of the season Saturday when they entertain Iowa State University in a Big Eight Conference clash at KSU stadium. Kickoff time is set for 1:30 p.m.

A Homecoming crowd of 35,000 is expected to attend the game. The Cyclones, now 3-6 overall and 2-3 in conference play, lead the series 39-24-3 and have a record of 16-14-1 in games played against the Wildcats, which are also 3-6 overall but are deadlocked with the University of Colorado in the conference cellar with 1-4 marks.

Although not having lost a Homecoming game since 1980, K-State's record in these games is 5-27-2. Last year, the 'Cats tied Missouri 7-7 in a nationally televised game.

The 'Cats have defeated Iowa State the last two times they have met, including a 10-7 upset by K-State of the then 11th-ranked Cyclone team in 1981.

The 9-3 defeat of Iowa State last year in Ames was K-State's biggest game last season for it assured the team of its first winning season since 1970, ended a 16 game losing streak on the road, and kept its bowl chances alive. "It was the biggest game since I've been here," Jim Dickey, the 'Cats' head coach, said after last year's contest.

K-State is coming off a last-second 21-20 win over Oklahoma State University in Stillwater while the Cyclones were humiliated by the No. 1-rated University of Nebraska Cornhuskers 72-29.

In its defeat at the hands of Nebraska, Iowa State center Chuck Meyers commented on the game. "We knew we were going to have to score points to win, but we didn't think we'd have to score that many."

The game against Oklahoma State may have proven to be a major stepping stone for the final two games for the 'Cats.

"It will be a real challenge to see how our kids come back and play after a win," Dickey added.

The 'Cats will attempt to finish strong this season against a team with a new coach. Donnie Criner, who spent the previous seven years at Boise State University, has had a season of ups and downs with a team that has only nine starters back from last year. One of the bright spots this season has been the performance of senior quarterback David Archer.

"Dave has football savvy and that special quality good quarterbacks have to have," Criner said, adding that Archer has a strong, accurate passing arm.

Currently Archer and Frank Seurer Jr., of the University of Kansas, are chasing the Big Eight season passing record of 2,476 yards set in 1968 by former K-State Lynn Dickey. Seurer leads the race by just one yard with a total of 2,186 yards to Archer's 2,185.

Archer's arm may pose a stiff challenge for K-State's defense, which ranks sixth in the conference in both total defense (402.2 yards allowed per game) and scoring defense (28.4 points per contest).

"They like to throw the ball a lot, but I'm not sure they won't try to run it either," Dickey said.

Leading the 'Cats' defense will be two-time all-Big Eight defensive lineman Reggie Singletary, who was switched to linebacker two games ago and has led the team in tackles in both, including a career high of 18 stops against Nebraska.

On offense, the 'Cats will again go with junior Stan Weber at quarterback. Since first starting two games ago, Weber has rushed for 172 yards (an average of 86 per game) and in both contests he completed 12 passes out of 27 attempts.

For the homecoming game, K-State's ticket office announced that the athletic department is offering general admission tickets, valued at $12, at a cost of $7.50 for adults and $3.50 for high school students and younger. The tickets will be available on Saturday at the stadium.

Harriers prepare for districts

By TIM FILBY
Collegian Reporter

Coming off third-place finishes at the Big Eight Conference championships, K-State's cross country teams will be trying to qualify for the National Collegiate Athletic Association's national meet when they compete in the NCAA District V Championships Saturday in Ames, Iowa.

To gain a berth in the nationals, the women need to win the meet, while the men need to capture either first or second place.

Steve Miller, head track coach, said he believes his teams have a shot at winning the meet.

"It's an all-or-nothing shot for us," Miller said. "The ever-optimistic Steve Miller feels we can win the regional. We're just a fraction away from where we need to be."

In last year's regional, the women's team finished second behind Iowa State and went to the NCAA meet. This year the Cyclones, along with the University of Missouri, will be K-State's top competition. The women finished behind both of those teams two weeks ago at the Big Eight championships.

The men's squad will battle with Nebraska, Southern Illinois, and Oral Roberts for one of the two national qualifying spots. Miller expects the other qualifying spot to be won by the strong favorite to win the meet, Iowa State — winners of the Big Eight championships Oct. 29.

"The two teams with the best depth are ourselves and Nebraska, but the lack of that great individual who can be first or second in the bigger meet is a problem," Miller said. At the Big Eight meet, Nebraska finished second, ahead of K-State.

Even if the teams fail to gain a qualifying place, individual runners still have a chance. In the women's and men's divisions, the top three individuals not on a team that qualifies also can go to nationals.

Men's basketball team signs recruits

By TIM FILBY
Collegian Reporter

Jack Hartman, men's head basketball coach, announced Wednesday the signing of three Kansas players to basketball letters of intent. The signees include two high school players: Ron Meyer, a 6-foot-9 center from Campus High School; Mark Dobbins, a 6-foot-5 guard from Humboldt; and Kevin Muff, a 6-foot-6 forward out of Cloud County Community College.

Meyer, the only junior selected to the Wichita Eagle-Beacon's all-state team last season, averaged 26.7 points per game and 12 rebounds to lead Campus to a 17-4 record and an Ark Valley League championship. He was second-team all-Ark Valley as a sophomore and last year was a first team pick.

Dobbins, who was a two-sport star at Humboldt, chose K-State over a football scholarship offer by the University of Nebraska. Last season Dobbins averaged 25.3 points per game with 60 percent shooting from the field. He also dealt out 46 assists, blocked 70 shots and pulled down 14 rebounds a game to lead his team to a 21-1 record. Dobbins was an all-state pick in both football and basketball and also won a state discus championship.

Hartman said the two prepsters should fit in well with his program.

"Mark is a big guard with outstanding ability. He can help us in a number of ways," Hartman said. "Ron will give us some badly needed height plus some inside scoring ability. Mark and Ron are two of the finest basketball players in the state this year."

Juco transfer Muff averaged 14.1 points per game and averaged 10.1 rebounds per contest to help Cloud County to a 25-5 record last season. Muff comes from Salina, where he was an all-league pick out of Salina Central. He averaged 17.6 points per game and 11.1 rebounds while at Central.

Hartman said he also likes Muff's ability.

"We think Kevin can develop into a very good player," Hartman said. "We watched him develop in high school. We like him, and we think he'll be a fine player for us. He is a rugged type player who has excellent shooting skills, and he can also help us in rebounding."

Hartman said signing players early saves time, money and effort for him and his staff and also benefits the player.

"By signing early a youngster can get that off his back. He doesn't have to worry about a coach calling him up or the other problems," Hartman said. "Being recruited is an ego trip. Some kids want to string it out, others don't."

"I'm delighted to have all three of these young men in our program. They are not only outstanding basketball players but are high-type individuals as well. They're from Kansas, and we would like to have as many players from here as we can."

Pigskin picks

Coming off a victory last week, the K-State football team and fans are flying high with emotion, but let us all offer a moment of silence, followed by laughter for our friends down the Kaw River.

In the quote of the week, KU Coach Mike Gottfried remarked on the future of his team.

"I think we have to classify the Jayhawks as an endangered species; just playing them will be difficult," Gottfried, said about their game with Nebraska this Saturday.

Poor folks.

Surprise, surprise. Kevin Dale captures first place along with Brian "Go Northwestern" La Rue and Paul "Tex" Hanson. We know for a fact that the reason La Rue and Hanson did so well was the assistance from underworld figures during their recent trip to Chicago which paid off one way or another. How's the arm, La Rue? Couldn't afford to pay off the bet?

Dale is another story, though. Again, when he was questioned about his latest string of success, his reply was, "Hey I told you, I say my prayers, stroke my rabbit's foot and pay off a few players.

"Oh, I might add, my mommy said she was going to kick me out of the house if I didn't straighten up my act."

Sitting in second spot with a 7-5 record is Joel "I Oughta Be a Linebacker" Torczon. However, surprisingly, Sean "See My New Picture in the Paper?" Reilly tied Torczon.

Dan "Have You Seen My Book on Danny White?" Owsley and Andy "Night Frisbee" Nelson were tied for third place with an even 6-6 mark.

Bringing up last place is Judi "Dan, I Have Your Book" Wright with an astounding 5-7 record. Asked why she choose to use just two numbers in last week's picks (17 and 36), she said she had no particular reason. "I had no particular reason," Wright said dumbfoundly.

With only a week left for picks to subject readers to such torment, the overall standings are virtually unchanged.

Torczon leads this band of mental midgets with a 82-35 record, followed somewhat closely by "Still Looking to Catch Him" Owsley at 78-39. Torczon, a.k.a. "The Polish Predictor," offered a public challenge to Owsley. "I'll bet I could still beat you in this week's picks with my left arm behind my back."

Not following so closely behind in third place are Hanson and Nelson with marks of 72-45. Reilly currently has a 69-48 record, while Wright, La Rue and Dale bring up the rear with a 68-48 record.

The "Crummy Game of the Week" award goes to the Nebraska vs. Kansas mismatch. Remember your moments of silence, followed by laughter for our archrivals this Saturday.

By the way, Northwestern faces the Ohio State Buckeyes, good luck, La Rue.

Playoffs move to KSU Stadium

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA—Four changes have been made in the football playoff schedule for this weekend including the moving of the site of the Class 6A clash between the defending champion Wichita East Blue Aces, 8-1, and the undefeated Manhattan Indians — the top-rated team in the state.

The game, originally scheduled for 7:30 p.m., Friday night at the Manhattan High School stadium, has been moved to the Kansas State University football stadium, the Kansas State High School Activities Association announced. Kickoff time is the same as originally scheduled.

Manhattan High School officials were worried the prep stadium would not accommodate the crowd expected for the playoff rematch of one year ago which saw the Blue Aces narrowly defeat the Indians as they advanced to eventually win the state crown. The Indians — 9-0 and ranked No. 1 in The Associated Press consensus rankings — are slight favorites entering this year's contest.

The activities association also announced three changes in games scheduled for Saturday. The Class 3A regional championship game matching St. Marys, with an 8-2 record for the season, against Alma-Wabunsee, 6-4, had been tentatively listed as being played at Alma, but instead it will be played at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the Junction City High School stadium

Also in 3A, the game at Hugoton, pitting Osborne against Hugoton, both with 10-0 records, will start at 5 p.m. instead of 7:30 p.m.

And, in Class 2A, the battle between Clifton-Clyde, 8-1, and Holton-Jackson Heights, 9-1, will be played at 7:30 p.m. in the Holton High School stadium. No field had been selected for that game when the tentative slate was released Wednesday.

Coalition against rape educates community

By LUCINDA ELLISON
Manhattan Editor

Community support, awareness and education were once again called for by the Manhattan Coalition Against Rape during a public forum Thursday night.

"Community Against Rape" was the theme of the forum, which was in the City Auditorium. Buttons and educational leaflets supporting the theme were distributed.

Judy Davis, founder and former director of the Regional Crisis Center, kicked off the forum with general information about rape and myths surrounding the issue. Davis also offered suggestions on how a defensive life style can protect against rape.

Myths, such as rape victims encourage the crime and rape is a sexual crime, are still alive, Davis said. "There has been a gradual realization that rape victims are not responsible for the crime," she said.

"I'm asking you to examine your attitudes. I'm also asking you to consider living a defensive lifestyle."

"It can't hurt you to drive with your car doors locked," she said. Locking doors and windows at home, as well as improved outside lighting, are also effective defense mechanisms.

"Do some things to take care of yourself," Davis said. "Have a plan in mind. You'll be much less surprised. He's (the rapist) counting on surprise and panic."

Although defensive living can help, these things often fail. Lt. Steve French, criminal investigator of the Riley County Police Department, spoke about Kansas rape statutes and what victims can do to aid the police during an investigation.

A new marital rape law allows victims to file charges against their spouses, French said. The law changes the word woman to victim.

Other changes to the rape statutes include deletion of a phrase that said a rapist must overcome the victim's resistance, he said.

The law on sexual battery has also been changed. Now, if a victim fights off an attacker who breaks into her home, charges of aggravated sexual battery can be filed. Any act in which penetration by any object occurs is also now accepted as rape, French said. The sexual act does not have to be complete, as was the case before.

After informing citizens about changed rape laws, French asked citizens to become more aware of people and their surroundings.

"We're asking you to become suspicious. Notice the way people dress — anything that draws you to that person," he said.

Being aware of distress signals in the area was also stressed.

"We're not asking you to endanger yourself, but at least look," French said. "If you look and then dial 911, we've got two people that saw the attacker."

Ruth Bayard, a local citizen, called for community organization in the battle against rape.

"I do not come to represent the black community because rape is not a black community issue. It's a total community issue," Bayard said. "We may not ever stop it (rape), but as people, regardless of color, we need to band together."

Judith Davis, current director of the Regional Crisis Center, wrapped up the forum by describing the coalition's purpose and discussing the whistle alert program adopted by the group.

Although fears surround the whistle program, Judith Davis stressed the value of the mechanism if it properly used.

"This whistle can do wonders if we are behind it," she said, holding a whistle before the crowd. "It isn't worth a dime unless we respond."

'Test tube' baby born to Junction City couple

By Collegian Staff and Wire Reports

Ryan Thomas Klataske made state history at 6:41 a.m. Monday in Geary Community Hospital.

Ryan was the first baby born in Kansas as a result of in vitro fertilization. The "test-tube" baby was born to Carol and Ron Klataske, a Junction City couple.

The in vitro procedure has provided infertile couples with an alternative to adoption and artificial insemination. In the procedure, the egg is fertilized outside the mother's body and then implanted in the uterus for the gestation period.

The Klataskes considered the procedure because Carol was unable to conceive due to blocked Fallopian tubes.

The Klataskes went to the Eastern Virginia Medical School in Norfolk, Va., for a preliminary screening for the procedure. The school was the first to successfully use the in vitro method in the United States. Ryan Thomas was the 41st baby conceived at the school through this procedure.

The couple's first attempt at fertilization in November 1982 was not successful.

Ryan Thomas was delivered by Dr. S.A. Labhsetwar, a Junction City obstetrician-gynecologist. The baby weighed 7 pounds, 1 ounce, and was 21 inches long.

Mood quiets in Washington, Kassebaum says at reception

By NANCY MALIR
Staff Writer

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, in Manhattan Saturday for Homecoming activities, said the mood in Washington has quieted somewhat after the bombing of the Marine shelter in Lebanon and the almost simultaneous invasion of Grenada.

Kassebaum was grand marshal of K-State's Homecoming Parade and then a guest at a Blue Key-Mortar Board reception in the Union's Cats Pause Lounge.

"It's settled down a little bit," Kassebaum said in reference to the attitudes about the Lebanon and Grenada crises. The feeling right now is there's a much more difficult situation in Lebanon and the Mideast, and that it continues to be a potential source of real trouble for us.

"Grenada was so much simpler in terms of understanding who the good guys and bad guys are," she said.

Entering Grenada and then almost immediately moving out was an easier task than the military action in Lebanon, Kassebaum said.

"A number of Marines have left Grenada and I'm hopeful a number more will leave soon."

The Grenada "situation" was never as dangerous as other military situations could be, she said, although U.S. intelligence seemingly underestimated the determination of Cuban personnel who were there.

"One of the things about Grenada that has caused some public concern is that the press, having not been allowed to go in, caused many people to wonder exactly what was going on."

"I think it (allowing the press into Grenada) would have eliminated a lot of the suspicion that the public had, wondering if they were getting the true story."

"As frustrating as it can be sometimes with the press — sometimes a whole different interpretation can be gathered from a picture — I think it was very wrong for us to close that out and shut that access off."

Analyzing the status of natural gas legislation in the Senate, Kassebaum said she was disappointed with the likelihood of any natural gas legislation being passed this session.

"I'm very disappointed because I've been very active in the legislation that would not decontrol old gas prices now. I have felt it's very important not to decontrol immediately — in fact, I think it would have to be over a long period of time before we would look towards the decontrol of old gas," the senator said.

Untangling some of the problems that have developed between producers and pipelines should be considered, Kassebaum said, before undertaking action to decontrol gas prices.

"I think eventually that (total decontrol) will be the approach we have to move toward. I feel strongly 'not now' and that's where I differ with the administration."

"I think there are some compromises that we can work toward that would be helpful. I'm very disappointed that the Senate really seems unable to deal with the legislation. I think part of the problem is there's some people on the (Senate's) Energy Committee that just don't want to deal with it," she said.

An issue like the natural gas issue, she said, has always been one of the most difficult legislatively to deal with because of the many competing interests.

"There are different interests that work differently in the marketplace, and yet, they are all very much a part of the whole issue."

"The producers and the pipelines have always argued with each other, and the consumer's kind of caught in all of this," she said.

Kassebaum said that at one time she was convinced there were enough senators who believe it's important to have a natural gas bill before winter sets in again and high heating costs occur.

"But I'm afraid that time has gone by and there's no way, unless we do it next week, that any legislation will be passed this session."

After last week's bombing of a Senate cloakroom, Kassebaum said some congressmen believe more security is needed in the Capitol.

"I hope that we are able to strike a balance between some good cautions and yet not isolate the Capitol, because one of the great aspiring beauties, I think, is that everyone feels very accessible to the Senate chamber and to watching the operation of government."

"It's sad to think that these things have happened and will happen. Even with all the precautions you can take, a terrorist determined can usually get through somehow," she said.

New sophisticated and accessible technology is one reason that terrorism has become more obvious to the public, she said. Loss of respect for society's institutional structures is another reason for terrorist acts, she added.

"I think as respect has diminished for these structures — and it isn't just in this country — terrorism has become more obvious."

Reagan stresses vital role of U.S. as protectors of Asian 'stability'

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — President Reagan wrapped up his Asian journey today, heading back for the United States amid fresh signs of tension on the Korean peninsula and with the White House arguing that human rights problems in the south must be measured against the military threat from the north.

Tens of thousands of flag-waving Koreans lined the streets of Seoul to the airport. Reagan rode in an armored limousine with South Korean President Chun Doo-hwan. At the airport, Reagan got a brass band send-off and he was escorted down a red carpet to the steps of Air Force One by Chun.

South Korean military forces lined the perimeter of the airport, standing sentry at 10-yard intervals. The departure ceremony was held in front of a huge banner erected at the airport terminal with pictures of Reagan and Chun and the American and South Korean flags.

Two Korean children suffering from congenital heart defects were the guests of Reagan and his wife Nancy on Air Force One on the trip back. The children, who will undergo open-heart surgery in New York, boarded the plane with the president and Mrs. Reagan.

Earlier, as Reagan prepared to leave the country, Chun said he had ordered artillery gunners to stand ready to fire if necessary to protect Reagan during his unprecedented trip Sunday into the demilitarized zone 30 miles north of Seoul. The DMZ, 2.4 miles wide and 151 miles long, divides North and South Korea.

The question of human rights and democracy was treated in one sentence of a lengthy joint statement issued near the end of the Korean stopover. "The two presidents affirmed the importance of defending and strengthening freedom and the institutions that serve freedom, openness and political stability."

An administration official, speaking privately, said that including that remark required long negotiations with the Koreans.

The joint statement recapped Reagan's visit, emphasizing the U.S. military commitment to South Korea and the importance of the Asia-Pacific region.

Assessing the trip to Japan and South Korea, Secretary of State George P. Shultz said the "main significance is the recognition of the importance of this area to the United States and the continuing effort to develop our ties and resolve the problems that we have in this part of the world."

Regarding Reagan's trip to the DMZ, Chun said he had hoped Reagan would change his mind about touring "such a dangerous place."

No problems occurred during Reagan's stop at the DMZ. Standing in a mortar bunker encircled by olive-drab sandbags, Reagan told American soldiers they were "our shield against the tyranny and the deprivation that engulfs so much of the world."

Robert McFarlane, Reagan's national security adviser, said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" that Reagan's visit to the DMZ was "not a particular risk." Interviewed in Seoul, he said Chun's warnings came against a background of emotion that the Korean leader felt over Reagan's commitment to defend South Korea from aggression.

Guitarist and lead singer Brian Setzer plays the Stray Cats' style of rockabilly Friday night to kick off Homecoming weekend festivities. The group performed before an estimated crowd of 3,200. For a concert story and interview, see page 7.

Islanders proclaim day of thanks

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — Thousands of Grenadians filled churches Sunday in a national day of thanksgiving for the U.S.-led invasion and to pray for the dozens of people who died in the country's crisis.

Cuba, too, mourned its dead. President Fidel Castro announced a three-day mourning period for the 37 Cubans he said died fighting the U.S.-led invaders.

In their sermons Sunday, ministers and priests at Catholic, Methodist and Anglican churches offered thanks for the U.S.-led invasion, which began Oct. 25.

The U.S. Army on Saturday said 21 Grenadians were killed in the invasion, 18 of them patients at a mental hospital that was inadvertently bombed by U.S. planes. The three others were People's Revolutionary Army soldiers who died in hospitals of battle wounds.

Faulty rail suspect in train crash

By The Associated Press

MARSHALL, Texas — An Amtrak train derailed, killing four people and injuring dozens of others, after hitting a "separation in the track" in an area where crews had been working two hours earlier, a federal investigator said Sunday.

Donald Engen, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board from Washington, said Sunday a rail shatter in the accident would be the focus of the federal investigation into Saturday's derailment.

He said lab tests would be needed before it could be determined if the separated track caused the derailment. A final report from the NTSB probably won't be ready for at least four months, Engen said.

Ambassadors, floats highlight Homecoming

President Duane Acker speaks with Randall Hildebrand, junior in chemical science, and Debra Rolph, junior in pre-law, who were announced as the new K-State Ambassadors during halftime of the football game Saturday. The ambassadors will serve as official student representatives at various University and alumni events.

By MELISSA BRUNE
Collegian Reporter

Selection of the K-State Ambassadors highlighted Homecoming activities this weekend.

Debra Rolph, junior in pre-law and Randall Hildebrand, junior in chemical science were named Ambassadors at halftime of Saturday's game against Iowa State University.

"It was so exciting, I felt honored," Rolph said. "I'm going to have to cut back in other areas to give this the time it needs."

Selection of the couple consisted of an interview process and student votes.

The ambassadors will serve as official student representatives at various University and alumni events.

Float winners in the moving category were Pi Beta Phi and Lambda Chi Alpha. First place in the non-moving category went to Sigma Sigma Sigma and Kappa Sigma. Winners of the overall Homecoming competition were Alpha Delta Pi and Delta Tau Delta.

Homecoming began last Wednesday with Union Day activities. Winners of Union Day competitions were spirit banner, Gamma Phi Beta and Pi Kappa Alpha; and body building, Chi Omega and Alpha Tau Omega.

The bonfire and pep rally Thursday were in the parking lot north of Umler Hall. Living groups participated in the "Pant the Chant" competition, which was won by Alpha Chi Omega and Phi Kappa Theta.

Football team members, yell leaders, cheerleaders and the pep band created enthusiasm and provided entertainment at the rally.

K-State Day on Friday was celebrated in the Union with student musical entertainment and more competitions. Winners of the "Yell Like Hell" finals were Alpha Xi Delta and Phi Delta Theta.

K-State alumni danced to the sounds of Matt Betton and his Big Band All-Stars at the annual Homecoming alumni dance Friday evening at the Holiday Inn.

Saturday's events began with the Homecoming parade, led by Grand Marshal Sen. Nancy Kassebaum.

Although the Wildcats had not lost a Homecoming game since 1980, they were defeated by the Iowa State Cyclones, 49-27.

FFA names K-Stater national president

By Collegian Staff and Wire Reports

Ron Wineinger, junior in agricultural economics, was named national president of the Future Farmers of America Saturday at the group's convention in Kansas City, Mo.

Wineinger was chosen president by a panel of FFA delegates representing various regions. The national organization is comprised of young people pursuing interests in agriculture.

Wineinger, 20, is a member of the K-State Collegiate FFA chapter and a life member of the Marion, Kan., FFA alumni affiliate.

As president, he represents nearly 500,000 FFA members in the United States, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. His duties will include speaking to business and industry groups as well as to local and state chapters of FFA.

Wineinger served as Kansas FFA Association president in 1981-82 after serving as district vice president and president. He also won first place in the 1980 National FFA Extentemporaneous Public Speaking Contest.

At K-State Wineinger has been active in Ag Council, Ag Ambassadors, Agricultural Education Club, FarmHouse fraternity, Chimes and Spurs and currently serves as a College of Agriculture senator.

Bill Caraway, 19, of Clovis, N.M., was named national secretary. Caraway is majoring in agricultural economics at Texas Tech.

Vice presidents elected were: Carol Irvine, 19, of Gaithersburg, Md., Eastern Region; Rhonda Scheulen, 20, of Loose Creek, Mo., Central Region; Chuck Dugger, 20, of Marianna, Fla., Southern Region; and Melody Lawson, 20, of Peoria, Ariz., Western Region.

St. Isidore's organizes new volunteer council

By NANCY MALIR
Staff Writer

What is to become one of only three campus-oriented Knights of Columbus councils in Kansas is being formed at Manhattan's St. Isidore's University Parish.

Richard Bachamp, Knights of Columbus District Deputy, said the reason for the formation of the men's fraternal service organization "is to try to make the people of St. Isidore's aware that there are a group of men in the church dedicated to doing volunteer service. This (formation of the group) will give them a little more visibility."

University-related councils are also established at Benedictine College in Atchison and St. Mary of the Plains College in Dodge City.

Both of Manhattan's other Catholic parishes, Seven Dolors and St. Thomas More, have K. of C. councils. Although the newly formed St. Isidore's council will be comprised of K-State students, faculty and staff, the group is an off-campus organization.

Bachamp, St. Isidore's chaplain

Father Norbert Dlabal and Steve Burghart, junior in electrical engineering, are responsible for organizing the new council.

Burghart said organizational meetings for the council began in mid-October.

"I thought there was a need for a council at St. Isidore's because a lot of students were knights from their own parishes and didn't have a place to go once they got to K-State," Burghart said.

"This council should keep them more involved and in touch (with K. of C.), so that when members move to a parish setting they will become involved," he said.

Bachamp said St. Isidore's council will assist the parish priest, raise funds and perform community volunteer work, especially for the mentally retarded, which is a favorite charity of the Knights of Columbus, he said.

"While the Knights of Columbus is a men's organization, it is also family-oriented," Bachamp said.

All councils are separate organizations that fund themselves, yet work together on statewide activities.

Retired ag professor dies

By The Collegian Staff

Willard Hungate (Abe) Martin, 89, who was in charge of dairy manufacturing, teaching and research for 38 years at K-State, died Saturday morning at Memorial Hospital. He had been hospitalized one day after suffering a stroke.

He was born June 28, 1894 at Salem, Ind. He attended Indiana State Normal and received his bachelor's degree from Purdue University in 1918. After serving in World War I, he was employed in the creamery license division at Purdue and as plant superintendent of the Furnas Ice Cream Co. at Danville, Ill. He was on the Pennsylvania State College faculty from 1920-25 and received his master's degree in 1922 from that college.

Martin joined the K-State faculty in 1925 as an associate professor and was promoted to professor in 1927. He retired in 1964.

Martin was secretary of the Kansas Association of Ice Cream

Manufacturers from 1921-43, was executive secretary of the Kansas Butter Institute from 1940-60 and was president of the Kansas State Dairy Association in 1950. He had been honored by the Interbreed Dairy Cattle Council as a dairy leader.

Martin was a member of Gamma Sigma Delta, Phi Kappa Phi, Sigma Xi, Tau Kappa Alpha, the American Dairy Association and the American Dairy Science Association.

He took a one-year leave from K-State in 1943 to head the dairy products section of the Office of Price Administration in Washington, D.C. He was author or co-author of more than 100 scientific publications.

Funeral arrangements are pending with Cowan-Edwards-Yorgensen Funeral Home. Survivors include his wife Gladys and two daughters; Marilyn Beazley of Atlanta, Ga., and Marguerite Martin of Sonoma, Calif.

Records show CIA chief's investments

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — William J. Casey has acquired stock in companies that do business with the CIA since he took over as head of the agency, according to CIA documents recently made public.

The documents also disclose that Casey had stock in firms with classified CIA contracts when he took office in January, 1981, and that since then, has retained stock in firms with both classified and unclassified CIA contracts.

Most of the documents, obtained in a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit, relate to CIA efforts to ensure that Casey's multimillion-dollar stock holdings do not pose any conflict of interest with his official duties.

The documents show that CIA attorneys and government ethics officials have found no conflicts.

Deleted from the documents are the names of companies with CIA contracts and the size of Casey's holdings.

The Senate and House intelligence committees have inquired into Casey's finances, partly because he did not follow the procedures chosen by his two predecessors at CIA, Adm. Stansfield Turner and Vice President George Bush, and by other senior Reagan administration officials with equal access to secret government economic intelligence, including President Reagan, Bush, the attorney general, and the secretaries of State, Treasury, and Defense.

Those officials put their holdings into a blind trust except Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who sold off stock in companies doing major Pentagon business.

Casey retained control over his holdings and did not sell off stock in firms dealing with the CIA. He has maintained, however, that his longtime investment adviser Richard Cheswick made the day-to-day decisions to buy or sell, except in two unusual cases where Casey ordered sales.

In May, 1982, the CIA established a screening procedure to be certain Casey did not make decisions substantially affecting his investments.

But under additional pressure from Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., Casey put his holdings into a blind trust within the past month.

The documents were turned over in the last two weeks by the CIA to attorneys for the Center for National Security Studies, which sued for them under the Freedom of Information Act. The center, a liberal think-tank here, asked for any documents showing how much time CIA officials were devoting to screening Casey from potential conflicts.

The center released the documents Sunday. David Vladeck, an attorney for the center, said he believed they "show an enormous investment of resources at CIA in advising Casey (about potential conflicts of interest), diverting those officials away from their primary activity." He said center officials were deciding whether to ask U.S. District Judge Louis F. Oberdorfer to order some of the deleted material released.

Serving domestic needs

As a friendly gesture to the people of South Korea, President Reagan arranged to bring two Korean children with potentially fatal heart conditions to the United States for free medical treatment.

It was a nice, symbolic gesture on Reagan's part, but to us the symbolism only focuses attention on Reagan's neglect of similar needs in the United States. Thus, we are given a false picture of a humanitarian Reagan and the government he represents.

There is more to being humanitarian than sending two Korean children to the United States for medical care. We find it unlikely that Reagan could give the poor in America a more direct slap in the face. This is especially true when one views the cuts to social programs in the United States. The poor in America have many great needs. Many die each day because of malnutrition and lack of proper medical attention.

The gesture was not wrong; saving a pair of lives is admirable. What was wrong was taking a propaganda gesture so far that we extend to another nation vital services which are not even available to the people of the United States. After all, the American people are the ones paying for foreign aid.

Reagan is correct in that we cannot ignore the needs of other nations, even down to the needs of two small children in Korea. We cannot practice isolationism and live contently and unaffected within our own borders. But neither can Reagan ignore the needs of the American people and give special privileges to foreign nations, even if only as a display of good faith between the United States and another nation.

An old adage relates that one must first solve internal problems before effectively dealing with external difficulties. This saying has a lot of application in regard to American policy. While we cannot solve all domestic problems before attempting to help foreign nations, we must at least give ourselves a fair shake in comparison to our dealings with other nations.

The young Kennedys

WASHINGTON — Almost 30 years have passed since a handsome young senator from Massachusetts published a slim volume of essays about political leaders in tough situations. Well-received critically and soon read in many high school civics classes, "Profiles in Courage" would later help propel a relatively inexperienced John F. Kennedy into the White House.

This month, amid the rush of memorabilia marking the 20th anniversary of JFK's assassination, comes a new "profiles in courage" — this time about the "third wave" of America's most prominent family. Titled "Growing Up Kennedy," the book tells the story of the 29 Kennedy cousins who, the authors say, have been bred with a special "moral courage" that serves them well in life and might prove handy later in a political environment.

It's enough to make one say "here we go again." Whatever part the original "Profiles" played in JFK's career, there's no mistaking that the new book is a thinly veiled attempt to introduce the next generation in the political marketplace. Fortunately, in contemporary politics, a book does not a leader make.

"Growing Up Kennedy" is a full-length People magazine piece, at once playing on the public's bizarre fascination with these kids while trying to portray them as "normal." The result is confusion. While authors Harrison Rainie and John Quinn have received the advice and consent of the entire family to compile this hagiography, they came away waffling on whether the third generation deserves idolatry or indifference.

For example, while justifiably chiding RFK's heady son Joe for signing his high school love letters "God," they extoll the legacy of his brothers and sisters in exalted terms: "For the men, long hard bodies, unbent from the physical punishment they inflict on themselves." Had enough? Try this: "For the women, high-cheeked, natural beauty in slender frames. For both, piercing eyes of aqua, emerald and brown in square, open, expressive faces."

There's plenty of the stuff that keeps gossip columnists in business. Readers learn how Teddy's kids differ from Bobby's kids; how the older children are more committed than their younger counterparts, who often never knew their fathers. For stargazers, the authors include an entire chapter on each of the 14 elder siblings. (These have insipid titles, such as "Maria — Beauty at the Crossroads" and "Steve — He Packs a Wallop.") Much is made of the generation's varied regard for Catholicism — considerably more, in fact, than their attitudes toward sex, drugs, rock'n'roll and other things with which most people are obsessed.

Unlike some of the other Kennedy tributes in circulation, "Growing Up Kennedy" can at moments impress even the most die-hard Kennedy-hater. We learn in gut-wrenching detail how each of RFK's children learned of his murder, and how each struggled to recover over the next decade. The book makes clear that tragedy has often replaced football as the necessary pastime at the Hyannisport compound.

In the author's estimation, the tragedies have helped to make every young Kennedy a paragon of some kind. Teddy Jr., who lost his leg to cancer, is mature beyond his years; Caroline is a role model for her friends and a firm believer in privacy; Kathleen has paved the way for the Kennedy women who aren't interested in standing in their husbands' shadows. The thinking seems to be that such triumphs over adversity are the stuff of great leadership.

But therein lies the inherent contradiction of the entire project. The "third wave" has encountered such incredible challenges in growing up that political matters have yet to replace personal problems on their agenda. The best proof may be Bobby Jr., the namesake of the most determined of all Kennedys, who at 29 still suffers from the weight of many problems, as his recent admission to a heroin habit indicates.

Moreover, for all the talk of public service, the authors uncover no evidence to indicate that the young generation understands one modern fact: political success no longer comes with the family name.

If that's the rule, it will take more than pretty faces and anecdotes about wild times at the Cape to turn the public around.

Vacation trip to the war zone

MARIAN & MIKE PETERS

Cartoonist and Wife

Ten days in the war zone. It started out as a dream vacation in the Caribbean. We would sail south out of St. Lucia, an independent country, and spend our days swimming and snorkeling in St. Vincent and the Grenadines. If you remember your high-school geography, the Leewards and the Windwards arch out into the Atlantic and curve back toward South America.

We spend the first night in a nameless cove with volcanic cliffs that plunge a 1,000 feet into the clear, warm water. Little boys row out to take the bow line and tie it to a palm. We dive in. The warm salt water washes over us. It is paradise. We pour a gin and tonic and remark on the fresh limes. We spend the rest of the evening huddled around a radio listening to reports of hundreds of Marines killed in a suicide bombing in Beirut.

We are off Down Island. When we ask our West Indian crew where to find the best snorkeling, the answer is, "Down-Island, man." Where are the best fresh lobster dinners? "Down-Island, man." Julius is our captain, having sailed the oceans all his life. Herbert is the cook and mate, having cooked on crew ships and freighters for 10 years. We pull in to Port Elizabeth, Bequi Island, the second island in the country of St. Vincent and spend the evening huddled around the radio. America has just invaded Grenada.

On Bequi the bands play all night and the bank is closed. It is Oct. 27, St. Vincent Independence Day. In Beirut the body count rises and 50 miles away in Grenada the American forces have taken the air strips.

Julius wonders if his mother is all right. He is Grenadian. Herbert gets word that his son has volunteered with the St. Lucian force, all 10 of them; the son is 19. On St. Lucia the phones are out; someone is jamming the microwaves.

We are all 40. This trip was a mutual birthday present. Being 40 means we were babies in World War II, still too young for Korea, a little too old for Vietnam. War has always been far away on distant shores, like Lebanon and tropical islands like Grenada.

Now we stumble into a war zone. War planes drone in the night. There are rumors and sightings of American warships. The airwaves crackle. We can hear Radio Grenada — the Cubans are resisting; the Cubans are falling back. Interviews with native Grenadians are overwhelmingly supportive of the invasion. Journalists, lawyers and doctors are let out of prison. One journalist, Alistair Hughes, tells of night raids and torture.

Going Down-Island is out of the question. Coast Guard cutters and patrol boats chase all pleasure craft into safe harbors. We can sit still or go north again.

As we move from island to island, we encounter happy smiling people welcoming us. From boat boys who watch the dinghy for 50 cents to policemen, to expatriates of several nationalities, the people express their gratitude to us as Americans. Something has to be done about the Russians, they say. It's about time, they say. It's a relief.

But we also note the crushing poverty and unemployment of up to 90 percent. It's not hard to see a land ripe for revolution. Graffiti on an age-old wall in St. Vincent says, "We want jos, not bluff."

We spend the evenings talking politics with the crew. They realize how lucky they have been to travel the world and eat regularly. And we realize how lucky we are to have a plane ticket home. But we can't help wondering how long America can police the world, and we will carry the war zone home with us to Dayton, Ohio.

Open doors

In several of the remaining columns of this semester my attention is going to be focused on learning. Not so much the process of learning as its beginnings — at least in terms of my own personal experience.

I've been a teacher for almost 30 years and am now beginning to enter what could be called the twilight — certainly at least the late afternoon — of my so-called professional career. Throughout all these years, I've given much thought to what teachers teach, if anything. Are students really "taught" by teachers? Or do they teach themselves? Do students remember what teachers supposedly "teach" them? Or do they merely remember the teacher as a person (if they remember anything at all)?

Personally, I think it is the teacher who is remembered — not what has been "taught" in some course.

I believe what teachers really do is open doors, so to speak. Sometimes the teacher doesn't even tell the student a door is being opened. Then it's up to the student to recognize there is a door and to decide whether to walk through that door.

The first "open door" I can remember was the one through which I walked to learn how to read. My mother showed me that particular door.

I was sitting in a pool of slanting sunlight on the rug in the living room of the mission building in which I lived in Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe), a few months before I was four years old. This was in 1925. A pile of wooden blocks was in front of me. It was hot, the middle of summer.

The grass of the veldt was dry and brown and the wind scorched the leaves of the eucalyptus trees outside the windows. From beyond the croquet court next to the house came the sweetish odor of over-ripe oranges and bananas growing in the fruit orchard which had been planted many years before.

It had not rained in several months. Anyone who has been in Southern California during the middle of summer will recognize the kind of day and climate I am describing. There are many similarities between Southern California and Zimbabwe. Only irrigation keeps things growing — in both places.

On the pile of wooden blocks in front of me were strange lines and shapes which I could not understand. Quite suddenly, coming from the secret fastness of hers and my father's bedroom, my mother stood in front of me.

"What are you doing, Joel?" she asked.

"What are these?" I asked, pointing to the strange lines and shapes on the blocks.

"Those are letters," she said.

"What are letters for?" I asked.

"Letters are to make words out of."

"You mean if I know letters I can read?"

"Yes, if you know the words letters make and what they mean."

"Teach me to read," I said.

And my mother did that — at least to the degree of showing me the open door leading to reading. During the next few months she led me through the alphabet on those wooden blocks and she taught me the shape and form of words and what some of them meant.

For example, after I had learned the alphabet, one day she put four blocks in front of me, as follows: J-O-E-L. "That's your name," she said to me.

"How do you spell dada's name?" She placed down blocks spelling J-O-H-N.

"How about your name?" She put down blocks spelling E-M-M-A.

After that I had her spell the names of my brothers (Arthur and David) and of two older boys who were my constant playmates (Stefani and Mabada). And then I had her spell for me the names of everybody who lived at that mission.

Soon I was saying all the words I spelled aloud to myself. I can remember sitting in church one Sunday late the following winter tracing my finger along the lines of the songs in the church hymnal, saying the words to myself. I didn't know enough about the form of a stanza in poetry yet to realize that I was not supposed to go straight down the lines as they appeared in the hymnal, but that I was supposed to skip from one bar to the next in order to get the complete sequence of a phrase and sentence.

As a result, I was mouthing only fragments. It was quite a mishmash! My mother finally realized what I was doing, and soon corrected me by taking me back to the volumes of fairy tales and children's stories we had on the shelves in our home, getting me to read the full sentences in them. At first she tried having me read the Bible — but the Bible was much too difficult, even for one as eager to read as I. After I grasped the concept of a complete sentence, the hymns became much easier for me to follow.

None of this was being done in a classroom. Nor did I have a teacher, in the ordinary sense of the word. What my mother did was to show me the doors — and I walked through them. All of this was interspersed with many hours of thoughtless playing and curiosity about a lot of other things.

Later I was to learn about counting and what was meant by personal identity. All that will be the focus subsequent columns.

Poster destruction an act of cowardice

Editor,

I would like to report some vandalism on campus. As a member of the organization, Citizens in Solidarity with Central America, I posted notices Thursday of our rally in protest of U.S. militarization in Central America and the Caribbean.

Saturday afternoon, I was distressed to find that people have been tearing down many of our posters. I have not witnessed any of these acts, but on four separate poster islands, the spaces formerly occupied by our notices are now covered by Air Force R.O.T.C. recruiting information, even though other space was available.

People who object to our rally may consider us cowards because we advocate peaceful solutions to problems in these regions. I think, however, that uses of force such as invading little islands and tearing down posters when nobody is watching are not signs of strength and confidence but are themselves signs of weakness and fear.

Fight song writer returns for game

By BRENDA ROTTINGHAUS
Staff Writer

When Harry Erickson wrote a fight song for K-State, he was a senior music major.

Erickson, now a retired music teacher living in Watertown, Wis., returned to his alma mater to hear the K-State marching band play "Wildcat Victory" at Saturday's game.

Erickson described his writing of the song as "just a part of my studies."

"Professor (William) Lindquist was head of the music department at that time," Erickson said. "He said to me, 'You know, Harry, everybody has a fight song but us — why don't you write one?'"

"I said, 'Who me?'" Erickson said, but decided to give it a try.

Erickson first got records of all the fight songs already in use, so he wouldn't copy.

"Then, one night, it just came to me," Erickson said. "So I put it down and they're still using it."

While attending K-State, Erickson played trombone and baritone in the University band. He was the student band director and Glee Club piano accompanist until his graduation in 1927.

Erickson went on to be a music teacher and received his master's from Teachers College of Columbia University.

He moved to Watertown in 1962 where he began teaching music in private schools. Erickson was the band director in the neighboring small town of Lebanon for 15 years. He also was the accompanist for a male chorus vocational school night class. Upon the director's retirement, Erickson became director.

Erickson participated in the Homecoming parade Saturday morning as an alumni band member and was featured during the halftime show.

Politician emphasizes importance of voting

By The Collegian Staff

The right to vote should be of the utmost importance to Americans, said pioneering black politician Hulan E. Jack Sr.

Jack, who was the first black New York City borough president, a New York Democratic party leader, and a New York state legislator for 19 years, spoke before approximately 200 people Friday morning in Justin Hall 109.

"Do you know that voting is so important that man has killed one another over it? Politics is the foundation to the success of us all. No matter where you live your vote is important," Jack said.

"The person who holds your political structure and your economic structure determines the course of government," he said.

Jack said the power of blacks in politics began with their right to vote.

"They used to kill Negroes in the South who wanted to vote. But the time came that in the North without the Negro vote the Democrats would be in trouble," he said.

Jack also addressed Britain's economic situation.

"I do not trust the British. Britain will conspire to protect herself because it is poverty stricken. To maintain status she will run America down the river," Jack said.

Jack was also quick to point out that Americans are not to blame for slavery.

"Don't blame Americans for slavery. It was the British that brought the slaves to these shores," Jack said.

As president of the Manhattan borough in 1953, Jack was the highest elected executive black in the United States in the 1950s. Currently, he is chairman of the Committee for a New Africa Policy of the National Democratic Committee.

Jack's speech was sponsored by the Department of Political Science, the Office of Minority Affairs, Black Student Union, Pi Sigma Alpha, the political science honorary, and the Coalition for Human Rights.

Marcos vows to jail 'economic saboteurs'

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Ferdinand E. Marcos said Sunday he has a dossier on businessmen involved in tax evasion, black-marketing of dollars and smuggling, and vowed to take them to court for economic sabotage.

"I wish to warn all the economic saboteurs because I have reached the end of my patience," Marcos said in a statement released by the presidential palace.

The warning came three days after Marcos met about 500 Filipino and foreign businessmen who called for free elections and major government reforms to solve the political and economic crisis sparked by the Aug. 21 killing of former Sen. Benigno Aquino.

Marcos rejected the demands, accused businessmen of organizing demonstrations against him, illegal business practices and failing to understand the gravity of the crisis.

Stunt to help pilot 'earn stripes'

LOS ANGELES — Business jet pilot Brooke Knapp says her promotional stunt — flying over the North and South poles — is a way for her to "earn my stripes."

"I do this in part to promote this company," said Knapp, 38, who will try to become the first woman to fly around the world by crossing both poles.

"It's simply an effort to earn my stripes in the aviation industry because everyone I do business with has paid their dues in some way or another."

Knapp and her crew — co-pilots Paul Broyles, Curt Olds and Bob Smyth and crew chief C.B. Allen — plan to leave Los Angeles International Airport at 8 p.m. today and fly 24,944 miles in 61 hours with fuel stops in Hawaii, American Samoa, New Zealand, Antarctica, Chile, Brazil, the Canary Islands, Norway and Alaska.

Knapp is founder and president of Jet Airways, Inc. of Los Angeles. Founded in 1979 with one jet, it is billed as a $3.5 million charter service with a fleet of seven planes.

Owners call pig ideal house pet

SANTA ROSA, Calif. — Baby's an ideal pet — clever enough to open a sliding glass door to let herself in, companionable and clean.

She plays with the kids and lets owners Neal and Linda Stone treat her like a big, warm beanbag chair.

She also disarms criticism from city officials perturbed about a 400-pound pig as a house pet.

"Having a pig in the house is just like having a big dog," Mrs. Stone says.

The Stones got Baby as a piglet. But as she grew, she attracted the attention of city officials who tried to run her out of town as a forbidden "exotic" pet.

Mrs. Stone circulated petitions and testified that "a pig is a pig" and hardly exotic, and the planning commission, impressed by Baby's cleanliness, voted 6-1 to let her stay.

Lawn decoration draws fire

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, Colo. — Lawn decorations such as pink flamingoes usually don't get more than a glance, but Jim and Joan Thompson get laughs from theirs — a very life-like fiberglass elk.

For 10 years, they've watched during hunting season as out-of-town hunters screech to a halt along Highway 40 near their ranch, leap from their cars and pickup trucks and waste ammunition on what looks like a live trophy.

Their amusement has its price, through. One year, they had nine holes to patch in the artificial beast, and another year its antlers were shot off.

Eight-foot boa interrupts work

CARMEL, Calif. — Psychotherapist Mark Willison was having a normal Friday afternoon, quietly working at his desk far from tropical jungles and animal parks, when he heard a noise.

"When I turned around, a snake was about three-fourths of the way through the kitchen window and climbing into a cabinet," he said.

It was an 8-foot, 30-pound boa constrictor.

Willison said he tried to coax the boa out of the cabinet, but it wouldn't budge. He tried to yank it out, but that didn't work either.

The Monterey County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals declined to tangle with the intruder.

The boa was finally retrieved by a neighbor whose son owns it.

Homecoming concert animates crowd

Stray Cats' bass player Slim Jim Phantom, entices the audience during Friday night's performance in Ahearn Field House.

By SUE SCHMITT
Arts and Entertainment Editor

It was a night to grease your hair back — or spray paint it blue or red or pink. It was a night to wear your leather jacket — or leather pants if you had them. It was a night to be someone else. No, it wasn't Halloween — the Stray Cats were in town.

The concert began Friday night in Ahearn Field House with Roman Holiday, a band that is gaining popularity across the nation. The band's full sound was attributed to its horn section that stole the show more than once. The lead singer's crooning and dancing had a few girls screaming as if they'd just seen Elvis Presley.

Fourteen Carats of Soul followed Roman Holiday. The five-member black a cappella group was a hit with the crowd. After a relatively short performance by the group, the main attraction took the stage — the Stray Cats.

The set-up was sparse. On the stage was a string bass, a tiny drum set, a guitar and three guys with fantastic hair.

The saxophone player from Roman Holiday accompanied the Stray Cats on a few songs. Fourteen Carats of Soul also joined the band for two songs.

The aisle was where it was at. People from the seats in back had crowded in the aisle to get a closer look at the band. They craned their necks to catch a glimpse of the band — their view always obscured by the back of someone's head. It was impossible to stand still as Lee Rocker played drums and Slim Jim Phantom pounded out the bass lines.

This wasn't a typical rock concert. The sound coming from the speakers wasn't deafening; there was no heavy metal. But the secret to this band's success is its ability to play rock'n'roll the way it ought to be played.

Audience requests encore from Catskeller performer

By MELISSA BRUNE
Collegian Reporter

Barbara Bailey Hutchison sang, laughed and joked with those who attended her concert Thursday night in the Catskeller. Hutchison's versatile singing and guitar playing entertained a crowd of about 100.

She began the two-hour show by explaining that she was from Detroit and she was going to sing that city's theme song because "things are looking up." The song was titled "I Am Changing My Name to Chrysler."

Hutchison involved the audience frequently by asking them to sing along on several songs.

During one song, the audience interjected a refrain of "Ha, ha, ha, ha...ho, ho, ho, ho...chuckle, chuckle, chuckle..." as Hutchison sang "So you better take warning and start treating me good. Start doing the things that I think you should."

Hutchison's humor, variety of music and instrumental talents were what made her concert a success.

"I close my eyes, only for a moment and my wallet's gone," were the words to another song which Hutchison titled "Bums in the Park."

"That was just a test," she said, "I like to see if you're word people."

Encouraging even more audience participation, Hutchison asked for requests.

"My sort of personal philosophy about the great world of entertainment is that you need to hear things you know," she said.

Someone in the audience wanted to hear some John Denver, and Hutchison modified one of his famous songs to, "Thank God I'm a City Boy."

Another member of the audience requested a song by Phoebe Snow. Hutchison complied and sang "Do You Like Our Love."

On several numbers, she let the audience know she could also be a serious performer.

Hutchison sang a song written by Tom Paxton about the Special Olympics. Some of the lyrics included, "He's got his own road and his own hill to climb...He may be slow but he's still in motion, and all he needs is a little devotion. He may be slow but he's right on time."

In another song she addressed the issue of the battered wife. Before beginning the song Hutchison told the audience it would be the saddest song they heard all night.

Hutchison played the guitar and keyboards, and then pulled out a dulcimer and performed the song "Love is a Rose."

Her mixture of talent, humor and audience interaction was enough for the audience to ask for an encore.

Stray Cats spur social, musical phenomenon

By ANGIE SCHARNHORST
Collegian Reviewer

In the process of becoming well known in the music business, the Stray Cats have been accused of being "only a copy band" and have withstood ridicule due to their mode of dress.

Despite the initial ridicule, the band has achieved success as instigators of the popular rockabilly revival and as fashion trendsetters. The group has spurred a social and musical phenomenon, and are somewhat amazed by the fact.

"It's amazing to see it," said vocalist Brian Setzer in an interview following the band's Friday night concert in Ahearn Field House. "We've looked like this for years...for so long people have laughed at us."

"I went to college with pink hair," 22-year-old drummer Lee Rocker. "People laughed. We (still) live this way. First thing in the morning we

One of the reasons the Stray Cats dress the way they do and perform rockabilly music is because of gut feelings, according to bassist Slim Jim Phantom.

"The only thing you can really do is what you feel," he said.

"Rock'n'roll is in our heads and in our hearts," Rocker said.

Much of the success the Stray Cats have attained in the past two years can be attributed to time spent in the "proving grounds" of England, where the band began performing in 1980.

"We just went there on a whim. We wanted a change (from the bars in New York.) We sold a Pontiac, sold some equipment, and took off," Rocker said.

During the time the Stray Cats spent in Britain, they achieved widespread popularity, and as a result, were instrumental in dismantling the punk vs. rocker system in the country, Setzer said.

Because both punks and rock'n'rollers in England liked the band, it helped ease some of the conflict between the two cultural sects, he said.

The Stray Cats' popularity in the United States occurred only after they had become popular in Great Britain, something the band members have a hard time understanding.

"That's the big mystery," Setzer said. "But it seems like it always happens that way."

Rocker said the Stray Cats' success in England was due to the fact that rockabilly remained popular in Britain, although it did not in the United States.

"Rockabilly is still recognized in England, it never dies," he said.

Rocker classifies the music of the Stray cats as a "continuation of the rockabilly thing," not a copy of someone else's music, as some critics have claimed.

According to Setzer, the band's members succeed as rockabilly artists because their music has their "own stamp."

"You gotta make sure it doesn't sound like anything else," he said.

'Cats lose, 49-27

Mark Hundley (42) is forced back by the Iowa State University defense going over the pile of players for a first down.

By HUEY COUNTS
Staff Writer

Respect. It's what a team begins playing for and hopes to earn near the end of disappointing season. It's what the K-State and Iowa State University football teams were playing for Saturday afternoon at KSU Stadium.

When the respect award was handed out, it went to the Cyclones who scored 37 unanswered points from midway through the third quarter to the end of the game for a 49-27 come-from-behind victory to spoil the Wildcats' Homecoming.

The situation didn't look good for the Cyclones early, though. K-State took its first possession of the second half and marched 40 yards before fullback Mark Hundley burst up the middle, cut to his right and went 47 yards for the touchdown which put the 'Cats on top 27-12.

Iowa State — behind the precision passing of quarterback David Archer and strong running of fullback Jason Jacobs — went to work on cutting the deficit immediately. Taking the ball from their own 20, the Cyclones marched 80 yards for the score with Archer scoring on a 1-yard keeper. The key play on the drive was when Archer was able to slip a pass to Jacobs on fourth down with 4 yards to go for a first down at the K-State seven. Archer's pass to Tracy Henderson was complete for the two-point conversion making the score 27-20.

Iowa State drove for another touchdown following a missed 47-yard field goal attempt by K-State's kicker Steve Willis.

Successive fourth-down penalties against linebacker Reggie Singletary kept the Iowa State drive alive. On fourth and nine Singletary was charged with running into the punter.

"I didn't think I roughed him," Singletary said. "I didn't mean to hit him. I was overanxious — it takes patience in this game."

Since the penalty was only 5 yards, this still didn't give Iowa State the first down. But, on the next play Singletary was hit with an off-sides penalty, giving Iowa State a first down. The Cyclones went on to score on an 11-yard pass from Archer to Henderson. The same combination teamed up for the two-point conversion which gave Iowa State the lead 28-27.

"We had to do it (go for the two-point conversion) to keep the momentum going. We were going for it," Jim Criner, Iowa State's head coach, said.

K-State promptly turned the bowl over on its next possession when Iowa State's strong safety Alvin Baker picked off a Stan Weber pass at the 'Cats' 36-yard line.

Iowa State scored in just three plays with Jacobs, who rushed for 153 yards on 15 carries in the game, taking it in from the one to make the score 35-27.

The Cyclones received the ball again when K-State was unable to pick up a first down and was forced to punt. Another Iowa State touchdown drive — capped by an Archer to Henderson 7-yard touchdown pass — made the score 42-27 and for all practical purposes the game was over.

"They (K-State) disrespected me as a receiver, so we just went out and went to it," said Henderson, who caught two touchdown strikes and had 165 yards in receptions.

"It's frustrating when you can't play good offense, but it's really embarrassing when you can't play good defense," Jim Dickey, K-State's head coach, said. "We had too many people out there getting 15-yard penalties."

Dickey was particularly upset with an unsportsmanlike conduct call against defensive lineman Curtis Hughes which kept an Iowa State drive alive.

"If he wants to box he better go somewhere else. This isn't a boxing school," Dickey said.

K-State jumped to an early lead in the game when — following an Iowa State fumble — flanker Eric Mack went around left on a reverse for an 18-yard touchdown run.

A 38-yard Willis field goal put K-State up 10-6 and after a missed Iowa State field goal, the 'Cats went on top 17-6 when Weber scored on a keeper capping a 63-yard drive.

The ensuing Iowa State drive was highlighted by Archer's five straight completions totaling 58 yards and tailback Tommy Davis getting the touchdown on a 1-yard run.

A short Iowa State kickoff enabled K-State to move into field goal range and with two seconds remaining in the half Willis put the ball through the crossbars for a 20-12 halftime lead.

"The first half our offensive line really did a good job," Weber said. "I think we just got started rolling when the half ended. We felt really comfortable starting the second half."

For Iowa State, who amassed 586 yards of total offense, it was a day of records. Archer, who was 29 of 40 for 286 yards on the day, set Big Eight Conference season records for completed passes, 220; passes attempted, 412; total offense, 2,507 yards; and total offensive plays, 472.

Henderson, a sophomore, hauled in 16 of Archer's aeriels to set a single-game conference record. This season he has 1,034 yards in receptions which is also a Big Eight record.

Hundley was the leading Wildcat rusher with 82 yards on just eight carries. Weber was eight for 17 in the passing department for 114 yards and picked up an additional 35 yards rushing.

Iowa State evened its conference record at 3-3 (4-6 overall) while the 'Cats' Big Eight record fell to 1-5 (3-7 overall).

A new view from above

By CATHY KARLIN
Features Editor

Football has never thrilled me.

Maybe it's because I've never had the luck to attend a school with a football team that WON games. In grade school, I recall no jubilant moments spent waiting on the sidelines for the last seconds of the game to end so our cheering section could run onto the field, heady with victory. Instead, we'd try to ignore the massacre on the field as best we could, and figure out who was going to "drag Main" with who after the game.

High school was even worse. Even the most determined fan could barely sustain interest in a team that lost one game 80-0.

And then I came to K-State...well, you win a few, you lose QUITE a few, I guess.

However, if one is forced to watch four 15-minute quarters which are usually stretched out into four (often interminable) hours, the K-State press box is the place to be.

As a freshman, I would gaze enviously at the people inside the box, looking so draft-free and warm up there on the west side of the stadium. I would vow to myself, with a determination as firm as the coat of ice on my shoestrings, that someday I, too, would sit inside the box and not have to spend the entire game stomping my feet for circulation.

Therefore, when the sports editor said he was looking for a non-interested football spectator to report on the game from a press-box perspective, I willingly volunteered.

Writers, photographers and officials start arriving at the press box about two hours before the game begins to eat and talk. Though K-State reportedly has the homeliest facilities in the Big Eight Conference, it does offer some of the best food in the country. Food is donated for each game by different individuals or organizations. Saturday's pork chops were provided by Doyle Talkington and the Kansas Pork Producers Council. The meal is served by volunteers at the ground level of the box.

About 45 minutes before kickoff time, photographers leave for the sidelines and everyone else disperses to their specified positions. There are an average of 200 people inside the press box at a game.

At the north end of the second level, there is a small room where the game announcer and game timers run the game by listening to "spotters" who tell them what is happening on the field below. Next door is another small room labeled "KSU Phones." Inside, the air is seemingly soaked with tension as K-State coaches and assistants view the game through the window and communicate with sideline coaches via headphones. Adjacent to the coaches' room is a booth for radio announcers.

The largest room on the second floor is known as the main press area. Inside, two long rows of journalists and technicians watch the game through large windows which border the room's east side.

As I entered the room, I was surprised at the calm, quiet atmosphere. No one was madly scribbling notes or even cheering for K-State. Luckily, I was warned about the press box policy of objectivity before K-State's first touchdown. If anyone shows any sign of favoritism toward a team, a reporter's objectivity could be destroyed. Offenders are given only one warning before being asked to leave.

After a short while, I learned why no one seemed concerned about writing anything down. At the south end of the room, a "stat crew" continuously compiled game statistics. At the end of each quarter, the crew would whip their papers out of their typewriters and give them to "stat girls" who ran off copies on the nearby ditto machine. Sheets listing play-by-play action, offensive and defensive drives, "NCAA quickie statistics," team standings and background information were passed to the journalists about once every quarter. Even after-game quotes from players and coaches were compiled and dittoed for everyone.

Large platters of big, square cookies and milk were brought in at halftime to sustain us through the next two quarters. Coffee and soft drinks were also served throughout the game. After awhile I decided that a writer could spend the whole time eating and talking — not even watch the game — and still end up with about the same story as everyone else. And then I became so full and comfortable that, to my embarrassment, I started dozing off in my chair.

Reagan says trip improved relationships

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan pronounced his visit to Japan and South Korea a success Monday, saying that "America's partnerships are stronger and prospects for a more secure peace and prosperity are better today than a week ago."

Nearly 16 hours after he was cheered by an estimated 2 million flag-waving people in Seoul while riding to the airport, Reagan arrived by helicopter on the White House South Lawn to a welcome by Vice President and Mrs. George Bush, a military band and about 200 government employees waving small American flags.

"It's great to be home," the president told them.

Accompanying Reagan and his wife, Nancy, on their homeward flight on Air Force One were two Korean children who will undergo heart surgery in New York.

"Nancy thought one expression of America's friendship would be to help our two little Korean friends, Kil Woo Lee and Ji Sook Ahn, come over to the States," the president said.

Mrs. Reagan said she wanted to help them and arranged their travel because "I'm a sucker for children." The youngsters, a 4-year-old boy and a 7-year-old girl, are from poor Korean families and will be treated free at St. Francis Hospital in Roslyn, N.Y.

Back from a 15,650-mile, 6½-day Asian tour, the president said, "I'm pleased to report some good news: America's partnerships are stronger and prospects for a more secure peace and prosperity are better today than a week ago."

He said that in Tokyo, "we established an agenda for progress" on giving American businessmen greater access to Japanese markets, expanding U.S. energy export, cooperating more closely on defense technology and helping the U.S. auto industry recover from the recession.

No major breakthroughs were reached on trade problems during the trip. Reagan said he was putting Bush in charge of a group to monitor follow-up action.

"If each side is willing to give a little, then all of us will gain a lot," Reagan declared. He called the trip "a great success."

The president quoted Mike Mansfield, U.S. ambassador to Japan, as saying that "the next century will be the century of the Pacific."

Nicaragua's neighboring countries consider 'option' of intervention

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Military intervention by other Central American nations to oust Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government is "definitely an option," a leader of a CIA-backed Nicaraguan rebel group declared Monday.

Adolfo Calero, head of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, or FDN, said that approach would involve his Honduran-based forces establishing a government on Nicaraguan territory and then seeking aid from "friendly countries."

"We would ask for help if it would lead to a quicker solution to the Nicaraguan problem," he said.

"Central America is a nation," Calero added. "Central America has a common background. It's interdependent economically, politically, socially. There will be no permanent solution to the Central American problems until we do integrate."

He also said "it would not be the first time that Central American armies have intervened against an intervention," citing a joint military action against William Walker, a U.S. adventurer who invaded Nicaragua in the 1850s.

At a news conference sponsored by Foreign Policy magazine, Calero charged that Nicaragua's leftist government had become "subservient" to Cuba and the Soviet Union, betraying the 1979 revolution that ousted rightist dictator Anastasio Somoza Debayle.

The New York Times reported

Friday that military leaders of El Salvador, Guatemala, Panama and Honduras met late last month to discuss the legality of a joint military action against Nicaragua. The four countries comprise an anti-communist defense alliance called the Central American Defense Council.

Robert McFarlane, President Reagan's national security adviser, indicated Sunday that the administration might support an armed intervention by Central American countries against Nicaragua.

On the possibility that the United States would assist with an invasion, McFarlane said, "We support people who are trying to defend themselves. That's right."

Court censors attorney for overcharging

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Supreme Court Monday ordered public censure for a Wichita attorney who allegedly overcharged a client by $3,000 in taking an appeal to the Kansas Court of Appeals.

The censure was ordered for William T. Davitt.

The complaint was filed with the Kansas Board for Discipline of Attorneys by Rita Winter of Andale in January 1981. She alleged Davitt told her it would cost $3,000 more than the $8,932 she already had paid him if he took an appeal to the Kansas Supreme Court of a case involving her brother.

She paid him the additional sum, the court said in its order, but when the appeal failed in the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court refused to review the case, he declined to refund the $3,000 or any part of it.

Davitt contended he had done much more work for Winter than he was paid for, and the totality of his work should be considered in determining whether he was overpaid.

However, the court noted the services he performed included work on political causes espoused by both Winter and Davitt, including support of the organization "Fathers Demanding Equal Justice," and judged them to be extraneous to the case at hand.

"The simple issue is whether a charge of $3,000 for the preparation and filing of a motion for rehearing...in the Kansas Court of Appeals and a petition for review of that decision prepared and filed in this court justifies a fee of $3,000," the court said.

The high court agreed with the disciplinary board that the fee was excessive, constituting a violation of the attorneys' Code of Professional Responsibility.

The court ordered public censure but did not order any repayment of the $3,000. A court spokesman, Ron Keefover, said Winter's recourse would be to file a civil suit to try to recover the alleged overcharge.

Business college to drop major

By MIKE HEDGES
Collegian Reporter

The College of Business Administration is in the process of eliminating the labor relations major from its curriculum.

Robert Lynn, dean of the college, cited low enrollment as the cause for dropping the major. Currently, there are nine students majoring in labor relations.

Lynn said the youngest students in labor relations are juniors and they will be able to graduate with a major in labor relations.

"Labor relations was just the easiest thing to squeeze out of the budget because not very many students are in the major," said Robert Paul, head of the Department of Management.

He also said labor relations instructors will be retained because there will still be some classes taught in that area.

"We don't completely plan on dropping all the courses in labor relations. In fact, we will probably keep two or three labor relations classes as prerequisites in the management and business fields. We still feel that it's important to have some background in labor relations," Paul said.

Paul also said he wasn't sure when labor relations would be dropped, but he was positive it would be.

"We will carry it through this semester at least and then assess afterward if we will carry it any longer. It depends a lot on what goes on during pre-enrollment. We have sent letters to all of the students in labor relations explaining all of this," he said.

Labor relations students are disappointed the curriculum is being dropped, but they aren't overly concerned because they will be able to finish their degrees.

Andy Skinner, junior in management and labor relations, said he wasn't particularly pleased about the decision.

"I think the reason they are dropping labor relations is because they are trying to find places to cut the budget. Because of the small enrollment in labor relations, it was probably the easiest one to pick on."

"But they have assured me that I will graduate with my degree so it won't affect my looking for a job," he said.

Farm program impasse may depress prices

By TOM HARMS
Staff Writer

If legislators and administration officials can't come up with a compromise on the 1984 wheat program before Congress recesses Friday, lawmakers predict participation in the program will fall far below that anticipated.

Low participation could lead to depressed wheat prices and higher costs for the government exceeding the $21 billion farm subsidy paid last year, lawmakers said.

The Department of Agriculture program, announced Aug. 9, 1983, would set target prices — the price farmers are guaranteed for their crops — at $4.45 per bushel in 1984 and $4.65 in 1985. It would also require participating farmers to idle 30 percent of their acreage.

Farmers would also be able to set aside an additional 10 to 20 percent of their acreage to the Payment-In-Kind Program with a 75 percent payment rate.

Efforts are still being made in both houses of Congress to "sweeten" the program to make it more appealing to farmers, but lawmakers said those attempts are virtually fruitless.

The House Agriculture Committee sent legislation to the full house last Tuesday trimming target prices to $4.38 per bushel in 1984 and $4.45 the next year. To prompt participation in the program, the legislation provided farmers who idle 30 percent of their acreage a payment of $3 a bushel for wheat normally grown on 10 percent of that land.

But, Gene Moos, an aide to Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., chairman of the House wheat, soybean and feed grain subcommittee, said this proposal will "probably never get to the House floor."

According to an internal House and Senate budget rule, any drastic change in a program's budget must first survive a two-week layover period. But, Moos said, since Congress will recess within the week, no action can be taken on the legislation until Congress reconvenes late in January — after the Jan. 16 sign up date for the 1984 program.

Moos estimated the 10 percent cash land diversion alone would cost the government $600 million.

Moos said Rep. Foley was still "fighting" to improve the administration's program.

"Mr. Foley met this afternoon with (Agriculture) Secretary John Block to discuss a compromise," Moos said. He said Foley offered to push legislation through the House, setting target wheat prices before the end of the week, if Block would announce the cash land diversion into the administration's program.

"The secretary said he would study the compromise further. We are hoping he will respond favorably. If we do not increase the incentives, we will not have any response," Moos said.

While the House was looking for a compromise through Block, the Senate was still trying to get compromise legislation through committee.

A proposal submitted by Sen. Bob Dole, which is similar to the House version except for the calling of a freeze on the target price in 1985, was being stalled by Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont.

Mark Scanlon, an aide to Dole, said Melcher still did not want the Dole compromise to go to the Senate floor. He said Melcher is not in favor of a cut in the target price.

Scanlon said although Dole's compromise was supported by national farming groups such as the National Grange and the National Association of Wheat Growers, the Dole camp was not optimistic that the compromise would ever make it through committee.

"Our chances are growing dimmer every day. The key to anything happening is Melcher allowing the bill onto the floor without a filibuster," Scanlon said.

And those chances are slim according to the Melcher camp.

"We feel that the target price is the most important income protection to the farmer," David Voight, staff assistant to Sen. Melcher, said. "We didn't feel the other compromises were enough to lower the target price."

While factions in Congress struggle to come up with some kind of compromise to improve participation in the 1984 program before recessing Friday, most lawmakers agree there must be an improvement to assure good participation.

"The concern is that there will not be very much participation. If production is again high and surplus is high, prices will fall," Scanlon said.

"It's not the administration's fault. They were forced to come out with a target price set by law. But the other parts of their program were not very attractive," he said.

U.S. offers to decrease missile deployment

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration offered Monday to cut its nuclear missile deployment in Europe and challenged the Soviet Union to accept the proposal in an arms control pact or make even further reductions.

The new proposal was divulged in Washington and broached to the Soviets in Geneva, Switzerland, even as the first wave of new U.S. cruise missiles arrived in Britain to anti-nuclear protests.

It accepts as a starting point that no more than 420 intermediate-range warheads would be based in Europe and Asia by the Soviets. The United States would be held to an equal limit, but actually would install less than 420 warheads, keeping some back to match the Asian missiles.

The precise U.S. deployment total was not divulged. Administration officials stressed President Reagan was trying to be flexible and that even lower ceilings would be acceptable provided they were equal.

Yuri Andropov, the Soviet leader, has threatened to suspend the arms talks once U.S. missiles "appeared" in western Europe. Despite the threat, another session was scheduled for today.

At that time, Paul Nitze, who had urgently requested changes in the U.S. position, will outline what senior officials in Washington called "an elaboration or a refinement" to his opposite number, Yuli Kvitsinsky.

What the Soviets might do next was not clear, but at least a symbolic walkout is considered a possibility.

Nitze has been pressing to extend the current bargaining round into early December, break for the holidays and then get back to the table in January. Kvitsinsky, on the other hand, has been scheduling sessions one or two at a time.

"It would be premature to conclude the Soviets are walking out if they took the recess earlier than we wanted to," said one U.S. official, who briefed reporters at the State Department on condition that he remain anonymous.

The new U.S. offer fleshes out a proposal Reagan made at the United Nations in late September and responds to Andropov's call last month for no more than 140 intermediate-range missiles on each side.

Since Soviet SS-20 missiles have three warheads each they could observe the 420-warhead limit with 140 missiles. Currently, 243 are deployed on the European side of the Ural mountains and 117 in Asia.

The United States would deploy a mixture of cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in western Europe, but stop short of the 420 total unless the Soviets scrapped all of their Asian missiles.

Despite the apparent narrowing of differences, however, at least one major disagreement remains. It is over the continuing Soviet insistence that French and British intermediate-range missiles, which total 162, not be excluded from the calculations.

If these were lumped together with U.S. missiles, the United States would be limited to 130 to 258 warheads, depending on how British Polaris missiles are counted.

Missiles arrive in London amid anti-nuclear outcries

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Europe's first cruise missiles arrived Monday at a U.S. air base west of London, provoking outcries from Britain's opposition lawmakers and anti-nuclear protesters who called the step "a major tragedy."

Just after dawn, a U.S. Air Force C-141 Starlifter transport landed at Greenham Common in the countryside 50 miles west of London. Armed soldiers ringed the plane as helicopters hovered and workers unloaded two crates containing the U.S. missiles.

Several hours later, Defense Secretary Michael Heseltine informed Parliament of the missiles' arrival, shouting to make himself heard above opposition lawmakers who screamed "shame! shame!"

The missiles are the first of 572 cruises and Pershing 2s that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization plans to deploy starting next month if the Geneva talks remain stalled. The next round is scheduled Tuesday.

The missiles are to be deployed in Britain, West Germany, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands. They are meant to balance the Soviet deployment of about 360 triple-warhead SS-20 missiles already in place.

SGA 'awareness days' present social services

By DAVE MANCHON
Collegian Reporter

Student Governing Association's Social Services Standing Committee has implemented two awareness days to increase student knowledge of the groups the newly formed committee oversees.

For the awareness days, the groups have information tables set up in the Union today from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. The first of the two awareness days was Monday.

"Formally the social services were under the direction of the social services director, which was a paid position," Lora Wetz, committee chairman and senior in electrical engineering, said. "The position lacked stability and consistency so it was eliminated."

Wetz said she believes the establishment of the committee will improve the effectiveness of the social services while providing the needed stability to the maintenance of the social services.

"We just started so our role as a committee is still evolving," she said. "We hope we can provide an effective means of bringing the six groups together."

Those six groups are:
— The Consumer Relations Board, which is designed to assist and protect students in consumer-business matters. According to a SGA pamphlet, CRB's goal is to mediate consumer-business complaints and to educate the student body about the perils in the marketplace.

— The Fone Crisis Center, a listening and crisis center, which offers alternatives and crisis intervention through paraprofessional counseling. The center also provides professional referral when requested.

— The Legal Services program, a free service to the students offering advice on legal matters from the student's attorney.

— University For Man, which offers a variety of classes and events to K-State and Manhattan. UFM relies on volunteer instruction to offer a wide range of classes at a minimal cost.

— The Women's Resource Center, which has a library of current literature dealing with women's issues. WRC can also direct women and men to campus and community services available to them.

— U-Learn which is K-State's educational information and campus assistance center, offering the University Learning Network, the Sexuality Education and Counseling Services, and career assessment and study skills.

"One of our prime functions, which we're working on now, is to do evaluations of the groups," Wetz said. Wetz said the evaluations will be completed by the end of the November.

Other committee functions are to act as liaison between SGA, the University administrators and the social services; to give periodic reports to Student Senate concerning the activities and programs of the social services and to plan any necessary training for newly selected social services' directors.

"The idea is to make students aware of what's going on," Wetz said. "It's also a way to get some cohesiveness between the groups so that they are doing something together."

"It's important that each social service group has open lines of communications," Bob Carey, Fone Crisis Center secretary, said.

"I hope students are aware that these six groups get money from student activity fees. That's what makes these groups unique," Wetz said.

"Awareness days are beneficial because they raise student consciousness, which is part of the overall education the University has to offer," Carey said.

City to discuss beer policy

By The Collegian Staff

Possible revisions to the city ordinance concerning consumption of cereal malt beverages near a school will be discussed tonight during the City Commission meeting. The meeting will be at 7 in City Hall.

Currently, the ordinance bans consumption of alcoholic beverages within 200 feet of a city or parochial school. A request for interpretation of the ordinance was made at the Nov. 1 meeting by Charlie Busch, owner of Charlie's Neighborhood bar. The bar is being built in the First Center at Claflin Road and Denson Avenue.

The tavern would be operating within 200 feet of the Institute of Religion, which is operated by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

No action was taken by the Commission during the last meeting.

Also during the meeting, City

Planner Larry Hulse will report on the progress of the Fairchild Parking Committee. The committee, consisting of residents and students, was formed in June to consider solutions for a parking problem on Fairchild Avenue. Last spring, residents in the area requested an ordinance restricting parking. Several fraternity and sorority houses would be affected by the ordinance.

In other business, the Commission will consider several measures concerning downtown redevelopment. Authorization of staff to seek proposals for relocation consultants for the downtown redevelopment area will be considered. Commissioners also will consider negotiation of a contract for review of appraisal services for the redevelopment project.

Appraisals are to be made on those businesses which will be relocated for the construction of the downtown mall.

Campus police find no clues to 'blood-stained' drawing

By WAYNE PRICE
Collegian Reporter

If foul play was involved, campus police remain confounded as to the purpose of the "blood-stained" chalk figure found Monday morning drawn on the west corner of the sidewalk in front of Seaton Hall.

Art Stone, director of the K-State Police Department, said someone probably spilled red paint late Sunday night or early Monday morning and another person used chalk to draw a human figure around the dark blotch.

"Somebody probably came by and thought it would be pretty funny to draw a body figure around it," Stone said.

"And really it is. It's a lot funnier than some of the things that have been done, like painting statues."

Stone said grounds crews were supposed to have the "mystery" cleared up by Monday afternoon.

Heir to beer empire survives accident

By The Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — Anheuser-Busch brewing heir August A. Busch IV was listed in satisfactory condition Monday as an investigation continued into the death of a woman found near his wrecked and abandoned sports car, authorities said.

Investigators believe Michele C. Frederick, 22, Tucson, died after being thrown early Sunday from a Corvette just north of Tucson, said Pima County Sheriff's spokesman Asa Bushnell.

Busch, 19, was admitted Sunday to Tucson General Hospital after deputies found him bleeding from head injuries at his residence about five miles from the accident scene. They believe the accident occurred about 2 a.m.

A hospital spokesman said Sunday that Busch underwent unspecified surgery and was placed in the intensive care unit. But on Monday, the hospital would only say he was in satisfactory condition.

A jacket and wallet belonging to Busch were found in the car, said Sheriff's Deputy Ron Benson. A .44-caliber Magnum handgun was also found in the auto wreckage.

Deputies said they found Busch, a University of Arizona freshman engineering student, after forcing their way into his house when they saw lights and heard music but no one answered the door.

Gangster Day raises food for charity

By KAREN BELLUS
Collegian Reporter

A dark, late-model Chevrolet pulled up alongside the curb outside the large, white-pillared house. Suddenly, the front door of the house burst open and a screaming young woman was dragged from the house and hustled into the car by two men in dark suits and hats. An hour later, the victim's worried household received a call: "We want 20 pounds of canned peas, or you'll never see your president again."

No, this was not a re-enactment of a late-night Efron Zimbalist Jr. flick. It was the Sigma Phi Epsilon Gangster Day '83. Gangster Day began 5:30 Monday evening and involved the mock kidnapping of sorority presidents and fraternity little sister presidents. The various organizations had to then buy back the victims with canned food which will be donated to the Douglass Community Center, 901 Yuma St., for the center's Thanksgiving Food Drive. The food was to be weighed and a traveling plaque awarded to the group which donated the most food. The living group or little sister organization with the most participation in the event was to win a keg of beer. Thirty-two greek living groups participated in the gangster day. "In the past, we've donated about 2,300 pounds of food. This year our goal is 2,500 pounds," said Greg Pestinger, sophomore in marketing and activities chairman for the Sig Eps. The event was the sixth such event sponsored by the fraternity as a community service project. Godfather's Pizza, The Sports Fan-atic and Campbell distributors donated space and products to the event. For the first time in the history of the event, the fraternity encouraged cash donations as well as donations of canned goods to the Douglass Center. "We wanted to give the houses the option of donating cash if they did not want to participate in the event. That way, the center could see that the money was spent in the most needy areas of the community," Blake Chastain, junior in electrical engineering and Sig Ep member, said. The "victims" were kidnapped at 5:30 and taken to the Sports Fan-atic where they were given T-shirts and pizza. Later in the evening the gangster movie "Scarface" was shown and drinking games were played.

Panel would require dump-area notification

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A legislative panel recommended on Monday the state be required to notify area residents or conduct a public hearing regarding any proposed closing, reopening or clean-up of a hazardous waste dump such as the one near Furley in Sedgewick County. In addition, the Special Committee on Furley and Strother Field for legislation to require residents near a waste dump to be notified by the state Department of Health and Environment if groundwater contamination was detected in their area.

The 80-acre waste dump, which is about 10 miles northeast of downtown Wichita and three miles southeast of the community of Furley, was closed by the state in 1982 because chemical wastes were leaking into groundwater. A clean-up is under way. However, the dump's owner, Chemical Waste Management Inc., has filed an application with state and federal environmental officials to reopen and expand the dump. Although the committee will not take a formal position concerning the reopening of the Furley operation, the panel chairman, Rep. Ben Foster, R-Wichita, made his opposition to the dump quite clear Monday. "I would very strenuously would object to KDHE reopening Furley right now or ever," Foster told his colleagues, noting that the dump is in part of his legislative district. Under the main proposals endorsed by the committee, the Department of Health or Environment would have the choice of conducting a public hearing or making notice to area residents on matters involving a waste dump. Currently, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency requires a public hearing on modifications to a waste dump or on a plan for a permanent closing of a dump. No state law requires public hearings or notice, but Secretary of Health and Environment Barbara Sabol said it is the policy of her agency to do one or the other for matters involving the Furley waste dump.

Hunger task force tours surplus sites

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Members of a presidential task force studying hunger in the United States toured huge limestone caves stocked with surplus government food Monday and met members of the public, some of whom angrily said action — not another study — was needed. The visit came on the first day of a five-day tour of five cities by members of the President's Task Force on Food Assistance. The 13-member panel was appointed by President Reagan on Aug. 2 in response to reports from mayors, nutrition groups and members of Congress of growing hunger in the United States. The panel held its first meeting Sept. 27 and hopes to present recommendations to the president by late January on how to change the way the federal government distributes its surplus food commodities. The group spent the morning touring the area's limestone caves, which cover some 5 million square feet and contain about 157,000 tons of surplus cheese, butter and dry milk. The group also toured charity food distribution centers at local churches and agencies. During a break in an afternoon public meeting, James C. La Force Jr., the task force chairman, said, "I'm impressed...and in a sense depressed, because food is meant to be consumed, not stored."

back and tell President Reagan, "What he has done is nothing." Johnnie Mae Johnson of the Civic Registration Council, a local emergency services agency, said, "We have people who come to my office who are so hungry they sit on the floor and eat out of the bag of food when I have food to serve. "We didn't need a study," Johnson added. "Mr. Reagan might have needed one, but we didn't need one. We can distribute anything you can bring out of those caves. And we have the people who need anything you can bring out of those caves." Alice R. Stark, of Episcopal Community Services of Denver, said she was disappointed in the meeting. It was "just about what I expected — a lot of dry, dreary statistics," she said. "My anger and my cynicism comes from the fact that I don't believe anything will change. The task force members are well insulated and removed from the problems of the poor. The president has no real will to care for the poor." She called it "absurd" to believe the private sector could handle the problem of feeding the poor. "The private sector has neither the resources nor the skill to administer huge food stamp and welfare programs," she said. The task force was to visit Peoria, Ill., today, Atlanta on Wednesday, Houston on Thursday and Jackson, Miss. on Friday.

Dairy subsidy stirs conflict

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration ran into stiff resistance Monday in its battle to win concessions from House and Senate negotiators working on a major dairy subsidy bill. Members of the joint negotiating committee agreed to accept a Senate amendment opposed by the administration dealing with the tobacco price-support program. The provision, to require more stringent treatment of imported tobacco, was seen by the administration as a protectionist move pushed by tobacco-state lawmakers. And the conferees expressed strong feelings against the White House on provisions dealing with limiting the effects of dairy cow slaughter on meat markets and how to calculate certain milk subsidy payments. "The administration got themselves into a corner, not working with us" during House floor consideration of the dairy bill last week, House Agriculture Committee chairman Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, told reporters after the 2½-hour session. Few items in a 23-page list of differences between the two houses' versions of the bill were resolved, and consideration was scheduled to resume today. The administration had backed an alternative dairy bill pushed by consumer and non-dairy farm groups, contending it would be cheaper to taxpayers than a "compromise" bill pushed by the dairy industry. The industry bill passed the House handily last Wednesday. The bill, similar in its basic outlines to one the Senate had passed earlier, sets up a 15-month program of paying dairy farmers not to produce up to 30 percent of their normal milk output. It is designed to remedy dairy policies that have resulted in expensive price-support purchases by the government and a growing stockpile of government-owned cheese, butter and dried milk. Conferees did agree to go along with a provision requiring imported tobacco to undergo inspections for grade and quality similar to the scrutiny given domestically grown tobacco. The Senate bill includes a section freezing tobacco price supports and making other changes in the tobacco program, but the House did not include tobacco in its bill. Agreement came despite warnings from Agriculture Department and trade officials that such limits could violate international trade agreements and invite sanctions from other countries against U.S. exports. The conference then bogged down on whether to adopt Senate language giving the secretary of agriculture free rein to deal with adverse impacts on the meat markets of cutting dairy herds, or whether to go with a House provision giving the secretary specific guidelines. William Leshar, assistant USDA secretary for economics, said the bill would result in between 250,000 and 1 million dairy cows being slaughtered for meat, and he argued that the Senate's vaguer language was adequate to meet the problem.

Referring to the charity organizations the group visited, La Force said, "I do think the needy people of Kansas City are being helped." Those who need help are sometimes not immediately aware of where to go, he added. When only 40 minutes remained in the scheduled two-hour public meeting, a woman in the audience stood up and loudly objected that most of those who had been given an opportunity to speak were public officials. "Those people don't know anything about hunger," said the woman, who identified herself as Les Lucile McReynolds of Kansas City, Mo. She told the members to go

Poor timing for a trip

President Reagan ended his trip to Asia Monday, a trip which primarily succeeded in stirring up bad feelings toward the United States among the Communist nations. The trip, made to assure our allies that we are concerned about their safety and well-being, was poorly timed. It showed a lack of intelligent planning, as do many of the Reagan administration's actions.

The United States has just shown itself more aggressive than its allies would have liked. The intervention and subsequent tragedy in Beirut, followed by the invasion of Grenada, heightened anti-American sentiments among our friends and enemies.

The Soviet Union was especially rankled by the invasion of Grenada, since the attack was directly against a possible position of future influence for the Soviets. But many of our allies and nations with which we relate peaceably were outraged by the invasion as well. Not one nation on the United Nations' Security Council supported our action. It was only because of a U.S. veto that we weren't censured by the organization.

We believe Reagan would have been wise to let world issues cool down a bit before jaunting off on his Asian tour. His actions did no tangible good, and some, such as his voyage into the Korean demilitarized zone, were idiotic. In the aftermath of the bombing in Beirut, Reagan should have used some common sense and realized that if he had been attacked while in the DMZ, we almost certainly would have gone to war over the matter.

While Reagan's trek into the DMZ may have served to show the Communist forces in North Korea and China that the United States is not intimidated, it may also have served to increase tension between the United States and China. That relationship is one that has been delicate in the past, and one which needs to be strengthened. More concern should be shown toward the feelings and reactions of the Chinese in regard to our actions.

Besides straining China-U.S. relations, the DMZ visit also poses a risk to the tenuous peace in Korea. While we may need to show our support for South Korea, we do not need to inflame the feelings of the North Koreans.

South Korean President Chun Doo-hwan urged Reagan not to go into "such a dangerous place," and ordered his artillery to be ready in case of an attack on Reagan. Even though American troops are stationed in the DMZ, it was a stupid decision by the administration. Our presence there is enough of a strain on the North Koreans; Reagan's presence there could have pushed the situation too far.

We can be glad that no immediate adverse reaction resulted from Reagan's ill-timed visit. Now, we can only hope there will be no resulting hindrance of China-U.S. relations or increased tensions between North Korea and South Korea.

Presidential libraries

ATLANTA — Jimmy Carter assembled an impressive roster of individuals from past and present governments here last week for a conference on the Middle East. The meeting was "quite a reunion of old friends," said Cyrus Vance, Carter's first secretary of state.

But for a group of local residents, the occasion was hardly worth celebrating. About 600 of them demonstrated outside the conference site at Emory University over a plan to build a "Presidential Parkway" linking Carter's proposed presidential center and mediation center to a nearby interstate highway. The citizens consider the highway more destructive than beneficial, and probably wish Carter's old friends had told him so.

Carter insists that the 2.4-mile interstate link will offer needed access to his federally-funded complex, which is to be more modest in size and cost to taxpayers than any of the last four presidential libraries. He points out that the construction site, now held by the Georgia Department of Transportation, was originally bought as a right-of-way to Interstate 485. If the natives don't let him build the road, he might just move the library somewhere else.

But local opponents of the highway contend that its construction will destroy nearby parkland, mapped out by landscape architect Frederick Law Olmstead, and lower surrounding property values. What worries these residents and others more is the possibility that state transportation officials might want to build more links to another interstate in the future.

At one time, Carter enjoyed local support for the library. Yet he didn't take the opposition to the highway seriously. Now there's growing resistance to the project as a whole, and much of the fault lies with Carter's undiplomatic behavior during the controversy.

"It's appalling that a former president who espouses human rights and wants to build a mediation center refuses to sit down and talk to his neighbors," said David Walbert, an attorney and opponent of the highway. One could add that former presidents ought to let the public decide how it wants to memorialize them.

Footnote: Students at Stanford University have already split over a proposed presidential library. On one side of the issue are "Students for the Presidential Complex at Stanford" (SPC), who gathered Nov. 3 for an organizational meeting. On the other is "Stanford Community Against Reagan University" (SCARU), a group consisting of students and faculty critical of Stanford's ties to the conservative campus think-tank, the Hoover Institution.

Stanford President Donald Kennedy has endorsed the complex generally but warned recently that it would strain Stanford's fund-raising machine.

— One week before departing on his trip to the Orient, President Reagan approved legislation providing $5 million for the construction of a center for the study of the "Pacific Rim." The center will be dedicated to onetime Senate majority leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont. Currently ambassador to Japan, Mansfield has long believed in improving U.S. scholarship on a region that is surpassing this country in productivity and technological advances; his Senate colleagues, meanwhile, have also long been searching for a way to honor him.

Unfortunately, political leaders in the Montana cities of Missoula, home of the University of Montana, and Mansfield's native Polson are fighting to place the center in their respective towns. Moreover, according to a source close to the maneuvering, there's no clear consensus on what specifically should be studied or whether the center is really necessary.

— By Thanksgiving a three-judge panel in Philadelphia is expected to rule on a lawsuit that could have a significant effect on next year's presidential politics. The federal court is to decide the constitutionality of a $1,000 limit on expenditures by groups or individuals for or against presidential nominees after the national conventions. If the limit is upheld, the Supreme Court subsequently affirms, many conservative groups would have to shelve grand media blitzes expected on behalf of the eventual GOP nominee.

In 1980 the Supreme Court considered a similar question but never reached a definitive conclusion. The vote was 4-4, with Justice Sandra Day O'Connor abstaining.

Wording important in Bible

Editor, RE:Brad Gillispie's Nov. 8 "New Bible Not a Solution" column. Brad made valid points concerning the "Inclusive Language Lecternary." I would like to add some further thought on this subject.

Even though the National Council of Churches may not feel that each word in the Bible is important, Jesus does. For instance in Matthew 5:18, Jesus says, "For truly I say to you, until heaven and earth pass away, not the smallest letter or stroke shall pass away from the Law, until all is accomplished." The stroke is the smallest part of a Hebrew letter, and can change a word's meaning. God does not want even a stroke altered because He completes what it says to this degree. However, the error which the lecternary has is not just changing one letter, but additions and deletions of whole words, which then affect sound Bible doctrines such as the Trinity.

The Bible was written over a long period of time with the help of many authors, and through numerous methods. One method used to bring the Living Word into written form was simple dictation. In the Old Testament alone there are 2,600 statements of this type, that is: "Thus saith the Lord," or "The Word of the Lord came unto me, saying..." Needless to say, the prophets who received such revelation would not think of changing it in order to suit popular opinion.

As the prophets and Bible authors were empowered to accurately record and write the Word, so too do we need to interpret the Bible with the Holy Spirit's help. And God has promised the Holy Spirit to anyone who believes in Jesus Christ.

In conclusion, the gospel of John states that the Word was with God in the beginning and is God Himself. To quote a Bible scholar: "It may be pointed out that there is practically no difference in the essential reality of the spoken Word and the written Word, for one is no more than a form in which the other appears. Both are the breath of His mouth."

Islam a worldwide belief

Editor, Islam is a guidance for the whole humanity, no matter where. Because it is truly the word of almighty God, it is not possible to limit Islam to any specific region. It is the power of Islam that gives humanity the ability to realize the power of mankind. An example of this is the success of the Islamic revolution in Iran, which proved to the people that they can overthrow one of the most powerful governments (the Shah's) in the area with bare hands. Of course, some important factors were involved, including a strong belief (Islam), strong unity and strong leadership.

If during the five years since the revolution, there has been any decline in any of these factors, the revolution would have changed somehow. And if this government has not been satisfying the people, the people would not be standing behind it.

Early enrollment

If class enrollment makes you cringe, early enrollment probably sends you into convulsions.

About the time you really feel adjusted to the semester, they have you planning next semester. Early enrollment for currently enrolled students began Monday and will continue until Dec. 2.

Underclassmen and students who are unfamiliar with the system need to beware. It's been proven by students who have graduated from any program, an adviser can make or break you.

Freshmen are at the mercy of the adviser when entering a program. They look to the adviser to know the system and help the student plot out the course of action needed to complete a degree. Having the right plot is important.

A "plot" is the course of classes that one takes to fulfill degree requirements during the prescribed years in college.

Now a good adviser can save a student some time by outlining the right plot and recommending the right class at the right time.

A bad adviser can cause a student to spend an extra semester in school.

If your adviser is worthless, demand a new one from your department head. You are paying a lot of money to have access to their advice. If you really need advice, it would be cheaper to go to a shrink. At the same time, students need to do their share during early enrollment. Here are some suggestions.

EDEE DALKE
Collegian Columnist

Prepare. Work through your own schedule before watching your adviser pull his hair out.

Read. Read the materials about your degree requirements...and the fine print. Re-ask questions about the credits needed and the times when some classes are offered only one semester.

Double-check. Students can prevent plot mistakes by realizing that the advice received could be wrong and double-checking things themselves. Ask seniors who have been through it, about the programs and classes to take. Make sure it matches the advice given by the faculty. Seniors might have some insight into the program (like to try and hold off on taking a class in hopes the professor will retire); advice that a faculty adviser might not volunteer.

For both faculty and students, early enrollment is a headache. Classes begin closing and you still "absolutely have to take that class." Sometimes students end up just filling in some classes, knowing they'll drop them and try to get the class they want during enrollment. For them, it defeats the whole purpose of early enrollment. It's supposed to ease the enrollment process, but does it?

What it does do is give more work to the faculty. (Whoever thought the faculty didn't have enough to do toward the end of the semester anyway?)

Plainly, simply, the faculty are grossly overworked during early enrollment. Just as obvious, students can't be turned away when they need advising.

Just beware of enrollment advice. It's only advice; you're the one that will be carrying on the plot.

Court permits honorable exclusion

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court set aside rulings Monday that could have forced the nation's colleges to ban student honor organizations that exclude women.

The justices ruled by a 5-4 vote that a dispute over the University of Miami's past support of one such all-male group is now moot, or legally irrelevant. The case was sent back to an appeals court with instructions to dismiss it.

The court's decision, however, left unanswered the key question that was before the justices: May the federal government cut off all federal funding to schools that offer significant support to such groups?

The justices said the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals never should have reached its decision forcing the University of Miami to ban a group called Iron Arrow from its Coral Gables campus or face the loss of all federal money. Iron Arrow, founded in 1926 by the school's first president, long was regarded as the most prestigious campus organization.

Abbie Hoffman loses gavel battle

CHICAGO — Abbie Hoffman, a defendant in the tumultuous Chicago 7 conspiracy trial, has lost another battle of the gavel. Hoffman lost a bidding war Sunday for a 1960s memento that belonged to one of his most famous adversaries — the mahogany gavel of U.S. District Judge Julius Hoffman, who died last July.

When the auctioneer's gavel slammed down, the judge's gavel went to "Weird" Harold Rubin, former proprietor of Weird Harold's Adult Book Store, Massage Parlor and Nude Modeling Studio.

The nine-inch gavel with a brass plate inscribed with the judge's name was purchased for $140. Rubin also bought prints, an etching and a table belonging to the judge.

Abbie Hoffman, a Vietnam War protester found guilty by the judge of inciting a riot during the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago, authorized auctioneer Leslie Hindman to act as his agent when 53 items from the judge's chamber were sold.

Hoffman, whose conviction in the conspiracy trial was later overturned, set a limit on the price he would pay, saying to Hindman, "It'd be nice to have, but it wasn't worth a fortune."

Obese 'Hee Haw' comedian dies

CUMMING, Ga. — Alvin "Junior" Samples, the slow-talking country comedian whose bib overalls and 300-pound frame were a familiar sight for 14 years on the popular television show "Hee Haw," has died at age 56 after a long bout with heart disease.

Samples, who was first hospitalized for hardening of the arteries in 1981, died Sunday at Forsyth County Hospital after suffering cardiac arrest at his home, nursing supervisor Gayle Jones said. He had been released from an Atlanta hospital, where he had been treated for a heart-related ailment, on Tuesday.

Musical's cast has fit with ankles

LONDON — Members of the cast of the new musical "Jean Seberg" haven't had any trouble with their lines — it's their ankles that are giving them problems.

Just before the second preview, Kelly Hunter, the 20-year-old newcomer who plays actress Jean Seberg at a young age, sprained her ankle and was out of the show for one week.

Now the opening has been postponed from Tuesday until Dec. 1 because the role of the late FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover had to be recast, officials of the National Theater announced Monday.

David Ryall, who was to have played Hoover, "fell heavily and fractured his ankle last week," according to a publicist for the show, Lynne Kerwin. Ryall is expected to return to the show in two or three months, but in the meantime Hoover will be played by Michael Bryant, a member of Britain's National Theater company.

Landon Lecturers to return in spring semester

By DAVE MANCHON
Collegian Reporter

Although there have been no Landon Lectures this semester, the chairman of the speaker selection committee said four speakers are tentatively scheduled to visit next spring.

"The number of speakers we have in a year depends a lot upon the availability of the sort of speakers we want," said William Richter, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series and professor of political science. "We don't take everyone offered to us, and we do get a lot of calls."

Richter said the calls come from a speakers bureau, an agency which arranges speakers or other events for universities. It receives a percentage of the fee the speaker is paid for the lecture.

"I generally have avoided using the speakers bureau for getting lecturers," Richter said. "Our (the University's) experience is that when we have had speakers who have come specifically to speak in the Landon Lecture Series, they have been better. It makes K-State not just another stop on the (lecture) circuit."

However, he said some speakers offered by the bureau might be people the University is interested in.

Richter said the series focuses on public issues, which narrows the field for speakers.

"We're interested in speakers who are actively involved with either making public issues or commenting on public issues," he said. "Generally we decide who we're interested in having, either in this country or abroad, then we go after them (ask them to speak)."

Richter said the protests during Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani's Landon Lecture last spring are not the reason there have been no lectures this fall. He said the protests demonstrated to potential speakers that the University is committed to carrying on the lectures.

"What has been demonstrated at K-State is that despite the disruption and the temporary inconvenience to all concerned, the show went on," he said. "I don't think it had any negative effect on the series."

He said he anticipates K-State will have four speakers this academic year.

"I would have greatly preferred to spread them out with two each semester, yet it doesn't always work out that way," he said.

Richter said he can't announce who the speakers scheduled for next spring will be, but said two lectures have been scheduled in February and one in January.

"One (speaker) we had to reschedule. We are, however, assured he is very eager to come, but with the recent political events, if we had scheduled him he would not have been able to keep his commitment (if scheduled to speak this fall)," Richter said.

Richter said several speakers were scheduled for this semester who were unable to fulfill their engagements.

Committee proposes property tax relief plan

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Hoping to provide a way to cut high property taxes, an interim legislative committee on Monday voted to recommend the 1984 Kansas Legislature give school districts the option of imposing a local income tax to help fund schools.

The tax would come in the form of a minimum 10 percent surcharge on the gross state income-tax liability of the taxpayers in a district. For example, if an individual taxpayer had a state income tax liability of $500 before credits, his local income tax liability would be $50.

The local option tax was endorsed by the Special Committee on Assessment and Taxation by a slim 5-4 vote but faces rough roads ahead considering similar bills have been killed twice in the last three years.

The measure is designed to provide property tax relief. It specifies that the surtax must be at least 10 percent and can only be raised in increments of 10 percent — to 20 percent, 30 percent, etc. A district-wide vote must be held on the question of whether to impose the tax and it would take a simple majority vote to win approval.

The bill is nearly identical to a measure proposed during the last session of the Legislature. That bill was approved by the House Assessment and Taxation Committee but died on the floor of the Kansas House. Two years ago, a similar measure passed the House but was never considered by the Senate.

Last session the idea was killed by a coalition of Democrats and urban Republicans who complained the bill would give a property-tax break to corporations and businesses while increasing income taxes on individuals.

The Republicans objected to a provision which triggers a one-half or one percent increase in the state corporate income tax and privilege taxes on financial institutions and insurance companies to provide additional funds for schools statewide.

The corporate tax increase would be implemented automatically after a certain number of school districts imposed the local option surcharge. Money from the corporate tax would be distributed to all districts based on their student enrollment. Even districts without a local surcharge would receive funds.

If all school districts across Kansas levied a minimum 10 percent surcharge it would generate $45 million and would reduce property taxes statewide by 974 mills. A mill is $1 tax on every $1,000 of assessed property valuation.

Urban legislators oppose the bill because a local surcharge would have a big impact on individual income taxpayers, many who contribute little to school finance because they pay little property tax. In most cities, the local property tax base is anchored by corporations and businesses.

Farmers receive protection against FmHA foreclosures

By The Associated Press

BISMARCK, N.D. — The Farmers Home Administration may not foreclose on borrowers in 44 states without first informing them of their right to seek a loan deferral and offering them a hearing, a federal judge ruled Monday.

U.S. District Judge Bruce Van Sickle said a temporary nationwide injunction was in place against the FmHA until he could hear arguments on a permanent injunction, and on the merits of a lawsuit against the federal agency.

Van Sickle last month granted national class action status to a lawsuit by nine North Dakota farmers against FmHA. However, agency lawyers argued that the order did not include a nationwide injunction.

"We clearly now do have the preliminary injunction and it is in effect nationwide," said Sarah Vogel, an attorney for the farmers.

"Secretary Block and Mr. (Charles) Shumman, the FmHA director, have to inform their subordinates all around the country."

Farmers in other states have the same protection Van Sickle granted North Dakota borrowers when he issued a statewide injunction in May, Vogel said. FmHA "can't liquidate and they can't freeze their family living and cash farm operating expenses," she said.

FmHA must give borrowers written notice of the reason for the foreclosure, factors that may make them eligible for loan deferral and their right to a hearing, Van Sickle wrote.

Basketball ticket sales climb at sluggish pace

By STEVEN BURNETT
Collegian Reporter

Basketball season is just a few days away, which usually means a packed Ahearn Field House. But if ticket sales remain at their current pace, Ahearn will be less than full.

The slow ticket sales, however, haven't caused the athletic department to panic, according to Dick Towers, athletic director.

"For the first year in a long time, we haven't had students standing in line," Towers said. "Ticket sales are not competitive at this point."

"But we still have a few weeks before our first game, and there is still time for students to buy tickets. I am confident the sales will increase as the first game draws closer."

"We'll take orders up until the first game. After that we'll put them on sale for the general public. Students should remember that we have two extra games on our schedule this year, and the game price has not increased from last year," he said.

"The two previous years were great — good excitement and student involvement. Two years ago, the student council decided to distribute the tickets on a lottery basis. The first year more than 9,000 students applied for the 5,000 tickets that were available," Towers said.

"I don't know what the reason is for slow sales this year. I think that overall, students are a little more concerned about their money."

Money could be a key factor in the slow sale of tickets, but for Rick Weiser, senior in interior architecture, it is the game schedule that conflicts with his available time.

"I do enjoy the games and the crowds. However, with my class schedule the way it is, it makes it hard for me to break away from my course work to go to a game," Weiser said.

"I do a lot of my homework during the week nights and they schedule two to three games a week at night. I just can't afford to be away from my work that many nights a week. I can go to the football games because they're on Saturday, and we have nothing due in classes the next day," he said.

"Poor performance last year and the expected poor performance this year give me reservations about purchasing a season ticket. Otherwise, I'd buy a season ticket," Lane Eggers, junior in accounting, said.

Some students, like Lori Goering, junior in elementary education, simply do not like waiting in line and fighting the crowds.

"I don't like standing in line and all the hassles it takes to get basketball tickets. Besides, I never know for sure if I can get off work or not. Plus none of my friends are getting tickets. I just don't think they want to spend the money. I'd rather sit in Brother's Tavern and watch it on their big screen," Goering said.

Big Eight awaits to hear bowl bids

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — With one week left before invitations go out, three Big Eight Conference teams are still in the hunt for a bowl bid. Saturday's games went a long way toward clearing up the post-season picture.

After No. 1 Nebraska routed the University of Kansas, 67-13, Orange Bowl officials were quoted as telling Nebraska players that the Big Eight team with the best record — which could only be Nebraska — would get the invitation.

"By reading between the lines, and you don't have to do that very hard, you know we're going to the Orange Bowl, and that pleases us very much," said Nebraska coach Tom Osborne.

Missouri enhanced its chances of going to a bowl by beating Oklahoma State Saturday. Representatives from the Holiday, Liberty, Sun and Independence Bowls were in attendance to see Mizou down Oklahoma State 16-10.

And the Cowboys, who just two short weeks ago were upset they weren't in the top 20 ranking, have nothing to complain about now following their second straight conference loss. If the Cowboys beat Iowa State next week, they still could earn a bid to the Independence Bowl.

Oklahoma kept its bowl hopes alive with a 41-28 win over Colorado. If the Sooners lose to Nebraska, they could end up in the Bluebonnet Bowl, despite a 7-4 season.

Iowa State, 4-6 overall, 3-3 in the conference, scored a convincing 49-27 win against K-State, 3-7 and 1-4, but the bowl picture is clear for both of these teams. There isn't any.

For Nebraska senior tailback Mike Rozier it was just another all-too-familiar record-breaking Saturday.

In his final home game, the Heisman Trophy candidate rushed for a career high 285 yards, scored four touchdowns, broke a slew of NCAA and Big Eight records on the way and led the Cornhuskers to their eleventh straight win.

Rozier now has 1,943 yards rushing with one game to play. Oklahoma State's Ernest Anderson set the old record, 1,877, last season. Rozier, also broke Lydell Mitchell's single-season record of 26 rushing touchdowns set in 1971 with Penn State. Rozier has 28 to date.

Archer dissects 'Cats, sets Big Eight record

By HUEY COUNTS
Staff Writer

His performance was that of a skilled surgeon. After making incision after incision with his passing, he left the secondary in critical condition. The surgery was successful. Call him David Archer, M.D.

The Iowa State quarterback ruined K-State's homecoming game Saturday afternoon as he led the Cyclones to a 49-27 victory over the Wildcats.

Using a precision passing game — consisting largely of sprinting to his left or right and hitting receivers for nine and 10-yard gains — Archer shredded the K-State secondary.

"He read our defenses well and dumped the ball off. He kept us off balance," Nelson Nickerson, K-State cornerback, said. "You can tell they work on their timing because they executed extremely well."

Archer had one of his best days as a major college quarterback against K-State. He completed 29 passes for 286 yards and two touchdowns. He was also successful on two perfectly executed lob passes to the corner of the end zone to pick up a pair of crucial two-point conversions for the Cyclones. He also ran for a couple of touchdowns.

"We have an offense that can strike quick — from anywhere on the field," Archer said.

He also said the team was especially fired up for its game against the 'Cats.

"There were some things stated in paper that said we didn't have a good defense. Well, our defense didn't take kindly to that," he said. "Also, they (K-State) knocked us out of a bowl opportunity last year."

The Iowa State defense held

K-State to just seven points in the second half as the Cyclones scored 37 in their come-from-behind victory.

"The offensive line was the key," Archer said. "They shoved the ball down their throats."

Archer used the line well as he set Big Eight Conference single-season records for completed passes, 220; passes attempted, 412; total offense, 2,507 yards, and total offensive plays, 472.

He also holds four of Iowa State's top nine passing performances — his best performance coming two weeks ago when he threw for 346 yards on a 26 for 46 afternoon against the University of Nebraska.

"David is an intelligent player with great vision. That, mixed with his knack to know what to do with the ball, is what makes him so good," Jim Criner, Iowa State head coach, said.

Archer, a senior, is from Soda Springs, Idaho and was a star at Snow Junior College before transferring to Iowa State last year. In his second year at Snow, he was named most valuable player in the 1981 Wool Bowl at Roswell, N.M.

Archer is one of four Iowa State players wearing red helmets, instead of yellow, during games. The red helmets, called Award Helmets, are presented to players Criner feels are "Big Eight caliber...having shown consistent, excellent play." Archer was awarded his helmet following his performance against Nebraska.

A victory over Oklahoma State University this weekend would give the Cyclones sole possession of fourth place in the Big Eight. The public address system may announce, "Now operating on the Cowboys — David Archer."

Staff/Jeff Taylor

Iowa State quarterback David Archer worked with precision timing in Saturday's victory over the 'Cats completing 29 of 40 passes for 286 yards and two touchdowns.

Georgetown guns for conference title

By The Associated Press

The towering presence of Patrick Ewing and four other returning starters makes Georgetown the leading contender for the Big East Conference basketball championship this season.

Georgetown also was the top preseason pick of the conference's coaches last season, but St. John's, Villanova and Boston College finished in a three-way tie for the title, and St. John's won the postseason tournament.

Big East Commissioner Dave Gavitt says the conference "is the most competitive ever from top to bottom." But, the conference has lost many of the key players who helped the Big East gain stature and it may level off as far as producing teams of national prominence.

The league is only five years old, but it has made a pronounced mark on the national scene. Georgetown finished second to North Carolina for the 1982 NCAA championship, and the Hoyas, along with St. John's, Villanova, Boston College and Syracuse, all made the NCAA playoffs last season. Those five teams in the nine-team conference also were ranked in The Associated Press Top 20 much of last season.

Boston College, whose only key loss was leading scorer and No. 2 rebounder John Garriss, is a strong contender for the title. St. John's, Villanova and Syracuse are not as strong as last season.

St. John's lost starters David Russell, Billy Goodwin and Bob Kelly and supersub Kevin Williams. Villanova is minus John Pinone and Stewart Granger, while Syracuse is without Leo Rautins, Earl Santifer and Tony Bruin.

In addition to Ewing, a 7-foot junior who averaged 17.7 points, 10.2 rebounds and blocked 105 shots last season, Georgetown coach John Thompson has four other starters back. Sophomores David Wingate, Michael Jackson and Horace Broadnax and junior Billy Martin gained experience under fire last season. Seniors Fred Brown, injured most of last season, and Gene Smith also should help.

Boston College is counting on guard Michael Adams (16.2 points) and 6-9 Jay Murphy (17.7) for much of its offense.

The Redmen would be in better shape if the NCAA hadn't ruled against the academic eligibility of 6-8 recruit Walter Berry, who was penciled in as a starter. He's at San Jacinto (Texas) Junior College.

St. John's top player is 6-6 guard Chris Mullin, the Redmen's top scorer with a 19.1 average on 58 percent shooting last season. He broke a bone in his foot in a summer practice session for the Pan American Games, but is nearly 100 percent fit.

Bill Wennington, 7-0, and Jeff Allen, 6-10, will share the center spot. Newcomers Willie Glass, a 6-5 forward, and Mike Moses, a guard, could be factors.

At Villanova, which also lost reserve forward Mike Mulquin, the offensive and rebounding load falls on slender 6-10 Ed Pinckney (12.5 points, 9.7 rebounds). Dwayne McClain is the main backcourt returnee.

Port welcomes servicemen

By The Associated Press

PERTH, Australia — At a time when many American servicemen are feeling less and less welcome in many places, the sailors and Marines who visit Perth are deluged with hospitality by a city that lionizes "the Yanks."

U.S. officials say Perth, the capital of Western Australia, is one of the few places left where the American military is truly welcome. It remains an unfailingly friendly port while people in many Western countries express growing doubt about U.S. policy in Grenada and Central America and the deployment of new American nuclear missiles in Europe, said the officials who asked not to be identified.

"People here are great, wonderful," said Chief Petty Officer Dale Yanz of San Diego as he talked with some of the locals. "They really like us."

Every few weeks a U.S. Navy ship or fleet arrives to be greeted with thousands of invitations from local families eager to share their homes.

The captain of one American ship apologized to a local newspaper that he did "not have enough men in my command" to accept even a fraction of the invitations.

"We rarely see similar hospitality," he said.

A survey of 5,000 U.S. servicemen

Aussies honor 'the Yanks'

by the state government in 1981 reported that 73 percent put Perth as their favorite port of call over places like Honolulu and Hong Kong. Many of the men emphasized the absence of "the hatred which greets them in some other countries."

"We all look forward to coming to Perth. It's the highlight of an American sailor's cruise," said Yanz, a 16-year-veteran.

On a recent sunny afternoon, the center of the modern city was filled with American sailors and Marines in gleaming white uniforms and olive drab kit after the arrival of a fleet. Passing civilians nodded and smiled at the visitors.

In pairs and groups, the young Americans, sporting cameras and shopping bags, walked up and down. Some glanced in shop windows as others lined up at hamburger and other fast-food restaurants.

Others attended to the age old nautical tradition of meeting the local women.

"It's nice. Almost like being back in the States except they drive on the left," said John Steven, a sailor from Columbus, Ohio. "The people here are real friendly. They really welcome us."

American servicemen travel free on Perth's public transport and many clubs and churches offer their amenities. Some shops accept U.S. dollars, and others offer the military discounts.

At the heart of Perth's affection for the Americans is the "Dial a Sailor" program, which arranges for servicemen to spend time with local families.

Dorothy Sheridan, an organizer of the program, said it is not unusual for a visiting ship to get more than 3,000 invitations.

"As soon as the ships dock people start calling in," she said. "They get inundated with invitations."

The walls of Sheridan's apartment are covered with pictures of U.S. ships and their emblems — gifts from crews grateful for Perth's warm hospitality.

After months at sea many sailors are homesick and a visit with a local family helps dull some of the pain of being so far from home, she said.

Asked why Americans are so welcome, Sheridan paused for a moment as if puzzled. "They're our allies," she said.

"The feeling for Americans here in Australia is a very good one," said

Sheridan, whose daughter married a U.S. Marine officer who visited Perth.

Perth, separated by vast deserts from Australia's east coast and 90 percent of the nation's population, tends to feel vulnerable and forgotten by its own government. Its closest big neighbor, Adelaide, is 2,000 miles away.

Cameron Russell, a young Australian, said he approved of the U.S. visits. "It's important for our defense. Hopefully, they'll come and help us if we ever get attacked," he said.

Local businessmen don't deny that the visits are profitable. The state government estimates a fleet visit is worth about $2 million to the metropolitan area which has a population of about 900,000. But the sailors say the friendliness is genuine.

Local officials say there have been a few protests when U.S. nuclear-powered ships have visited, but only a few people ever attend.

The U.S. Navy is anxious to maintain its close ties with Perth.

Sailors say they are under strict warnings to behave ashore, and teams remain after a visit to handle unpaid bills and complaints.

"The only gripe I've got is they come and take our women. There are too many of them to do anything about it," said Russell.

'Bloodless' surgery benefits children

By The Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Open heart surgery using no transfused blood has been performed on almost 100 infants and children by chilling their bodies and diluting their blood with water and nutrients, doctors said Monday.

In comparison to conventional surgery, "bloodless" surgery results in less loss of blood and places less strain on the kidneys and lungs, said Sambamurthy Subramanian, chief of cardiac surgery at Children's Hospital in Buffalo, N.Y.

Those findings were something of a surprise, Subramanian said in an interview. Originally, the technique had been used only on Jehovah's Witnesses, whose religion forbids blood transfusions.

It turned out, however, that the Jehovah's Witness infants tolerated surgery much better than other patients.

The technique consists of cooling children's bodies from the normal temperature of 98.6 degrees to about 75 degrees, cutting the rate of blood flow in half.

The blood is diluted with an equal or larger amount of a standard hospital solution of water, minerals and starch or other nutrients.

In cases requiring unusually complex surgery, the body may be cooled to about 65 degrees, at which time circulation stops completely. That condition can be maintained for about one hour before causing damage, Subramanian said.

Transfused blood always carries with it the risk of disease, especially hepatitis. "In this day and age, when you're going to use blood, people are concerned about it," Subramanian said.

In a report to the annual meeting of the American Heart Association, Subramanian's colleague, Dr. Jacob Bergsland, said, "Our experience shows that bloodless surgery can be performed safely in all but the smallest infants."

The diluted blood that flows through the children's bodies carries as little as a third of the percentage of oxygen-carrying hemoglobin found in normal blood.

In trials with almost 100 infants and children between the ages of 3 months and 8 years who needed surgery for a variety of congenital heart defects, Subramanian said he found no detrimental effects attributable to the technique.

Hospital stays following bloodless surgery and conventional surgery have been about the same, he said.

Revived ERA proposal falters in House vote

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House, on a 278-147 vote that fell six short of the required two-thirds majority, rejected on Tuesday a proposed revival of the Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution.

The tally overrode impassioned pleas of the Democratic leadership and followed last-minute threats by special interest groups on both sides to judge lawmakers at the ballot box next year solely by their votes on the issue.

Voting for the ERA were 225 Democrats and 53 Republicans, while 109 Republicans and 38 Democrats opposed it.

The amendment, which reads simply that "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex," has twice cleared Congress but fell three states short of ratification — with 38 needed by last year's deadline.

The ERA went down this time after Republicans assailed the Democratic leadership for trying to shortcut the legislation without giving members a chance to amend it and with only 40 minutes of debate.

The lawmakers rejected a final appeal by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., who urged support for the ERA without an anti-abortion rider "in fairness to the women of America."

Rep. Hamilton Fish, R-N.Y., said after the vote that he would reintroduce the ERA and seek to have it considered later this week under a rule permitting full debate and amendments.

The spectator galleries were nearly filled with supporters of women's groups favoring the ERA, and backers of anti-abortion organizations opposing it without the rider. Lobbyists for both sides worked furiously in the final hours in their attempts to sway votes.

Until O'Neill approved the short-cut, Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., R-Wis., stood ready to introduce an amendment that would have ensured continuation of laws restricting government financing of abortions to cases where a woman's life is endangered.

Sensenbrenner also planned to offer an amendment that would have prevented use of the ERA to draft women and send them into combat. O'Neill said without the no-amendment rule, the anti-abortion forces likely would have won.

He told the House, "In fairness to women of America, the thing to do is send a lean, clean package" to the Senate. He told those saying they would vote against ERA because of the rule, "In your hearts you were never with us. You were looking for an escape."

Peter Rodino, D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, said lawmakers should vote to end discrimination "in jobs, wages and pensions," and asked them to ignore Republican complaints about the rule preventing amendments.

Marilyn Lloyd, D-Tenn., accused her own party leadership of ignoring concerns that will be raised in state legislatures.

O'Neill told reporters he scheduled the vote "at the insistence of women's organizations who want to find out who their friends are."

"That's the vote people are going to look at," Vice President Mary Jean Collins of the National Organization of Women said before the balloting. "NOW's political activity will be based at least partially on how people vote" on the ERA.

Doug Johnson, legislative director of the National Right to Life Committee, said, "I'm not prepared to say how exactly it's going to be defined with respect to individual candidates, but it's a weightier vote than a vote on the Hyde (anti-abortion) amendment, because it could invalidate all Hyde amendments, past, present and future."

The ERA passed the House in 1971 and the Senate in 1972. Later votes extended the ratification deadline from 1979 to June 30, 1982, but the amendment still fell three states short of the 38 necessary.

Cypriot tensions escalate

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Turkish-held northern Cyprus declared independence Tuesday and sealed off the only crossing point to the Greek Cypriot south, escalating tension between Greece and Turkey over the Mediterranean island.

The Cypriot government in the south appealed for British and Greek help and sought an emergency U.N. session to condemn and reverse the decision, which appeared to formalize the unofficial partition of Cyprus that resulted from the Turkish invasion of 1974.

Turkey formally recognized the new northern regime, but Greece demanded that the Common Market and North Atlantic Treaty Organization denounce the independence declaration, which the Greek government called "unacceptable."

Britain, the former colonial authority on Cyprus, also denounced the declaration and the United States expressed dismay.

"We have consistently opposed a unilateral declaration of independence by the Turkish Cypriot community, believing it would not be helpful to the process of finding a final negotiated settlement to the Cyprus problem," the State Department in Washington said.

Cyprus President Spyros Kyprianou blamed the Turkish government for the development.

Terrorists kill U.S. naval attaché

By The Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — A motorcycle passenger fired at least seven bullets from a .45 automatic into the stopped limousine of a U.S. naval military attaché Tuesday, killing the officer and his Greek civilian driver.

Police said the killer and his accomplice roared off on their motorcycle down a sidestreet of suburban north Athens after the morning rush-hour attack, and that no group had claimed responsibility by late Tuesday.

Capt. George Tsantes, 53, serving with the Joint U.S. Military Advisory Group in Greece, was hit by at least four bullets. Police said he was sprawled in the back seat, his civilian clothes drenched with blood.

"There was blood everywhere inside the car. We hauled them out of the car but there was nothing we could do for the American," said Athens police officer Athanasios Zafirakis.

"A bullet below the heart probably killed him instantly," Coroner Haralambos Stamoulis said. "He also was wounded in the shoulder and abdomen."

The car's driver, Nikos Valoutsos, 62, died later in a hospital of bullet wounds in the chest, police said.

The U.S. naval officer, an American of Greek descent posted to Athens last spring, was driving to his U.S. Embassy office in downtown Athens from his home in the northern suburb of Kifissia, U.S. Embassy spokesman Peter Synodis said.

Witnesses said two men on a light-blue motor scooter, both wearing crash-helmets and dark jackets, cruised up alongside Tsantes' official black limousine when it stopped at a red light three miles from the embassy.

The killers sped off down a side road into the suburb of Psychico, witnesses said. Police set up a dragnet around the city and questioned dozens of witnesses after the shooting.

Faculty, student volunteers renovate building

By STEVE MILLS
Collegian Reporter

Volunteer work by faculty and students in the Department of Art has allowed repairs and additions to be made on the Art Building despite recent departmental budget cuts.

Funds were needed for additional construction and building repairs, including additional exhibition space, storage facilities and a darkroom.

"The money that is actually spent when we have our own people do the labor without being paid is extremely small compared to what it would cost to hire someone to do it," said Charles Stroh, head of the art department.

Estimated cost of the repairs and additions was nearly $26,000 according to a fall 1981 estimate, Stroh said.

He said most of the repairs and additions were completed last spring for $3,800, instead of the estimated $26,000.

Some minor construction and touching up on the building has yet to be completed, Stroh said.

Two faculty members who supported the project are David Harmes, assistant professor of graphics, and Ed Sturr, associate professor of art and coordinator of art education.

"Our department head has been a tremendous support — I don't know what we would have done without his interest and support," Harmes said.

Project workers had assistance from University Facilities, which completed electrical work and plumbing.

Stroh said he believes the additions to the department have been needed for quite a while.

"It's extremely unusual to have an art department the size of this one (200 majors), with a graduate program being offered, without any photography (courses)," Stroh said.

"This is going to be a big boost to our curriculum," Harmes said.

In addition to cutting costs by doing the labor themselves, faculty members have also saved money by salvaging donated materials.

"Part of the reason we are able to do this project is because of individuals getting different items such as sinks, doors, and other materials," Stroh said. "All of those items came from either donations or scrounging things through the army surplus (stores) in Topeka or through yard and garage sales. It sounds cheap, but actually, there were tremendous hours involved by individuals doing all of this."

While the department is cutting corners on labor and materials,

Citizens oppose proposed tavern

By WAYNE PRICE
Collegian Reporter

The future of Charlie's Neighborhood Bar was once again questioned as citizens living in the area around the bar voiced opposition to the establishment at a City Commission meeting Tuesday night.

Citizens opposing revisions to a city ordinance, which would allow the issuance of a license to consume cereal malt beverages stated reasons why the ordinance should not be changed. The current ordinance bans consumption of alcoholic beverages within 200 feet of a city or parochial school.

Before discussion began on the possible revisions, a petition was presented to the commission by Nancy Marx who said she had collected 658 names. She said the signatures represented a cross-section of the community living around the new structure.

Marx said the petition stated that the location of the bar was opposed because of "moral, social and academic reasons, as well as student safety."

Kenneth Cable, president of Manhattan Christian College, was one of those present in opposition to the revision. "Such an establishment creates conflict by, among other things, encouraging damage or loss to college property," he said.

Cable cited numerous events, such as people urinating on campus, the overturning of cars, stolen or damaged property and people entering the dorms making threats and yelling obscenities as experiences the college has suffered as result of its location near Aggieville. "Our experiences will be the experience of others in our area of the city," he said.

Tom Nelson, director of the Institute of Religion, the religious structure within 200 feet of the bar, said the church's activities are not compatible with the tavern. The institute is owned and operated by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"The area, as well as the city, would benefit from maintaining the barrier," he said.

Falwell criticizes film, says boycott to follow

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Rev. Jerry Falwell, railing against "The Day After" in the city destroyed in the ABC-TV movie, criticized the film Tuesday for launching a "pre-emptive strike" against the debate over nuclear arms.

Falwell, head of the Moral Majority, blasted the movie for portraying President Reagan as an "irrational war-monger, a super patriot."

The Moral Majority would lead a boycott against any company which advertises during the movie, which ABC has scheduled for Sunday night, according to Falwell, who said he was "emotionally shaken" after viewing the film.

Falwell, Lynchburg, Va., made his remarks at a news conference at Downtown Airport. He was to appear at the Kansas City Baptist Temple Tuesday night.

"The Day After" is a fictional depiction of nuclear war. The film takes place in Kansas City, Mo. and Lawrence, both which are destroyed in a nuclear exchange between the

The only person to speak in favor of the tavern was Richard Seaton, who said he was representing the building's landlord and not Charlie Busch, the owner of the tavern.

He said a twenty-foot strip of property was purchased from the church for $25,000. Without this land, Seaton said the present development would not be in the form it is in now.

Seaton said Nelson was advised that beer would possibly be sold in this new structure. While he did not protest the idea, Nelson said he did want any such establishment as far away from the educational center as possible.

After zoning was approved, construction for the structure was started with knowledge that a tavern would occupy some of that space. The bar shouldn't have come to a surprise to neighbors or Nelson, Seaton said.

Nelson said he first became aware about a couple of months ago after hearing applications for cereal malt beverages license had been made. He said establishment of the tavern was done in a "quiet way."

After hearing arguments on both sides, the commission decided to put the matter of the tavern on the agenda for the Dec. 6 meeting. William Frost, city attorney, said if the zoning of the structure was invalid because of discrepancy of knowledge of the bar then it could be decided along with the cereal malt beverage license which is also slated for consideration on that date.

The commission also agreed to eliminate metered parking and time restrictions during the Christmas season on both street and parking lot areas in Aggieville.

In other business, the commission decided to authorize staff to seek proposals for relocation consulting firm for the Downtown Redevelopment Project. The proposed consultant would be the city's official representative about business relocation if the downtown mall is built.

The commission also decided to begin appraisals of the property which was formerly Lindy's Army and Western store.

United States and the Soviet Union.

Falwell said the scenes of destruction and human misery in the film were so horrible that viewers would be convinced to call for immediate and unilateral disarmament by the United States.

The movie's lesson is that the only two alternatives were capitulation to the Russians or annihilation, Falwell said.

"The movie says we'd be better off just to disarm and trust the Russians to treat us nicely," said Falwell.

People who support the strategy of building up nuclear stockpiles to deter the Soviets from launching a first strike would be considered warmongers by those who watched the movie, said Falwell.

The Moral Majority has asked ABC for equal time, Falwell said.

"We'll bring on some senators and congressmen, hopefully some people involved in national security, experts like admirals and generals who have been involved then and now (to say) capitulation or a nuclear holocaust are not things that must happen, they are not necessary events," Falwell said.

"While we've done most of the leg and arm work, he's (Stroh) come up with some money that we could use primarily for new equipment," Harmes said.

The money that has been received for these projects came partially through the University and partially from private donations.

"The funds for doing part of the projects are funds that came through our regular operating budget that we get from the state of Kansas," Stroh said. "The bulk of the money is coming from our regular operating expenses."

"It's amazing where we've been able to go in such a short period of time," Harmes said.

"It seems exhausting now that I look back on the challenges we set for ourselves, especially with the time element involved. It's worked out great and I don't see any problems," he said.

Leonard W. Schruben, who has contributed more than 30 years of service to the advancement of Kansas agriculture, will receive the 1983 Distinguished Alumnus Award of the K-State chapter of Gamma Sigma Delta, the agriculture honor society, Thursday at the fall initiation banquet.

Schruben served on the K-State faculty from 1949 until his recent retirement and is professor emeritus of the Department of Agricultural Economics. He has published more than 100 journal articles and experiment station reports, 50 technical or survey reports and contributed to chapters in three books.

Schruben has served as a consultant to state and federal government agencies and to industrial concerns.

He graduated from K-State in 1939 and earned his master's degree in agricultural economics from the University of Illinois in 1940. At Harvard University he received a master's degree in public administration in 1948, a master's degree in economics in 1949 and a doctorate in economics in 1950. Schruben was also a Carnegie Fellow at Harvard.

Three freshmen will also be honored at the banquet as Outstanding Freshmen Scholarship recipients. They are: Linda Abbott, pre-veterinary medicine; Christine Kivett, bakery science and Evon Lynch, animal science.

David Tillman from the Department of Ecology and Behavioral Biology of the University of Minnesota will be the featured speaker at a seminar sponsored by the Division of Biology at 4 p.m. Friday in Room 221 Ackert Hall. The title of his talk will be "Resource Competition and Succession."

Tillman's conceptual development of competition based on the degree to which alternate resources can be substituted by competing species have helped scientists to understand the origin of plant community structure.

K-State's Campus Crusade to join K.C. '83 convention

By BRENDA ROME
Collegian Reporter

Approximately 25,000 students, at least 200 of whom will be from K-State, are expected to convene over Christmas break in Kansas City, Mo., for K.C. '83, a conference sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ International.

"I think it will help stir a spiritual awakening among students in America," said Jim Cook, K-State director of Campus Crusade for Christ.

The conference runs from Dec. 27 to Jan. 1. Speakers include evangelist Billy Graham, Bill Bright, founder and president of Campus Crusade, Josh McDowell, speaker at university campuses, and Elisabeth Elliot, Christian writer.

Sandi Patti, 1982 gospel artist and female vocalist of the year, and Soul Liberation, gospel musicians, will perform at the conference.

Students from every state in the Union will be attending and a minimum of 200 students from K-State's Campus Crusade will attend, Cook said.

"Small group seminars will relate how to grow in faith," Cook said.

Students also will learn how to relate to parents, gain a biblical perspective on sex, love and dating, set life objectives, pray powerfully, be leaders in the '80s and have a ministry in the inner city, he said.

"This conference is designed for college students who want their lives to have an impact," Cook said.

Participants also will spend one day helping the Salvation Army in inner Kansas City by replacing smoke alarm batteries for the elderly poor and distributing food, Cook said.

K-State's Crusade has been preparing for and promoting the convention for over a year.

"I'm really excited about it. I've been to two other conferences over Christmas breaks and was excited to see other students excited about Christ," said Mark Austin, senior in journalism and mass communication.

Court jails man for '82 rape

By The Collegian Staff

A Kansas City, Kan., man was sentenced in Riley County District Court Monday to a minimum of eight years in prison on one charge of rape.

Calvin Ray Holland, 37, is to serve a maximum of 20 years for the crime. Holland was convicted in August for a crime which was committed in Manhattan in October of 1982.

District Judge Jerry L. Mershon said the sentencing had no connection with the current series of rapes in the Manhattan area.

"I don't think there's anything to suggest that there is any connection (with the rapes in Manhattan)," Mershon said.

Michael Maroney of Kansas City represented the defendant in the case.

Holland, who has been married twice, has two children.

Regent encourages 'vision' in planning

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Educators have grown "soft" and no longer demand enough work of students, Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, said Tuesday as he challenged state lawmakers to display "vision" and develop a five-year plan to improve the Kansas school system.

"Our system is sound, it's not that bad," Koplik told the Legislative Educational Planning Committee which is studying options for toughening high school graduation requirements and possible ways of improving the quality of education in Kansas schools.

Koplik renewed an earlier request for tougher curriculum in elementary and secondary schools to prevent the United States from falling behind Japan and other nations in technology and academics.

"We'll be prepared for tomorrow, but we will not be prepared for 15 years from now," Koplik warned. "We don't expect, or demand, enough from our youth."

"In the last 15 to 20 years our expectations have grown soft. We need to strengthen our secondary school curriculum for everyone, not just those students going to college. We have to think in terms of where we'll be in 1990. It's not that far away."

The committee is considering whether the state's open admission policy to public universities should be changed. Last month, Koplik told the panel he supported the current law granting university access to any Kansas high school graduate. However, he said the state might want to examine an amendment that would require college-bound students to be better prepared academically.

"I want you to know my remarks at your last meeting stirred up some controversy," Koplik told the committee. "I come here today as not the most popular man on Regents campuses."

Koplik said the state should be concerned with what a student knows after completing high school or elementary school, regardless of whether that student continues on to college. A strengthening of curriculum would benefit all young people.

"Open admissions to college is a policy the state holds very dear," Koplik said. "In fact, it's become part of our state's value system. I think it's viewed as the state's way of recognizing an individual's worth and dignity and our commitment to developing each individual to his fullest potential."

However, he said that unless students start achieving at higher levels, and school districts start demanding more, the state universities will continue to be bogged down spending valuable time and money teaching remedial English, math and science courses. Koplik estimated the six Regents' universities spend at least $700,000 a year on the catch-up courses — work he said should have been covered in high school.

"Students must be prepared for college," he said. "We can offer the opportunity to develop an individual to their fullest potential but it won't come automatically. If a student comes out of high school and immediately has to enroll in three remedial classes — or help courses — at college, he just won't make it. It's not very likely he'll make it through."

The committee did not take any action Tuesday on the open admissions question but was expected to consider it today.

U.S. to depart island before Christmas

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — U.S. invasion forces will withdraw from Grenada no later than Christmas, the acting American envoy said Tuesday after five members of the Caribbean island's provisional government were sworn in.

"Everything depends on security," acting U.S. Ambassador Charles Gillespie told reporters following the swearing-in ceremony for five members of Grenada's nine-member governing council at the official government house. Four were unable to attend.

Gillespie also said U.S. troops would be out of the country "certainly by Christmas." He said the withdrawal would be "within the 60 days" required by the U.S. Congress, or earlier if Grenada's interim government requests it.

U.S. forces invaded Grenada Oct. 25 with the declared mission of rescuing hundreds of Americans and restoring order following a bloody coup that left Marxist Prime Minister Maurice Bishop and others dead. At least 18 Americans, 21 Grenadians and 42 Cubans were reported killed in the U.S. landing.

Before the invasion, Cuba had sent workers to build an airport, teach in schools and work in hospitals. The Reagan administration claimed the Cubans were plotting to seize control of the island. Cuba has strongly denied it.

Nicolas Braithwaite, acting chairman of the new council which will run the government until elections can be held in about six months, said the panel would begin "taking the administrative decisions of government."

"My first impression is that the financial situation will create great difficulties for us" in resuming some of the required programs and services for the Caribbean island of 110,000 people," Braithwaite said.

Governor General Sir Paul Scoon appointed Braithwaite as temporary spokesman for the council until the chairman, Meredith Alistair McIntyre, returns to Grenada next week.

McIntyre, a U.N. official, is waiting to be relieved of his post at the world body's headquarters in New York before assuming his duties here.

Three other members of the nine-member body also could not attend Tuesday's ceremony and will be sworn in later, Scoon said.

PLO engages tank troops as rebel shelling intensifies

By The Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Lebanon — PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's fighters claim they repulsed a tank assault by Syrian and Libyan-backed mutineers Tuesday, but the rebels kept shelling the besieged Baddawi refugee camp and parts of Tripoli.

Hospital officials said at least 13 people were killed and 75 wounded in the fighting that shattered a four-day lull, but police said the toll could go much higher.

In the Beirut area, anti-government gunners pounded the Christian-populated east sector of the capital and nearby port of Jounieh. Casualties in that fighting were not reported immediately.

A communique issued by the Palestine Liberation Organization command said three battalions of Syrian troops with 60 tanks spearheaded the attack on the Baddawi refugee camp outside Tripoli behind a barrage of artillery at 7 a.m.

"The attack was crushed at 2 p.m. and Baddawi remained in our hands," said the communique. "The Syrians, Libyans and the dissidents have been defeated in fierce, close-range combat around the camp."

Other PLO communiques claimed the military commander of the Syrian-backed Saiga guerrilla faction was killed in the fighting and other key mutineers wounded. But rebel spokesmen in Damascus denied the claims.

The PLO assertion that it beat back the tank charge was further dampened by an incessant barrage of shells and rockets, signaling the mutineers' determination to keep up the pressure on Arafat, whom they accuse of abandoning their fight to claim a homeland from Israel. At least 1,000 people were reported killed in the first week of fighting, which erupted Nov. 3.

Several shells exploded around Arafat's headquarters in the Zahrieh neighborhood. One exploded only 50 yards away, killing at least four people, including a woman and her child, residents said.

Other volleys of Soviet-made rockets from the Syrian-controlled highlands east of Tripoli struck other residential neighborhoods in Lebanon's second largest city, touching off fresh fires in an already burning refinery.

In the Christian east Beirut neighborhood of Ashrafiyeh, residents said buildings were shaking from the impact of rockets and shells crashing down from the Druse-controlled mountains. State radio said fires set off by the shelling were burning at the Hotel Dieu, the largest hospital in Ashrafiyeh.

Growth of the federal deficit

Congress is acting like someone with a bad habit. The person knows he has the habit and vows to break it, but when it comes to terms, a weak will overcomes the vow and the habit remains.

The bad habit Congress has developed is overspending. The congressmen have committed themselves to breaking this habit, but as most commitments go, it is easier to make in times of ease than to uphold in times of difficulty.

With the federal government running out of funds, Congress had a chance to practice what it had been preaching. There were vows made earlier this year to reject an increase in the debt ceiling. But when it came time to vote, the House and Senate both passed $300-$400 billion spending bills to keep the government wasting as usual until the end of the fiscal year.

As Rep. Jim Slattery puts it, the vote was a decision by Congress to "continue the habit of irresponsible spending." Slattery said he voted against the bill because of his commitment to reduce the budget deficit.

The deficit is the price we pay for allowing the federal government to continue its spending spree. Unchecked spending breeds a lack of fiscal concern, a condition which is difficult to change. When you give a child a toy, it is difficult to take it away. The same is true with giving government the freedom to practice excessive deficit spending.

The deficit will continue to grow until our congressmen decide to do something other than talk about reducing it. If this does not happen immediately, then the responsibility must lie with the electorate which reelects fiscally irresponsible incumbents. Any citizen who consistently spends more than his means is deemed irresponsible and dealt with accordingly. The government should be no different.

We cannot continue to operate with the deficit growing at its current rate. The interest which the government pays on the borrowed money approaches $250 billion a year. The money the government is forced to borrow also takes borrowing power away from the American consumer, thus further weakening our economy.

We cannot even pretend to have begun an economic recovery while the government deficit continues to grow. It is time for the government to take steps to cut spending, even if they are drastic steps. It is time for Congress to stop talking and start acting. If they fail to do so, it is time to elect new legislators.

Smith parole a grave mistake

"The inescapable conclusion of your requested inquiry into the Yorkie Smith parole is that poor judgment and bad laws allowed an evil and cruel man to walk the streets of your community and to kill again." — Attorney General Bob Stephan, in a letter to Allen County District Judge John W. White.

The Kansas Adult Authority had no business ever granting a parole to Nathaniel "Yorkie" Smith.

It's easy now to sit back and criticize the parole of Smith, who murdered three people and beat and sexually assaulted a teenager in August 1982. The hindsight of "20/20 vision" is rarely comforting. The fact that the three members of the KAA who voted in favor of Smith's parole have now resigned is "too little, too late."

But the fact remains; the KAA simply messed up. And because it allowed Smith's parole, the lives of the four victims, their families and a community were changed forever.

Smith had been in Kansas prisons off and on since 1965, when he was convicted of two counts of felonious assault on a young man and woman in Iola, Smith's hometown. He was released from the Kansas Industrial Reformatory in September 1971.

Later "occurrences" with the law sent Smith back to prison. In June 1979, Smith was transferred to the Missouri State Penitentiary because of "past disciplinary problems." The "Show-Me State" officials sent Smith back to the Sunflower state in April 1981, because of Smith's "disregarding institutional rules."

I guess the Missouri officials didn't have to be shown a lot.

Smith then spent a year in the Kansas State Penitentiary. He was granted a parole on May 27, 1982. Smith had served eight years of a 12-year-to-life sentence for a second-degree murder conviction. The incident occurred in Kansas City, Kan. The KAA had denied parole to Smith three times previously before granting him parole that fateful summer.

Smith returned to Iola that summer. During the Allen County Fair, in Aug. 20-21, 1982, the bodies of three people — Adeline Fisk, Steven Mangus and Thomas Walsh — were found in and around Iola. In addition, a young man was found sitting in the Neosho River, just yards away from the fairgrounds. He had been beaten and sexually assaulted.

After an investigation, Smith was arrested and charged with three counts of first-degree murder and four counts of aggravated kidnapp-

BRIAN LA RUE
Collegian Columnist

ing. The trial was moved from Iola to Topeka after considerable pretrial publicity.

On Aug. 3, 1983, Smith was convicted of the charges and sentenced to seven life sentences. Smith is ineligible for parole for 105 years.

After the trial, White asked Stephan to look into Smith's parole in 1982. Before the results of Stephan's inquiry were released Nov. 9, the three members of the KAA who had voted in favor of Smith's parole resigned Nov. 7 at the request of Gov. John Carlin.

Stephan's conclusion was obvious. "There isn't any question in my mind that the board was negligent in allowing the parole," Stephan said at a news conference Nov. 9.

"Suffice it to say that for one year, inmate Smith was not cited or charged with institutional rules violation or further violent, sexual and criminal behavior," Stephan said.

"The Kansas Adult Authority weighed correctional staff reports indicating this apparent abrupt behavior conversion against a decade of violent, murderous rage, both in prison and out, and concluded Smith was fit to live among the good people of Iola as a free man," Stephan said.

"I am appalled. One year of acceptable institutional behavior does not outweigh an entire adulthood of sporadic violent outbursts, homosexual assaults and murder."

I agree.

I cannot see how anyone could examine Smith's records and decide that Smith was adjusted to live in society. I cannot see how someone didn't kick the board around and wake the members up before the members decided to give Smith his walking papers.

I have a special interest in this case. My hometown is 18 miles south of Iola.

When I first heard about the Iola murders, I was back up here, preparing for school. It was stunning news. Iola is a typical small town in typical rural America. The most trouble anybody could expect in Iola would be a little vandalism or maybe an open container of beer in a car.

The murders opened up a new bit of fright in me. I had gone to Iola many times to watch movies. I had been in Iola just a few days before the murders. "What if..." thoughts spun through my mind. What if I had gone to the fair? What if I had stayed in town a few days, instead of rushing back up here? What if my little sister had been in that area with her friends from Iola. What if...

I followed the progress of the investigation and trial closely. Moving the trial to Topeka was good, I thought. One, it got it out of southeast Kansas and maybe into a less-biased area. Two, it meant the Topeka media would be covering the trial. I could be closer to the trial and hear the latest developments as they occurred, instead of waiting to hear about it when I went back home.

I was back home when the verdict was announced. It came as no surprise. I sensed some kind of relief over the area, almost as if the episode was over and it was time to move on to other things.

When White asked Stephan for an inquiry about Smith's parole, I thought something was up. There had to be some reason for Smith to be granted a parole.

Stephan's investigation may cause the Kansas Legislature to change the KAA — including the possibility of its elimination. There may be laws rewritten, sentences changed...the possibilities are not all in yet. Any reforms will take careful consideration and will not appear overnight.

It's sad to think that it takes situations like the Iola murders in order to reform a system which made a mistake in paroling Smith. The question now arises: How many others were paroled who, like Smith, shouldn't have been?

Stephan's inquiry has taught us a lesson. I hope it doesn't fall upon people who will ignore his findings. Tragedies like the Iola murders should be prevented. If we, the citizens and residents of Kansas, don't correct the system now, it might be your friend or relative who ends up in the hands of a person like Yorkie Smith.

It's too late for Adeline Fisk, Steven Mangus and Thomas Walsh. It's not too late for the rest of us.

Counting to a thousand

Dalton Brewer, a cattle inspector for the Rhodesian government, was the most specific influence initiating interest on my part in the concept of counting and the meaning of numbers. During the early part of 1927 my father and mother, missionaries in Africa, took an extended furlough from their duties to travel to India. They left me in the care of my cousin, Annie Winger, another missionary. I was not quite five years old.

Although Dalton Brewer was no relative, he became such a good friend I called him Uncle Dalton. In his late 20s, he lived eight miles from Matopo Mission (which was our home). Always a frequent visitor at the mission, his appearances became even more frequent while my father and mother were in India. He would come to the mission on his bicycle, stay for afternoon tea, sometimes going with me to the mission driveway to throw a ball back and forth, then leave. I enjoyed his visits immensely.

On one such occasion, he told me he was going to inspect cattle the next week. I had heard him describe this activity earlier — and I was fascinated with the operation.

"How often do you inspect cattle?" I asked.

"Very frequently," he said. "10 to 15 times a year."

"May I go with you sometime?"

He looked at me calculatingly, a grin at the corners of his mouth. "I'll tell you what," he said. "I'll take you along as soon as you can count to a thousand. That way you can help me count the cattle as they go through the disinfecting dip."

"But I don't even know how to count!" I wailed.

"Well, then, learn how," he said.

Learning to use language in its written form never presented difficulty to me when I was a small boy. After learning the alphabet, the concept of forming words with those letters, then developing phrases and sentences from those words, came swiftly.

JOEL CLIMENHAGA
Collegian Columnist

Counting, however, was a different matter, being a much slower process for me for some reason. The same hymnal from which I had learned to line poetry helped me start. I would spend hours leafing through the hymnal looking at the numbers next to the title of each hymn. There were 679 hymns. But that wasn't a thousand, I thought. I felt very frustrated. How could I ever get to a thousand?

Several months after my parents returned from their trip to India, one Monday morning I was sitting in a sandpile which had been made for my brothers and me to play in. I would rather have been in school, just as my two older brothers were, only my father had said I wasn't old enough to start yet. I was really rather bored with that sandpile. I remember drawing the number 679 in the sand at my feet. Immediately afterwards, in one of those mysterious flashes which I do not believe can be explained, I "saw" the number 680 in the air in front of me — followed by 690, 700, 800, 900, 1,000. I can remember I was as excited as only a little boy can be. Why, I thought, I don't even have to stop at a thousand; I can go to 2,000, 3,000 — as far as I want to go! Maybe, I thought, as the full flood of awareness came in on me on that Monday morning that I could count to a thousand, maybe now I could start going to school. Certainly I could go with Uncle Dalton to count the cattle.

I rushed to find my mother to tell her. She was doing the weekly laundry. We had only the most primitive of implements for such tasks. Giant tin tubs, an old-fashioned washboard against which to scrub the clothes clean, big buckets in which to carry the water steaming from the top of the wood stove on which it had been heated. Water itself was precious. Much of the mission water supply was caught during the rainy season and hoarded in covered reservoirs. During some dry seasons it had to be hauled in by ox cart from as far distant as 20 to 30 miles. We had no inside faucets or plumbing of any kind. All water had to be carted by hand.

My mother was leaning over the washboard, scrubbing a shirt, as I rushed up to her. "Mother, Mother," I shouted, "I can count to a thousand!"

"Really?" she said, only half-listening.

"Want to hear me?" I demanded. "Joel, I'd rather you waited until lunch to tell me about this. I'm very busy right now."

I turned away disappointedly. Then I thought perhaps my father would be interested. I ran across the mission compound, past the grass-thatched farm buildings, down to the long, low mud school building.

I pushed open the door to the room in which I knew my father would be. "Father, Father, I —" I got no further than those three words.

"Joel!" my father's voice thundered at me, "you are interrupting! Now, go on back up to the house and wait until lunch to tell me whatever it is you have to tell me."

I closed the door as quietly as I could. I can remember I was almost crying. I leaned my head against the closed door of the school. Was no one interested in my being able to count to a thousand?

There was. And that will be the subject of my next column.

Review was wrong, offensive

Editor,
We are writing in response to the article in Monday's Collegian on the Stray Cats concert. First you should credit the musicians with their instrumental talent. For example, Sue Schmitt, arts and entertainment editor, wrote the following: "It was impossible to stand still as Lee Rocker played drums and Slim Jim Phantom pounded out the bass lines."

Lee Rocker plays the bass and Slim Jim Phantom pounds the drums. A minor mistake but one we would like to make clear.

Besides the lack of knowledge about the group, we find the correlation of colored hair and Halloween personally offensive, and a rather bogus stereotype. The only positive note we found in the article was located in the last paragraph:

"The secret to the band's success is its ability to play rock'n'roll the way it ought to be played."

Stray Cats members misidentified

Editor,
As true Stray Cats' fans, it was very discouraging for us to read the article "Homecoming concert animates crowd" by Sue Schmitt in the Nov. 14 Collegian. The Stray Cats, as most rockabilly fans know, is a three-member band (which was mentioned in the article). What was so disheartening to read was that Slim Jim Phantom and Lee Rocker were misidentified and lead vocalist and guitarist Brian Setzer was not mentioned at all.

I guess what upsets us most is to find out that Sue is the arts and entertainment editor. For someone with that much responsibility and apparent experience, it's hard to believe the names of the members of a three-member band can somehow be mixed up.

An article like this, it seems to us, would be fun and easy to write, but maybe we're wrong. Either way, in the future maybe your department editors, such as Sue Schmitt, should be more aware of their reporting.

Hazardous stone sidewalk needs repair

Editor,
I would like to call to the attention of University facilities the condition of the scenic, yet hazardous "stepping stone" sidewalk north of King Hall.

This sidewalk area has never been a favorite of mine, nor many other students who live on the north end of campus and must use it several times a day to get to and from classes. It is awkward to try to step from stone to stone without slipping and twisting one's ankle. Many students simply opt not to use the sidewalk at all and walk along either side of it, which has created two more "cow paths" on campus.

In recent weeks, several stones have mysteriously disappeared, leaving large empty spaces of sand and mud within the stone sidewalk area. At least two other stones have broken into pieces, which is also dangerous for walkers. The recent rain has caused dirt around many stones to erode. If one accidentally stepped off the side of a stone in some areas of the sidewalk, he/she could break a leg.

Surely something can be done to improve the condition of this sidewalk. Filling in around the stones with concrete would make it much safer and easier to walk upon the sidewalk. If that solution is not feasible, please at least repair or replace the broken and missing stones and fill in the eroded areas around the stones with dirt. Something should be done before the ice and snow of winter weather make the stones even more hazardous than they already are.

Congress refuses dairy subsidy limits

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House and Senate negotiators Tuesday refused to put a limit, sought by the Reagan administration, on how much the government can pay dairy farmers to cut their milk output starting next year.

The action, during a conference to work out differences between House and Senate-passed versions of a major dairy subsidy bill, came despite warnings that a few large dairy farmers could reap windfalls up to $4.5 million and trigger a massive public backlash against the price support program.

But there remained a chance that the payment cap could be imposed by attaching it to other legislation, and the House Agriculture Committee planned to explore the possibility at a meeting today.

The administration also suffered several other defeats as conferees finished work on the legislation and sent it back to the two houses for final approval. Those votes could come as early as today, but must be held before Congress' scheduled adjournment at the end of the week.

The administration has threatened a veto, but dairy industry lobbyists were confident President Reagan would not risk killing the bill because that would leave in place an unpopular program that has failed to reduce milk surpluses.

"I don't think we had very many victories up here," said William Leshner, assistant agriculture secretary for economics, after 10 hours of negotiations spread over two days. "We're probably not going to celebrate tonight." But he would not predict whether Agriculture Secretary John Block would recommend a veto.

Block said in New York earlier Tuesday that the dairy bill was "unacceptable" to the administration in its present form. He said it has "shortcomings" and that "I guess if none of them were eliminated or if very few were eliminated, the prospects of a veto would be very large."

Under the legislation, the government would for the first time set up a program to pay dairy farmers to trim their output by up to 30 percent. The 15-month program, to begin early in 1984, is designed to reduce large government purchases of cheese, butter and dried milk, which are made to keep dairy prices up to the guaranteed support level of $13.10 per hundred pounds.

Other provisions would trim the support price by 50 cents, assess dairy farmers 50 cents per hundred pounds to help pay for the program, and bill farmers for another 15-cent assessment to finance a dairy marketing and promotion program.

Among agreements reached on major points by the two sides were:

— A package of changes in the tobacco price-support program, including a two-year freeze on price support levels for flue-cured tobacco and an eventual end to the practice of absentee owners of tobacco-growing rights leasing those rights to actual producers.

— A requirement that dairy farmers notify the Agriculture Department of how they plan to reduce their production, including how many cows they expect to slaughter and sell for meat. The department could then adjust the production cutting program, within limits, to prevent any sudden drop in meat prices because of a surge in supply.

— A provision to make available 83 million bushels of low-grade

Study finds visit to doctor may raise blood pressure

By The Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Some people may be taking hypertension medicine they don't need because their blood pressure shoots up only when they visit a doctor's office, a Cornell University researcher said Tuesday.

"When a patient first gets a high reading, the doctor often tells him to come back and recheck it," said Dr. Thomas G. Pickering. "When he comes back the second time, it goes up because he's more anxious because he's been told it's high the first time."

Pickering, who presented his findings at the American Heart Association's annual scientific meeting, said the study revealed that about one in seven patients who have mild or borderline hypertension in their doctors' offices have normal blood pressure at home and at work, and don't need medical treatment.

Others who have mild high blood pressure at doctors' offices may also have it at work, but not at home, the study found.

Asked if the findings mean doctors give patients drugs for high blood pressure unnecessarily, Pickering replied: "We don't have a very good answer to that, but I suspect the answer is yes in some cases."

Unnecessary use of high blood pressure medication may make patients "feel tired or impotent," and increase their risk of developing diabetes and irregular heart rhythms, the New York researcher said.

Men rob manager

At approximately 1:15 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 29, two black males held up the manager of the Pizza Hut at Third and Moro streets in Manhattan.

As the manager walked to his car, a black male came from behind a fence behind the building and pulled out a small handgun. He was joined by a second black male and the subjects forced the manager back inside the restaurant to open the safe.

The suspects took two money bags from the safe and also demanded the manager's billfold. The suspects walked the manager to the rear of the store and then fled through the north door.

Several hundred dollars are estimated lost.

The suspects were described as black males in their early 20s. One was 6 feet tall, weighed 165 pounds, and wore a camouflage army fatigue shirt and blue jeans. The second suspect was 6 feet 1 inch tall, weighed 190 pounds, and wore a long-sleeved thermal white shirt, gray sweat pants pulled up to the top of his calves, white socks and tennis shoes.

Anyone with any information on this or any other crime is urged to call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777. Your call will remain anonymous, and you may qualify for a cash reward of up to $1,000.

Spanish navy to retrace Columbus

CADIZ, Spain — The Spanish navy plans to retrace Christopher Columbus' first voyage to the New World as part of celebrations in 1992 commemorating the 500th anniversary of the journey that opened America to European exploration, navy sources said Tuesday. The sources said it will cost $2 million to build replicas of the three ships that took Columbus and his men to America. The navy plans to use the same maps and navigation instruments used by the explorers in 1492, the sources said.

Hitchhiker held in truck theft

SENECA — A hitchhiker who allegedly stole a tractor-trailer truck and its load of beef valued at $150,000 in Missouri was taken into custody Tuesday by police in this northeast Kansas town. "There was an APB (all points bulletin) issued for the truck and he came through town. I turned my red lights on and he stopped for me," Patrolman Glenn Osterhaus said, adding that the beef was still in the trailer. Osterhaus said the man was being held in the Nemaha County Jail and had been questioned by the FBI. He was not formally charged Tuesday afternoon. Jimmy D. Richardson of Tyler, Texas, told Buchanan County sheriff's deputies in St. Joseph that he had picked up the hitchhiker — who said his truck had been involved in a wreck — late Monday night about 100 miles east of Kansas City. He told authorities he stopped to take a shower at a Faucett, Mo., truck stop and the man drove away with the truck.

Burglars strike during ceremony

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — While Mayor Leonard Paoletta was being sworn in for a second term, burglars ransacked his home, police said. The break-in was reported at 11:17 p.m. Monday, and Paoletta told police the intruders apparently took some jewelry. In his inauguration speech, Paoletta said the Democrats and Republicans must work together in order to improve public safety, public education and economic development. The Republican mayor pledged "all the support which the office of mayor can muster to help the Board of Police Commissioners make changes in the department."

Barney Clark's wife goes public

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Una Loy Clark never worked or made public speeches during her 39-year marriage to Barney Clark. But now Mrs. Clark, 62, speaks about twice a month for the American Heart Association, testifies before Congress and appears frequently on television and at news conferences. "It's different, but I feel closer to Barney this way," Mrs. Clark said Monday at the American Heart Association convention. Clark, 62, a Seattle-area dentist, died March 23 in Salt Lake City after surviving 112 days with the first artificial heart implanted in a human. Mrs. Clark is the campaign chairwoman for the heart association. "I feel like I'm really accomplishing something worthwhile. He would be so pleased," Mrs. Clark said of her late husband, whom she met in the seventh grade. Mrs. Clark said she also hopes to join a program to counsel families of heart implant patients.

ASK takes aid, alcohol issues to Washington

By NANCY MALIR
Staff Writer

Mark Tallman, executive director of the Associated Students of Kansas, met with congressmen in Washington last week to discuss ASK's stand on two issues — student financial aid and the drinking age. In the nation's capital Thursday through Saturday, Tallman said he met with Kansas Reps. Pat Roberts and Jim Slattery and aides of Reps. Bob Whittaker, Larry Winn, Sens. Robert Dole and Nancy Kassebaum. "Basically there were two things we talked about. The first one was that we shared with them was ASK's position on financial aid," Tallman said. The total budget for federal financial aid passed this year is $3.957 billion, up from last year's allotment of $3.603 billion. The aid from the new package is to go into effect in the fall of 1984. "It was a bigger increase than I expected," Tallman said. "ASK's position has been that we don't want to see cuts at the federal level, but since we are aware there is a budget problem, we're not advocating large increases either. Our philosophy is that we favor moderate growth." The approved federal aid is to be used to fund Pell Grants, supplemental grants, work-study, state student incentive grants and National Direct Student Loans. Tallman said, "There is talk of federal legislation that would mandate a nationwide drinking age of 21 for all alcoholic beverages."

The issue of state's rights has most Kansas lawmakers opposing any federal drinking age legislation, Tallman said. "The position that ASK took was not the merits of a 21-year-old drinking age, but that the decision ought to be up to the state," he said. Tallman added he emphasized to the legislators ASK's policy of supporting the promoting of the responsible use of alcohol. Also in Washington at the same time as Tallman was Brett Lambert, ASK campus director and sophomore in pre-law, who attended the third annual general assembly of BACCHUS — Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students. Lambert, who is also campus director of BACCHUS, said the organization "promotes responsible drinking among higher education students." Funding for Lambert's trip came through a grant from the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Services. The campus directors from all ASK member schools attended the conference and were funded by the same grant. Lambert said the conference provided several ideas about possible campus activities that could promote alcohol awareness at K-State. K-State has been a member of the nationwide organization since last year. And Lambert said ASK was "a motivating force in establishing BACCHUS chapters in Kansas" because of ASK's lobbying efforts to retain the current drinking age.

Women's studies grows, diversifies

By SUZANNE LARKIN
Collegian Reporter

Women's studies, a diversified study of women, their history and roles in society, began in the late 1960s in the United States and has since become an established and legitimate program. The program began at K-State in 1977.

"It is extremely difficult to define or describe what women's studies is in the United States. It includes a number of different institutions and ideas, none of which are fully representative of the movement as a whole," said Sandra Coyner, director of women's studies and assistant professor of history.

According to an article Coyner wrote for the August issue of the Journal of Educational Thought, "women's studies consists of several separate activities — notably, scholarships and teaching — located in separate aspects of the women's studies program and often carried out by the same people."

"Some of the diversity of women's studies comes from our history," she said. "Women's studies courses, programs and scholarships have evolved in different ways from different starting points."

"Moreover, since so much of women's studies has been a critique of the inadequacy and especially the elitist narrowness of traditional academic life, women's studies has been unwilling to establish new, restrictive norms of its own."

Coyner said there are 445 women's studies programs at colleges and universities, and approximately 30,000 courses are offered nationwide.

K-State offers 35 courses in women's studies that are approved for credit toward a secondary major. The courses are taught by 30 faculty members to 500 to 600 students every semester. Each year three to 10 students graduate with the secondary major, according to the Nov. 3 issue of In-View, K-State's faculty and staff newsletter.

"The growth has been phenomenal — (it has been) tenfold since 1972 when the first count was published," Coyner said. "Some of the programs are small, sometimes just a committee of interested people who give each other mutual support and publish lists of courses focusing on women."

"But 315 of these programs offer some form of undergraduate concentration, minor or degree, and 55 have graduate programs as well," she said.

At K-State, women's studies is an interdisciplinary program in several colleges, including the colleges of Home Economics, Business Administration, Education and Arts and Sciences.

"Most women's studies programs are interdisciplinary programs, yet more and more are becoming departments," Coyner said.

"Each has its pluses and minuses. At K-State, we have a lot of people involved, but I am the only one involved full time. If we had more full-time members we would have more involvement," she said.

Last week, Provost Owen Koepp announced the names of 17 K-State faculty members who now form the women's studies faculty.

"They will now take over major responsibilities for the secondary major in women's studies at KSU, replacing the women's studies committee," Koepp was quoted as saying in In-View.

Some responsibilities include making decisions about the curriculum for the program and generally advising and guiding its development, Koepp said.

The women's studies committee reviewed the candidates' teaching, scholarship, service and familiarity with the interdisciplinary nature of the program. The committee then recommended candidates for appointment to the faculty based on these criteria.

Members of the graduate faculty are Coyner, Cornelia Flora, professor of sociology; Naomi Lynn, head of the Department of Political Science; Margery Neely, professor of administration and foundations and Linda Richter, assistant professor of political science. These members have had articles published regarding women's studies.

Other members include Janet Benson, associate professor of sociology and anthropology; Phyllis Bixler, associate professor of English; Ann Bristow, assistant professor of psychology; Mary Ann Campbell, temporary instructor of sociology and anthropology; Louann Culley, associate professor of art; Elizabeth Davis, assistant professor of family economics; Marion "Buddy" Gray, associate professor of history; Evelyn Hausmann, associate professor of adult education; Carol Holcomb, assistant professor of family and child development; Carol Oukrop, associate professor of journalism and mass communications; Frank Saal, associate professor of psychology and Nancy Jo Smith, assistant professor of curriculum and instruction.

This group has been named, Coyner said, because of its involvement in women's studies.

"There have been 17 people named to this faculty because of their great achievements in women's studies. Each person teaches a course in women's studies and is active in women's studies research," she said.

"Women's studies is an academic discipline. The different ideas and focuses in women's studies do fit together, but not in a simple way," Coyner said.

Coyner said she believes women's studies has two contradictory themes.

"One theme focuses on the ways in which women are oppressed and victimized, while the second contradictory theme focuses on the strengths present in women's culture," she said.

"It's a big dilemma in the United States, yet many people don't stop to think about its implications. Women's studies has a unique approach and contains important questions which need energy focused their way," she said.

Work and research toward women's studies is interesting and important, Coyner said.

"The research is crucial. I can't emphasize it enough," Coyner said. "The work that people are doing and have done is very interesting, but unless you see all the material accumulated and see how it fits together, you miss the total picture," she said.

"My work with women's studies is rewarding and essential. It's a way that the rather abstract thinking I do can actually have an impact on the quality of people's lives."

Senate to hear reading on creation of art group

By The Collegian Staff

A bill establishing a Nichols Hall Art Committee will receive first reading at Student Senate Thursday night.

The committee would seek information and bids for art to be placed in the entry of the renovated building. Money for the art would come from a $10,000 fund set up in 1975 to help fund an art gallery in Nichols. Plans for the renovation now underway do not include a gallery.

Also receiving first reading is a bill that would set up a reception to allow students to meet informally with student government candidates.

Senate will vote on a bill requiring student senators to visit at least two living groups each semester. Also being voted on is a bill to fund 15 delegates from the K-State Association of Student Chapters of the American Institute of Architects (ASC-AIA) to attend their national convention. The ASC-AIA is requesting $450 to cover costs of food, lodging and transportation.

A resolution will be introduced recognizing Jordan Utsey, retiring dean of the College of Education, for his service to the University.

Manhattan Mayor Wanda Fateley will speak during open period.

Gift Certificates are now available for Birthday's, Christmas and other Special Occasions and are usable in many different combinations.

Intramural roundup

The final two team sports for the fall semester's intramural season — volleyball and innertube water polo — are winding down to a close.

This week marks the last week of regular season play for intramural volleyball. Games will not be played next week due to the Thanksgiving vacation and playoffs will begin the following week when classes resume.

Volleyball tiebreaker games are scheduled to be played on Wednesday, Nov. 30 and the actual playoffs will begin on Dec. 1.

The final matches for innertube water polo will be played on Nov. 28 and 29. The finals will be either on Monday, Dec. 5 or Tuesday, Dec. 6.

Former great Jim Brown considers returning to football

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Holding pro football's career rushing record means a lot to Jim Brown — so much that the 47-year-old Hall of Fame fullback says he'd consider a comeback if his mark is broken.

Franco Harris of the Pittsburgh Steelers is within 588 yards of Brown's National Football League record of 12,312 yards, achieved over nine seasons with the Cleveland Browns.

The Chicago Bears' Walter Payton is 1,293 yards short of Brown's record.

"I have the greatest respect for Franco Harris, but he is just hanging around to try to break my record," Brown told The Plain Dealer in Cleveland during an interview from his Los Angeles home. "Even if Franco beats my record by 500 yards, I will come back."

"I plan to talk to Al Davis (owner of the Los Angeles Raiders) to see if his team would give me a chance and get my playing rights from the Browns."

Davis said Tuesday he had not talked to Brown lately, "but certainly out of admiration and respect I would be willing to listen to whatever he has on his mind.

"His contributions to professional football have earned that, but quite frankly, right now, our total concentration has to be on this season. We've had too many distractions already. I heard of it yesterday, I thought that it was just a passing note. This morning, I've had all sorts of calls," he said.

Art Modell, president of the Browns, said he believes Brown is still on the team's reserve-retired list, and that he wouldn't trade his rights to the Raiders.

"If Jim Brown elects to come back, and since we're on a budget cut," Modell joked, "we can save money because we still have his chin strap and his helmet."

In a telephone interview with the Los Angeles Times Monday night, Brown said: "If anyone wants to test my speed, they can put me up against Franco anytime. I may be 47, but I can still beat him."

"Franco's made a great contribution to the game, he's a great back, but at this point in his career, he's running out of bounds, just going for yards, for records. I don't take him seriously any more."

Harris is in his 12th NFL season, Payton his ninth.

Harris was unavailable for comment Tuesday. John Evenson, the Steelers' assistant public relations director, said he didn't think Harris was aware of Brown's remarks when he stopped by briefly to watch a training film.

"But we've been getting a lot of calls about it this morning — some of the fans are upset about it," Evenson said. "We've never pointed it out, but Franco passed Jimmy Brown in rushing long ago, if you count post-season games. But you don't count it that way."

Brown, who played for Cleveland from 1957 to 1965, said he has started to work on his physical conditioning. "I'm just doing this because I'm tired of hearing questions about my record," he told The Plain Dealer.

"I don't want to wait until I'm 50 to come back, but I'm not going to talk to Davis until I'm physically ready. He's the only guy that would allow me to take a shot at it."

When Brown began his pro career, the NFL had a 12-game schedule. Teams now play 16 games a year.

"I'm proud that I set my record in nine seasons," Brown said. "Others who break my record will have played longer."

Book to reveal sports stories

The following are excerpts taken from a soon to be released book, National Sports Diary of 1991.

Jan. 6 — Ms. Glenda Crutsky, mother of National Hockey League star Duane Crutsky, received 2-3 years in the penalty box stemming from an incident that occurred during last night's playoff action.

During a bench-clearing brawl in the second period, Crutsky refused to partake in the action. Ms. Crutsky charged out of the stands, grabbed a hockey stick and proceeded to severely beat her son; opening a three-inch gash above his left eye, breaking his nose and completely severing his right ear from his head.

Ms. Crutsky declined comment on the incident, but a source close to the family said, "She never liked the kid much anyway. She always told him he was an accident and that he was a wimp like his father." Mr. Crutsky currently works as a meter maid in San Francisco.

HUEY COUNTS
Sports Columnist

Nov. 20 — Today, three National Basketball Association players were sentenced to three weeks of snow shoveling after admitting that they didn't possess the league minimum of four pounds of cocaine.

NBA commissioner and top drug dispenser, Ray Richardson, was furious.

"It's time we cracked down on these non-drug users who continually refuse treatment in our addiction programs," he said. "They're an embarrassment to their team, friends and families."

One guilty player said, "I have trouble staying on the stuff (coke). But now that it's out in the open, maybe I can deal with it better."

Nov. 27 — Twelve of the 13 members of the NBA's Los Angeles Stars plus the entire coaching staff were fired today.

Erwin "The Magician" Jensen, the lone remaining Star, said that a comment he made earlier in the week — "I'd be better off if I played by myself. These other guys are just messing with my game and the coaches are about as intelligent as dead catfish. Either they go or I go" — had nothing to do with the sudden reduction in the team's roster.

Jensen said he would finish the season alone and that his biggest difficulty would be "trying to get the ball inbounds."

Dec. 17 — Television evangelist Bobby Giezus blasted the National Football League, calling it an "immoral organization and a haven of perversity." These accusations came during Giezus' pre-Christmas television special, "Sex Is Everywhere, Even Under the Kitchen Sink."

"There seems to me," he said, "that there's an awful lot of hand holding and rump patting going on out there. And some of the things players do with their bodies after a touchdown is downright grotesque."

A statement released by the NFL in reply to Giezus' claims said that the evangelist was upset because the Saints refused to hire him as director of player personnel.

This is just a sample of wide range of sports stories that can be found in the forthcoming book written by B.S. Tellar.

Tellar, a former horse jockey, said he wrote the book to show the ridiculousness of today's sports regulations, the loss of the "team" concept by many individuals, and the overemphasis that is often placed on sports.

I agree with Tellar when he said, "I really love sports, but sometimes the way people act and the things they do really ticks me off."

School board adopts plans to end sports in junior high

By The Associated Press

OVERLAND PARK — The Shawnee Mission school board adopted a middle school plan Monday night that will eliminate interscholastic athletics at the junior high level.

The plan calls for grade-level reorganization to begin in the fall of 1985. It includes elimination of the three-year junior high schools in the district, with seventh and eighth graders being assigned to middle schools and ninth graders moving to four-year high schools.

The reorganization is designed to bolster declining enrollment at the high schools and to save money.

Multiple twisters rip homes, cause casualty in Alabama

By The Associated Press

CORDOVA, Ala. — High winds flung a tree into a mobile home early Tuesday, killing a 94-year-old woman, as a stampede of tornadoes injured 19 other people and tore buildings to pieces in northern Alabama.

At least 10 houses, 10 mobile homes and 21 other buildings were destroyed and many more were damaged as the tornadoes and high winds uprooted trees and snapped power lines, blacking out thousands of homes, farms and businesses for hours.

Twisters were reported in four counties, but Cullman County, 30 miles north of Birmingham, was hit the hardest. Nineteen people there were hospitalized, including two suffering from broken bones.

The storms were accompanied by heavy rains.

The only reported death was in Cordova in Walker County, northwest of Birmingham. County Coroner Fred Burke Jr. said Jesse Poe was killed when winds blew a tree onto her mobile home.

The tree smashed into the woman's bedroom and the roof and tree trapped her against the wall, said Steve Dutton of the county rescue squad. A wrecker was unable to move the tree, Dutton said, and a log skidder was brought in so rescue workers could reach her.

Of the 19 people injured in Cullman County, 17 were released after being treated at hospitals.

Charlotte Jenkins, assistant Civil Defense director for Cullman County, said no dollar amount had been determined on damage.

KSAC to air tax tips

By SUZANNE LARKIN
Collegian Reporter

The Epsilon Theta chapter of Beta Alpha Psi, a national accounting honorary chapter at K-State, will be broadcasting its tax knowledge in the form of public service announcements.

Last year the chapter ran tax service announcements on KSAC, K-State's radio and television extension, said Keith Fitzsimmons, senior in accounting and Beta Alpha Psi tax service communications chairman.

"Last year we started these communications — tax tips — as a free service to the public. These tips are geared towards tax preparation and new changes in the tax laws," Fitzsimmons said. "This year we also will run the tips."

More than 26 states reported using the announcements last year, Fitzsimmons said.

"We focus on the four surrounding states, but other states reported using our services last year," he said.

The tax tips are prepared by Beta Alpha Psi members.

"We prepare the material, type up the copy and make our spots available to anyone who wants to pick them up over the wire service," Fitzsimmons said.

The group prepares the tax tips as "an individual community service chapter project," he said.

"There will be 12 radio spots altogether which will be completed the first week in December but will not air until the latter part of the month," he said.

Fitzsimmons said that four club members will present two to three, 30- to 60-second announcements on KSAC.

"We want to help people become more aware of the legalities and technicalities in regards to taxes; our purpose is to help the public," he said.

If you're interested in a rapidly growing and increasingly dynamic profession, dental hygiene may be the field for you. Service to mankind is the primary purpose of health professions, and the dental hygienist with a bachelor of science degree may accomplish this goal through a variety of challenging and rewarding professional opportunities. Dental hygienists are distinctive members of the dental health team. They, along with dentists, are the only ones licensed to provide direct patient services.

The University of Missouri-Kansas City provides an avenue for you to become a licensed dental hygienist. The program prepares you to perform professionally in private dental offices or to hold responsible positions in community health program planning, institutionalized patient care, or research.

The Division of Dental Hygiene is part of the UMKC School of Dentistry located on "Hospital Hill" adjacent to the UMKC Schools of Medicine and Nursing, Truman Medical Center, Children's Mercy Hospital and Western Missouri Mental Health. The integrated educational opportunities are challenging and the rewards for a dental hygienist with a baccalaureate degree are plentiful.

U.S. troops may return from Grenada by Christmas

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan won't ask for authority to keep U.S. troops in Grenada past the Christmas deadline set by Congress because the administration expects all combat forces to be withdrawn before then, a White House spokesman said Wednesday.

House and Senate leaders are split on whether to allow American forces to remain on the island under the War Powers Act. But the administration's plan would avoid another confrontation like the one that resulted in the compromise with Congress in September that allowed U.S. Marines to stay in Lebanon for 18 more months.

Larry Speakes, the spokesman, said, "We have indicated to the Congress that there is no need for any congressional action, in our opinion, on war powers. We don't anticipate there will be any additional hostilities, and combat troops will be out as Department of Defense said."

The 1973 War Powers Act requires the president to withdraw troops within 60 days from situations of combat or imminent danger of hostilities, unless Congress declares war or authorizes an extension.

"We do not acknowledge the need for a 60-day period," Speakes said, but "combat troops will be out" nonetheless.

Shortly after the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada on Oct. 25, Congress invoked the War Powers Act which meant American troops must be withdrawn by Dec. 24.

Group blasts invasion, Reagan foreign policy

By LEE WHITE
Collegian Reporter

Apathy may be the Reagan administration's best weapon in its fight to keep troops in Central America.

That was the view of one speaker at a rally sponsored by Citizens in Solidarity with Central America at noon Wednesday between the Union and Seaton Hall.

About 30 group members and 100 onlookers attended Wednesday's rally. Most group members stood quietly, holding signs denoting past U.S. invasions of Central American and Caribbean nations.

The group recently was formed on campus to protest U.S. involvement in Central America and Caribbean nations.

Dan Robison, senior in natural resource management, the speaker who made the statement, evoked the ire of an unidentified bystander to the point that an apple was thrown at one of the group members.

"The Reagan administration says the Nicaraguan people want U.S. involvement," Robison said. "The American people really don't care, and Reagan hasn't stopped to think what the Nicaraguan people want."

Methods used by Reagan in foreign and domestic policy are similar to those of a dictatorship, Robison said. He cited restrictions on press freedoms and civil rights, as well as high defense spending and constant reminders about the spread of communism as actions characteristic of a dictator.

Robison's speech seemed to elicit the most response from the crowd, which stayed stable in numbers as onlookers filed in and out of the Union during the hour-long session of speeches.

One person who showed he was not pleased with what he was hearing was Tom Harms, junior in journalism and mass communications, who waved an American flag during the rally.

Harms was joined shortly after the rally began by Larry Montandon, sophomore in business administration, who carried a sign Harms had made supporting U.S. involvement. The two subsequently moved from the steps of Seaton to the area where the protesters stood.

Montandon said the group should have presented both sides of the issue of whether the U.S. should have become involved in Grenada and Central America.

"It would be nice to have a debate on it in Forum (Hall)," Montandon said.

Jane Johnson, senior in geography and president of the protesting organization, questioned Harms' facts.

"There were (supporters of involvement). But there were people who objected, too," Johnson said. "We question whether one sovereign has the right to invade another sovereign at the urging of other sovereigns."

She said Grenada didn't ask the United States to invade.

At one point during the rally, Franz Samelson, professor of psychology and a survivor of the Nazi regime in Germany, challenged Harms to come to the microphone and justify his stand on military action. Harms moved toward the microphone, but didn't address the gathering.

PLO faction knocks out stronghold of loyalists

By The Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Lebanon — Guerilla mutineers drove Yasser Arafat's fighters out of their last Mideast stronghold in fierce hand-to-hand combat at the Baddawi refugee camp Wednesday.

At the same time, Israeli jets flew reprisal raids against Moslem extremist bases in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley.

U.S. Marines at Beirut's international airport were put on alert when Druse warriors battling Lebanese army troops fired rockets and artillery shells in the area, but a spokesman said the alert was relaxed in less than an hour.

Unconfirmed radio reports said 100 were killed and 600 wounded in the final Syrian-backed onslaught on Baddawi, and that 33 were killed and 80 wounded in the Israeli air strikes on the Janta and Shaara camps in the Bekaa Valley, just three miles from the Syrian border.

At least 1,000 people were reported killed in the first week of the PLO war in Tripoli, which broke out Nov. 3. On Nov. 6 the mutineers overran the loyalist camp of Nahr el-Bared, and Arafat's men fled to Baddawi. It was not known how many loyalists were in Baddawi when the mutineers fought their way in.

"They entered the camp in the early afternoon," said one Palestine Liberation Organization official who asked not to be named. "Eventually, we had to get out. We can't match them."

The official said that some clashes continued on the southern edge of Baddawi after nightfall, but "very limited."

Arafat appeared at his headquarters in Tripoli early in the afternoon, but made no public statement. He left the headquarters a few minutes later, along with his military adviser, Khalil Wazir, for another location in Tripoli.

The beleaguered Arafat has said he will leave Tripoli only when he has guarantees of safety for his fighters and Palestinian civilians. He has given his probable destination as Tunis, where he set up headquarters 15 months ago after the Israelis forced him and his guerrillas out of Beirut.

Beirut radio said the mutineers were led by Ahmed Jibril, the head of a small, radical PLO faction backed by both Syria and Libya, which accuse Arafat of abandoning military struggle against Israel. The attack began with a Syrian artillery assault, followed by either a Syrian or rebel tank charge.

Just after noon, the camp appeared to be surrounded except for an area to the south and southeast, where heavy fighting raged.

Spy sources claim Andropov shot, hurt

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Under the headline "Was Andropov Shot?" the Daily Express on Thursday cited reports circulating in Western Europe intelligence circles that Soviet President Yuri Andropov had been shot and wounded in the arm by the son of his predecessor, Leonid Brezhnev.

Early editions of the British newspaper available here Wednesday night said the reports claimed the alleged Kremlin shooting by 51-year-old Yuri Brezhnev in a family feud is the real reason for Andropov's three-month absence from public view. "It has been alleged that while he was head of the KGB (the Soviet secret police), Mr. Andropov engaged in a deliberate smear campaign against the Brezhnev family in a bid to thwart the appointment of Mr. Brezhnev's chosen successor, Konstantin Chernenko," after Brezhnev's death, the newspaper said.

The Daily Express said the reports, which it said emanated from Moscow KGB sources, had spread through intelligence circles in London and elsewhere in Europe.

According to the paper, the reports say Andropov, 69, is recovering from the wound but that its effects, and the difficulty of explaining a damaged arm, have kept him out of action.

AT&T breakup hits campus

By LYNN VONDER HEIDE
Collegian Reporter

Telephone rates for residence hall residents will increase next fall.

Because of the recent AT&T divestiture and the resulting rate increase request by Southwestern Bell, the public's local telephone bills will increase soon after Dec. 31.

Residence hall residents won't feel the effect on their pocketbooks until next fall because telephone charges have already been agreed upon in contracts between students and the Department of Housing for this academic year, Bob Felde, assistant director of housing, said.

Most residents who live in halls that have room phones pay a $25 fee once each semester to housing along with their bills for room and board, and this fee is passed directly to Southwestern Bell. Southwestern Bell actually charges housing about $11 a month per phone for 10 months.

For rooms which have two occupants, housing receives $100 a school year from hall residents and pays the telephone company about $110, a loss of $10 a room. Many rooms, however, have only one occupant and some halls have empty rooms, which increases the amount housing pays to the telephone company.

In addition, housing must pay Southwestern Bell service disruption charges during the summer. Housing is already losing money without a rate increase in effect, Felde said.

The difference between the money which housing receives from students and the amount it owes Southwestern Bell is taken out of the housing budget, reducing the amount of money which can be used for special services and student programs, operations and student payrolls, Felde said.

Housing officials do not yet know what the fee will be next fall.

"We have no idea what the cost to the student will be because we have not received our figures from Southwestern Bell," Felde said.

The Kansas Corporation Commission is required to rule on the telephone company's requested rate increase by Dec. 31, Gregg Svoboda, district staff manager of community relations for Southwestern Bell, said. The increase will be put into effect as soon as possible after that date, he said.

Housing, however, needs answers now, Felde said.

"We have difficult decisions that we cannot make without the rate information from Southwestern Bell," Felde said.

A telephone survey taken by housing last August showed that few students would be willing to pay much more for phone service. Students who are not willing to pay Southwestern Bell's increased phone rates next fall will have the option of living in a hall which has limited phone service, such as Moore and Van Zile, Felde said.

Housing officials must determine the number of students who will not want to pay the increase, then decide where in the halls to discontinue phone service. If a large number of students do not want phone service, telephones will be removed from an appropriate number of halls or hall floors, he said.

"We would have to establish an alternative communications system (such as an intercom system) for the residents who choose not to have phones," Felde said.

These decisions will take time, Felde said, and housing contracts must be issued Jan. 1.

"We are virtually at a standstill until we get a cost decision from Southwestern Bell," Felde said.

Philosophy scholarships available

The Department of Philosophy has several $250 scholarships available to award in the spring semester. Interested philosophy majors should submit application letters stating why they deserve a scholarship, including overall grade point average, grades and courses taken in philosophy.

The application should be addressed to the Department of Philosophy, Eisenhower Hall.

Congressman to speak Nov. 28

Congressman Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., an expert on the Middle East, will speak at a University Convocation at 10:30 a.m. Monday, Nov. 28 in McCain Auditorium.

Solarz, who has represented the 13th District in Brooklyn, N.Y. since 1974, will speak on "U.S. Foreign Policy Perspective." He will also lead a question-and-answer session with students at 1 p.m. in the Little Theatre.

Solarz has used his congressional seat as a forum for focusing attention on the plight of Syrian Jews and has introduced legislation requiring all schools to teach youngsters about the Holocaust. In 1979, he was appointed a member of the President's Commission on the Holocaust.

He is a strong supporter of human rights and the plight of refugees throughout the world.

Senior to attend political gathering

The College of Arts and Sciences is sending Steve Bellis, senior in history, to West Point to attend the 35th Annual Student Conference on U.S. Affairs this week.

The theme of the conference is "The Politics of U.S. Foreign Policy: Domestic Constraints, National Interests and International Challenges."

Undergraduates from around the country will discuss major issues of American foreign security and policy. All qualified members of the conference will attend sessions featuring scholars and governmental decision makers. Student round tables and informal social events will complete the conference.

College to honor prep seniors

Outstanding seniors from all Kansas high schools are being invited to visit the College of Engineering on Dec. 3 and 4.

The visit is part of a new program to recognize top high-school seniors interested in engineering.

Those attending are guaranteed a scholarship should they enroll in engineering at K-State. The scholarships range from $100 to full tuition and books.

Professor commands reserve corps

Al Keithley, associate professor of regional and community planning, assumed command of the Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 15 in Kansas City in October.

As commander of Civil Engineer Corps in the U.S. Naval Reserve, Keithley is responsible for a unit composed of 13 detachments in Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and South Dakota.

Journalism honors 75 years

By The Collegian Staff

Harry Marsh, head of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, announced plans Wednesday for the 1985 celebration of the 75th anniversary of the founding of K-State's journalism department.

Marsh spoke to approximately 25 faculty and area communicators in the Union about the department's plans for the anniversary.

The department was founded in 1910 and is the third oldest school or journalism department in the Big Eight Conference.

Anniversary celebration plans call for publishing a souvenir anniversary publication about the journalism department, acting as host for Kansas media conventions, encouraging media interest in and support for the department and sponsoring in the fall of 1985 a panel discussion by media personnel of national prominence, as of yet unnamed.

An advisory council of 12 K-State alumni who are mass communications professionals in Kansas was established over a year ago to help plan for the anniversary.

The number of journalism students has increased from 381 majors in 1973 to 678 in 1983, or close to 100 percent, Marsh said. The faculty has grown from 12 to 15 members during the same time, Marsh said, which is a 25 percent increase.

Department changes name

By The Collegian Staff

The College of Architecture and Design has announced a department name change.

The Department of Pre-Design Professions will now be known as the Department of Environmental Design. James Jones, department head, said the new title better serves the department.

"The department was organized about 10 years ago. The name that was recommended then was environmental design, but the University of Kansas already had a degree-granting program entitled environmental design.

"Ours is not a degree-granting program, so we thought that it would be confusing for the two schools to use the same title," Jones said.

Because KU no longer offers the environmental design degree, Jones said the K-State department will now be referred to by the name it originally intended using.

Blank grade proposal fails in Senate vote

By The Collegian Staff

Faculty Senate voted down at its Nov. 8 meeting a proposal that calls for automatically changing a blank grade to an "F."

Richard Gallagher, senate president and professor of electrical engineering, said the proposal was voted down with a recommendation to refer the motion back to the Academic Affairs Committee for additional study.

"The proposal was voted down rather resoundingly because it did not cover all of the possibilities," Gallagher said.

Gallagher said one of senate's major concerns was that it was inappropriate for a secretary in the records office to issue an academic grade by changing the blank grade to an "F."

"An 'F' is an evaluation of academic performance," Gallagher said.

Another senate concern was that it is possible for a student to be listed on a final class roll when the student was never enrolled in the class or never believed he was enrolled in the class, he said.

One suggestion senate made to the committee, Gallagher said, was to establish some means of notification to the student and the instructor of who is enrolled in the class prior to the final exam.

Senate also suggested establishing an alternate grade, such as an "N," to indicate the student was enrolled in the class but did not receive a grade for some reason.

Aide admits emergency rule had small impact in Grenada

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — When Sir Paul Scoon assumed control of Grenada's government following the U.S.-led invasion, he issued a proclamation granting police sweeping emergency powers, banning public meetings and imposing a nighttime curfew.

"But the phrase 'emergency powers' didn't mean a thing," says the new legal adviser to Scoon and the newly formed Advisory Council which will govern the tiny Caribbean spice island until elections can be held.

"They (the powers) were only temporary and not really enforced," said Anthony Rushford, the English lawyer hired through the British Commonwealth to advise the new civilian administration in Grenada, a former British colony and a Commonwealth member.

Government documents indicate that when Scoon proclaimed a state of emergency on Nov. 4, a set of regulations was published by the Government Printing House outlining his powers and broadcast by Grenadian radio.

"The Governor General was only trying to prevent any potential danger to security," said Rushford, a constitutional law expert who drafted the constitution under which Grenada gained independence in 1974.

"Arresting persons without necessarily bringing them to trial will not be continued any longer than necessary."

He said he thought this detention would last only another week or two. But neither Rushford, Police Commissioner Patrick MacLeish nor individual members of the Advisory Council could say how many arrests had been made by police under the emergency edict.

At the time of the invasion, about 100 political opponents of Marxist Prime Minister Maurice Bishop's were in prison. Bishop was killed Oct. 19 following a coup by more militant members of his government. The invasion occurred six days later.

The U.S. Embassy said Tuesday the military prisoner-of-war camp at Point Salines had processed 530 Grenadians and 600 Cuban prisoners since the Oct. 25 invasion and will be dismantled.

Embassy spokesman Jim Dandridge said the Cubans were sent to Havana while all but 40 of the Grenadians were released. Those 40 were turned over to Grenadian authorities and sent to Richmond Hill Prison in St. George's.

Rushford and the Council's temporary chairman, Nicholas Braithwaite, a former chief education officer in Grenada, indicated that the panel would be considering the possibility of continuing, modifying or eliminating the emergency powers in the next few days.

"There is bound to be an element of political tension during a situation such as this," said Rushford. "Some people may want not to cooperate with the civil government, and these would certainly be picked up."

He said the temporary restraint on public gatherings was considered necessary at the time it was issued but may no longer be valid.

And he indicated the nighttime curfew "was simply an exhortation by the Governor General: 'Please stay off the streets.' It was never enforced. It was never meant to be."

The informal curfew's hours were from 8 p.m. to 5 a.m., but they were ignored by virtually everyone who had a need to be out at night.

Five of the nine members of the new Council were sworn in Tuesday at Government House, Scoon's residence. Scoon plans to hold elections in about six months.

A White House task force arrives in Grenada Thursday to discuss long-term, economic aid.

American ambassador Charles Gillespie, who attended the swearing-in ceremonies with the U.S. military commander, Maj. Gen. John Farris, was asked whether he was concerned that there would be civil rights abuses during the interim period before free elections and before courts resume operation.

"I just have to say that everything is being done in accordance with Grenadian process under the Grenadian constitution."

Braithwaite and Rushford indicated that complaints of civil rights abuses would be taken up by the Council which would review each individual case of any Grenadians taken prisoner during the invasion.

Braithwaite acknowledged during Tuesday's ceremony that there might be some trepidation among citizens over the interim Council's forthcoming actions.

He said that since the Council members are not elected, "There are likely to be doubts, suspicions or fears about how we will perform."

But he asked them to understand that the Council members were only acting for the benefit of the country for a limited period until the new government can assume power.

Players' presentation of musical slated to open in McCain tonight

By The Collegian Staff

The Broadway musical, "A Little Night Music," will open at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium. Presented by the K-State Players, the musical is a joint production of the speech and music departments.

"A Little Night Music" was one of the most popular productions in the early 70s. Stephen Sondheim wrote the music and lyrics for the musical. Sondheim is a well-known composer and lyricist for stage shows. He is often equated with such distinguished songwriters as Cole Porter, Irving Berlin and George M. Cohan.

Set in Sweden during the early years of the 20th century, the musical is centered around a scandalous, romantic weekend in the country.

One unique aspect of the musical is that all the songs are in waltz time.

In a review of "A Little Night Music," Clive Barnes of the New York Times said, "The music is a celebration of three-four time, an orgy of plaintively memorable waltzes, all talking of past loves and lost worlds."

Critic Emory Lewis of The Record said, "Who else would think of rhyming 'cigar butt' with

'he was bizarre, but...' He (Sondheim) brings his full talent to bear on two or three songs which make for near-perfect musical numbers."

The musical is an adaptation of Ingmar Bergman's classic Swedish film, "Smiles of a Summer Night." Bergman is considered one of the world's foremost cinematographers.

The musical will be presented through Saturday night. Tickets are $3.50 for students and $4.50 for the general public. Balcony seats vary from $3.50 to $2. Tickets may be purchased at the McCain Box Office from noon to 8 p.m.

Greyhound remains strikebound

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Greyhound prepared to resume limited bus service Thursday as talks between the strikebound carrier and its unions remained deadlocked Wednesday with the nationwide walkout entering its third week.

Meanwhile, two Greyhound buses on training runs were involved in accidents that left one person dead and two others injured. One of the collisions was triggered by a striking employee, authorities said.

"Tell Mom not to go down and buy a ticket," chief union negotiator Harry Rosenblum said when asked about the prospect of a settlement after a half-hour session with company negotiators. He declined to comment on the contents of the talks.

A Greyhound spokeswoman said earlier a settlement did not appear near in the talks with the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions.

Rosenblum and another union official had entered the company team's room at the hotel negotiating site about two hours after chief federal mediator Sam Franklin carried a sheaf of papers from the company team to the union delegation.

Asked whether the papers he carried were a company contract proposal, Franklin said, "We have things to discuss, let's put it that way."

Jim Hayes, a member of a union council from Omaha, Neb., said the 16 members of the 31-member council needed for a quorum had arrived Wednesday. A quorum could accept a contract, pending a vote by the rank and file, Hayes said.

Railroading the ERA

The failure of the revived Equal Rights Amendment may not have been due to a lack of support for the amendment itself so much as the way it was railroaded through by House Speaker Tip O'Neill.

With 1984 an election year, O'Neill brought it to a vote to show women's groups where their congressmen stood on the issue. He allowed only 40 minutes of debate on the issue. Considering the speed at which Congress works, this is hardly enough time to even give something proper introduction.

The history of the ERA is a record of shoddy and unfair attempts at passing it. When it was taken to the states in 1972, it was not ratified by enough states to make it law. So at the end of the seven-year period, a three-year extension was granted to it. Yet the legitimacy of this extension remained questionable.

If the ERA had been ratified in the necessary number of states during the extension, it would have been open to attack from another angle as well. During the time lapse, many states which had previously ratified the amendment had since changed their views about, yet were not allowed to repeal their approvals.

Paul Hanson, Editor

The United States has been unfair to women, and there are still many areas which need to be strongly dealt with concerning equal rights for all people. But this unfairness does not justify the cheap methods Congress has used in its attempt to get the ERA passed into law.

We need the ERA, as well as an entire change of attitude toward women's rights. But this will have to come through fair proceedings of the legislature, not through hasty election year pushes. In the end, O'Neill's attempt will likely only turn more people away from the ERA. The vote accomplished nothing except to waste time and money by considering something which people knew would not pass.

We believe in the need for an amendment mandating equal rights for women. But we also believe it should be passed properly, after fair debate and consideration, through the constitutionally established procedures, with the support of two-thirds of the Congress and two-thirds of the states. That support has evidently been lacking, thus the ERA's earlier failure. Hurry-up election year tactics are not likely to garner much additional support.

The right to protest

What would happen if Student Senate passed a bill to abolish all greek housing at K-State? Imagine what would happen if the University administration said it was going to turn the international student center into an art gallery. What if the Kansas Legislature decided that all teachers at K-State would be paid only minimum wages?

What would happen? Protests. Many, many protests.

So, who says we have an apathetic campus?

Being a part of the United States and as state property, K-State has been a forum to various protests and demonstrations throughout its history. And every year students are the audience for groups or individuals making a scene.

Two locations on campus are free speech areas. The most popular is the area between Seaton Hall and the Union. The other is near Farrell Library. This means anyone can demonstrate there without going through the red tape.

At noon Wednesday, a demonstration was held protesting U.S. intervention in South America. One speaker said we students are apathetic. He said that American people really don't care — that was his opinion.

We've seen religious, international, national and local protests.

What do they prove? Do they make you care more? Are protests for the people who are doing the demonstrations or for those being demonstrated?

Largely, it's for the demonstrators; to give them a release.

Protests are an avenue of expression for those who feel they are oppressed or have a cause. The protests draw attention to their cause and themselves, whether or not they change anything.

Nevertheless, it gives students something to do between classes. Some just watch, without expression. Some are curious and sincerely listen. Some outwardly disagree, others just snicker. Some don't care about that particular issue.

EDEE DALKE
Collegian Columnist

One thing is for sure, it breaks up the everyday monotony for us journalist-types. Thanks to Wednesday's pre-protest publicity, everyone had notebooks in hand and cameras loaded. Protests set the stage for the press. Our roving Collegian photographers are always searching for a scene. And KSDB got "the point" and were there as well. Yesterday's protest was in great timing for a photography class deadline. Actually, you could think of it as an outside press conference.

Local issues have given way to protests. In K-State's history, students made huge protests against the razing of Nichols Gym. International protests are common. When President Reagan visited our campus last year, demonstrators staked their ground. Last year two students protested against not being able to run for student body president as co-presidents.

I'm a pro-protester. But it seems that recently the demonstrations all look alike. As I heard recently, the faces remain the same; only the signs have been changed. They are, however, getting more professional in their sign-making. I'd imagine that some marketing students could make a load selling mass-produced protest signs.

But what about the things that go by unprotected? Like when tuition was increased 20 percent last semester? Not one person stood in the courtyard yelling his or her distress to the crowd. What would have the administration done if all 18,450 students would have said, "No, I'm only going to pay a 10 percent increase." What do you want to bet that the administration would have listened then?

Protests have been and always will be an extreme way of drawing attention to yourself and an issue. It's just too bad that the only way to get some things noticed is to slam it in someone's face. For whomever it satisfies, at least we have the right to demonstrate at K-State, and that's good.

But when people say we have an apathetic campus, I disagree. We might, however, have an uninformed campus, and the students are smart enough not to protest things that they, or anyone else on campus, actually know little about.

It may simply be that most students feel that there is nothing going on to get excited about. But touch someone on their home base, criticize something they believe in, or take away their rights, and you'll get instant results.

So protest. Protest your brains out. Use your freedom to speak out when something is wrong — in your eyes. But just realize that when you protest, or see a protest, it is one view, one opinion. As they said in the demonstration yesterday — and it is a true caution — don't believe everything you read. But, just as true, don't believe everything you see.

A smoker's complaint

LEE WHITE

Guest Columnist

Look. Up on those metal stairs on the west side of Kedzie Hall. Is it a bird? A plane? An undercover narcotics officer?

Actually, it's none of the above. It's just a frustrated smoker satisfying his insatiable craving for nicotine by standing on the cold, impersonal stairs of old Kedzie and puffing away.

Virtually since the outset of the semester, I have been relegated to the steps and to public ridicule because of my pack-a-day habit.

Not because of the fact that cigarette smoke bothers people in old Kedzie anymore than anywhere else. It's because old Kedzie has been officially designated, apparently by the state fire marshal, as the building most likely to become a lasting reminder of the burned-out Nichols Gym.

Yes, that's right. Kedzie, which in its infancy housed home economics classes, has been labeled a firetrap and we smokers have been forced to seek satisfaction a block down the hall in new Kedzie or outside on the stairs.

I chose the stairs because they are closer than the ashtray at the south end of new Kedzie and because of the number of phone calls from news sources I have missed while smoking in the other part of the building.

Where I smoke isn't that much of a concern, as long as I don't smoke in old Kedzie. The real concern is that the smoking prohibition is not uniformly enforced and therefore ignored in some parts of the building.

For one thing, no signs are posted, at least on the ground floor of Kedzie. There used to be signs.

Through the infinite wisdom of some of the better (or should we say highest-paid) planners in Anderson Hall, signs delivering a simple, terse "no smoking" message were placed in old Kedzie and some other campus buildings last year.

By the afternoon of the first day the signs were in place, the simple messages had changed to such epics as "sloe gin," "no cussing" and "no thinking."

Those brilliant planners were irate. They actually thought signs with stick-on letters would be left alone long enough to get the thought across. The planners were wrong. The taxpayers got taken again.

I don't know why the signs haven't been replaced in old Kedzie. I suppose Vice President for University Facilities Gene Cross and his brain trust are working on some new, indestructible signs. Bearing in mind the earlier bungling, don't expect new signs for a while.

So what can we expect?

Well, for one, we can expect more and more people to light up in old Kedzie. And when an ashtray isn't handy, they'll use the trash cans, the floor or whatever else is handy and holds ashes and butts.

Something else to look for: offended visitors.

Imagine a visitor pulling up in front of Kedzie, sticking his visitor's pass on the rear window and ascending the stairs, cigarette in mouth.

When he gets inside, he's immediately attacked by myriad non-smokers and told to put the smoke out or get out.

He looks around for signs prohibiting smoking, then, indignantly, bellows, "Fine. I'll give that 50 grand to the PTL Club instead of this school."

Someone who doesn't frequent Kedzie might not understand that most of the people inside don't give a damn who they offend when it comes to smoking. Butt out or get out. It's doubtful that is the "Spirit of Kedzie" some alumni talk about.

Everyone knows, or should know, that smoking is hazardous to health. And, of course, where there is smoke, there is sometimes fire.

But wouldn't it be so much simpler for all concerned if the powers that be used a little discretion for a change and stopped this ridiculous ban before a real fire breaks out due to "mandated" careless smoking?

Of course it would. But to do this would require an exercise in common sense.

See you on the metal stairs, same time as usual. Wave if you like Salem Lights.

Respond to 'The Day After' Letters Policy

Editor,
This Sunday the controversial movie "The Day After" will be airing on television. The advertisers, in sponsoring the movie, are taking a risk by showing their support for the exploration of such a sensitive topic. Jerry Falwell has said the Moral Majority will boycott the products in an attempt to stifle any future sponsorship since it may move people to oppose the nuclear arms race.

I see his as a wonderful opportunity for freedom of expression. Watch the movie. If you feel its airing was in some way immoral, boycott the sponsors' products. But if you, as I, applaud their courage in the examination of such a terrible and possible scenario, then support the sponsors by buying. Money talks!

Taking foreign policy to court

WASHINGTON — Frustrated in part by Democratic quietude regarding nuclear weapons and Central America, citizens are themselves increasingly challenging U.S. foreign policy in court. The barrage of litigation is reminiscent of judicial wrangling over Vietnam. Though no outright reversal of policy may come of it, the result will be constructive.

Thirteen women, all but one British, opened the latest front Nov. 9 before a federal judge in New York City. Joined by Democratic Reps. Ron Dellums of California and Ted Weiss of New York, the women challenged the legality of U.S. plans to deploy 96 cruise missiles at the U.S. Air Force base at Greenham Common, west of London. An antagonistic Judge David N. Edelstein refused to grant the plaintiffs a temporary restraining order against deployment and agreed to hear a jurisdictional challenge Nov. 21.

The Greenham Common case follows a string of three seemingly quixotic lawsuits that have centered on Reagan administration mischief in Central America. One challenges the presence of U.S. advisers in El Salvador; the other two involve Washington's covert assistance to Nicaraguan rebels. While one case received a big boost from a federal judge in San Francisco on Nov. 3, two are now hostage to federal appeal panels.

Understandable anxiety over the course of foreign policy inspired judicial sorties by congressmen and private citizens during the Vietnam War. Orlando vs. Laird (1971) and Atlee vs. Laird (1972), like those cases pending today, essentially contested the legality of war by executive decree. Most were eventually dismissed on procedural grounds or as matters for political resolution; not one ever led to a final "guilty" verdict.

Enactment of the War Powers Act in 1973 did little to bolster the public's check on presidential war-making. The law's value has become practically illusory in the view of its sponsor, Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., who wrote recently in The New York Times Magazine, "...[w]e in Congress helped to establish the unwritten precedent whereby avoiding the War Powers Resolution's intent has become more the rule than the exception."

Nevertheless, 1978 ethics legislation has enhanced the leverage of citizens who want to take issue with errant foreign policy. This was evident in San Francisco, where a federal judge ordered Attorney General William French Smith to undertake a preliminary investigation of U.S. support for Nicaraguan rebels.

In that sense, Dellums and two co-plaintiffs — one a Nicaraguan — have sued Smith, Reagan and other administration officials for dismissing a request, submitted under the ethics law, for a preliminary investigation into possible violations of the Neutrality Act (a 1794 law that basically prohibits undeclared war).

The Justice Department had said the plaintiffs' information about domestic rebel-training camps and CIA support overseas didn't merit the possible appointment of a special prosecutor. Luckily, Judge Stanley A. Weigel found the administration's claim "unreasonable and unsupported by the record."

For Jules Lobel, the University of Pittsburgh law professor who argued against the government, Weigel's ruling fulfilled the plaintiffs' mission. "In this case," Lobel says, "the question is whether or not the president is respecting the ethics law...It raises Watergate in a foreign policy context."

"In other cases," adds Lobel, "we asked for an injunction. By asking for an investigation in this case, what I hope we've done is focus the debate on those facts that have been reported in the media...I don't know how anybody, including the attorney general, can deny those facts."

Ronald Reagan's contempt for facts has offered concerned citizens every reason to yell and scream. So has a waffling Congress, which in almost successive actions has invoked the War Powers Act (over Lebanon) and abdicated it (by giving the CIA money to topple Managua's Sandinistas). That's why the court challenges to the president's wayward foreign policy are nothing to belittle. While they may eventually falter under the pressure of politics, they'll have brought the administration to bear for its ambiguity.

Public officials should not be allowed to break the laws simply because it is their policy, or insult the public's standards of integrity.

Open admissions to remain regents' policy

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — After flirting with the idea of allowing the Kansas Board of Regents to restrict admission to state-funded universities, a legislative committee on Wednesday decided to stick with the current law which requires unlimited university access to all Kansas high school graduates.

The move to repeal the current open-admissions policy was led by Rep. Kenneth Francisco, D-Maize, who said some students at public universities in the state were not serious about their studies and were "wasting tax dollars while they play around for a year or so."

"I think we ought to allow the Board of Regents establish whatever guidelines they think appropriate for admission to state universities," Francisco told the Legislative Educational Planning Committee which has studied the policy this summer.

"Even the students feel their tuition dollars are being wasted or diluted by people not serious about school. There's a lot of them who go to college to have a good time because it doesn't cost that much. But it hurts the serious students. I'd personally like to see an entrance requirement that includes a grade-point average too."

Committee members did not agree with Francisco, however, saying that all high school graduates in Kansas, regardless of their grade point average and prep academic background, should have the opportunity to attend the public college of their choice.

"I'm against this motion because I believe every student who gets a high school diploma should be allowed to go to any state-supported university," said Rep. Don Crumbaker, R-Brewster. "I just don't think it's right to limit it."

The motion to recommend the 1984 Kansas Legislature repeal the open admissions law failed on a voice vote with only Francisco and Sen. Joe Harder, R-Moundridge, voting in favor of the change.

The action capped two days of hearings that were highlighted by the testimony Wednesday of John Green, president of Washburn University in Topeka, who said the University of Kansas should be designated the "flagship school of the state" and admission to the school should be strictly limited.

Green outlined a plan to the committee that called for the state's community colleges, which are two-year institutions, to continue to have an open-admissions policy and accept any Kansas resident who graduates from high school. However, Green said entrance to KU, and possibly other of the six Regents universities, should depend upon academic performance and other qualifications.

Green said that if the Regents would adopt entrance requirements system-wide, the quality of education at the schools would improve while reducing the cost of education to the state.

On Tuesday, Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Regents, told the committee that educators have grown "soft" and no longer demand enough work of students. Koplik challenged state lawmakers to display "vision" and develop a five-year plan to improve the Kansas school system.

"Our system is sound, it's not that bad," Koplik said, renewing an earlier request for tougher curriculum in elementary and secondary schools. "We'll be prepared for tomorrow, but we will not be prepared for 15 years from now."

"In the last 15 to 20 years our expectations have grown soft. We need to strengthen our secondary school curriculum for everyone, not just those students going to college."

Concerned parents, teachers prepare for 'The Day After'

By The Associated Press

These days before "The Day After" have thousands of teachers and parents across the nation preparing for the fallout from a TV movie about nuclear war that they say could trigger nightmares, depression and hopelessness in young children.

The film, to be telecast at 7 p.m. CST Sunday on ABC, depicts in graphic detail what might happen in the days before, during and after a nuclear strike on Kansas City, Mo. In one scene, a class of grade-school children is irradiated, their bodies turning into glowing skeletons.

The network's last-chance warning, "parental discretion is advised," is not enough for school officials who have previewed the film. They are sending notes home to parents, consulting psychiatrists and setting aside class time Monday morning for discussions of the film.

"To a person we found it powerful, gripping, graphic and depressing," the board of the National Association of Independent Schools said in a letter to school principals, many of whom forwarded the letter to parents.

School officials and psychologists worry the movie will tap into anxieties children already have about nuclear war, fears of being separated from parents and the likelihood that "survivors" would die a slow, painful death by radiation poisoning.

Most psychiatrists and school officials agree that children under 12 should not see the film, and those aged 13 to 17 should see it only with their parents. Young children could be left with "some very, very serious terrors" because the movie "personifies the fear of nuclear war," said JoAnne Troxel, a teacher in Bozeman, Mont.

Parents also are being urged to discuss the movie with their children afterward. "There's nothing worse than an unexpressed fear," said Harry Chaucer, a teacher at Champlain Valley Union High School in Vermont who plans to discuss the film with his class Monday.

Administrators with the Dallas Independent School District saw the film and called principals to alert them that students might have questions. Officials in Oakland, Calif., Omaha, Neb., Louisville, Ky., and dozens of other school districts advised parents not to let young children watch it alone.

"Very few children would be able to cope with (seeing) tragedy of this kind without counseling," said Glen Hankins, of Oregon's Bethel School District.

But Anthony Alvarado, chancellor of New York City public schools, warned in a memo to principals: "Adults are likely to be struggling with their own feelings about the movie, (and) they may find it hard to help youngsters deal with their fears."

Some school officials aren't worried. "As far as I'm concerned it's just another movie at this point," said James Cariddi, principal of Northeast Junior High School in Kansas City, Mo.

The Roman Catholic archdiocese in Philadelphia suggested that pupils in its 276 elementary schools not watch the movie alone.

ABC cut a scene showing a child having a nightmare about nuclear war because a psychologist advised it would be too upsetting to children.

But Dr. Robert Jay Lifton, a professor of psychiatry at Yale University, said any child who has a strong desire to see the film should be allowed to.

Educators for Social Responsibility, an anti-nuclear group composed primarily of teachers, has organized seminars this week for teachers and parents to talk about "The Day After."

The National Education Association issued a "parent advisory" for the first time in its history, suggesting questions for discussion after the movie. Among them: "What can all of us do to help prevent nuclear war?"

Chuck Smith, a human development specialist at Kansas State University, suggested a way to handle children's questions.

"Even if a child says, 'We're going to have a war,' a parent should respond with something like, 'I know you're worried about that, but if we all work for peace then we can stop war,'" Smith said.

"A comment like, 'Don't worry about it' only frightens children and dampens their willingness to talk about their fears," he added.

Judge orders mistrial after killing of witness

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A judge Wednesday declared a mistrial in the trial of a man accused of a Harlem street murder after a key witness who was identified in court two days ago was murdered.

Acting Supreme Court Justice Myriam Altman declared the mistrial because she determined jurors had seen news reports about Monday's killing.

Within hours after prosecutors reluctantly identified the witness, he was slain "execution style, with two bullets in the back of the head," said prosecutor Stephen Saracco.

"We thought she was wrong" in ordering release of the name of witness Bobby Edmonds, 39, a junkie and ex-convict, said District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau.

"Every defendant in a criminal case has a right to confront his accusers," said James Merberg, attorney for the man who had been scheduled to go on trial.

Saracco said Edmonds had told authorities he saw the defendant,

Nathaniel Sweeper, and two others murder a man on a Harlem street corner in October 1982.

Saracco testified about Edmonds' alleged revelations at a hearing Altman called Wednesday afternoon after declaring the mistrial. The hearing was to determine whether Edmonds' earlier grand jury testimony could be used at Sweeper's new trial.

Sweeper, 23, was arrested last April and charged with killing McKinley Freeman, 37, of Newark, N.J.

Woman protests tax reevaluation

NEWPORT, R.I. — Janet Auchincloss, the mother of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, has gone to court to protest the tax revaluation on her Newport mansion.

Mrs. Auchincloss was among seven plaintiffs filing suit in Superior Court. Among the others were Martha "Sunny" von Bulow, who remains in a coma brought on by apparent insulin overdoses. Her husband, Claus von Bulow, was convicted of attempting to murder her. A guardian represents her in the suit.

"These particular clients feel they have been overassessed," said their lawyer, William Corcoran.

The 1982 revaluation saw most property assessments in Newport rise some, as much as four times. The Auchincloss property was taxed at $26,146, up from $16,367 with assessments rising from $223,000 to nearly $1.4 million.

The von Bulow tax bill was $29,117, up from $24,838. Assessments rose from $278,400 to over $1.4 million.

Man wins racial discrimination suit

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A radio newsman who claimed he was fired because he was white has won a $173,000 judgment from a Jackson County jury.

Joe Vaughan, 35, claimed WDAF radio was under pressure to hire more blacks when it fired him in 1979. The station gave false reasons for his firing in a letter issued after the termination, said G. Stephen Long, attorney for Vaughan.

The attorney for Taft Broadcasting Co., owner of WDAF, said the verdict reached Monday would be appealed.

"We feel there's substantial error in the record," said Glenn E. Bradford.

Vaughan, who now is news director at KLWN in Lawrence, Kan., said he was fired after the Federal Communications Commission and the Missouri Commission on Human Rights issued a report in late 1978 alleging minorities were under-represented at Kansas City and St. Louis broadcasting stations, according to Long.

A black newscaster was hired to replace Vaughan, according to the suit.

Taft Broadcasting had said Vaughan was fired because he failed to respond adequately to emergencies and because his voice did not have a satisfactory sound on the air, said Bradford.

M-A-S-H star shares views at BYU

PROVO, Utah — Actor Mike Farrell, the clean-cut B.J. Hunnicut of TV's "M-A-S-H," says Brigham Young University asked him to keep his political views to himself when it asked him to speak here.

"My response was that I would rather not come. I said I would not speak at the university on those grounds. I was then re-invited," Farrell said Tuesday night before about 3,000 students at the Mormon Church school.

"I feel strongly as a celebrity that I have much to share," Farrell has visited refugee camps in Cambodia and Honduras and is the American spokesman for Concern, an international refugee agency based in Ireland.

He denounced Reagan administration policies in Central America, saying "the United States is dictating to the Salvadoran government what it can and cannot do. The people of El Salvador understand the current administration is trying to murder them."

He predicted that "unless there are talks in Washington in the next 18 days, the Reagan administration will send troops into El Salvador."

He told the students they should be involved and informed. "I'm not going to tell you what to do, but do something. You are Christians. You have beliefs and they need to be acted upon," he said.

Concert chances dwindle for next semester

By WAYNE PRICE Collegian Reporter

Because of low ticket sales for the last two Union Program Council concerts, the possibility of a concert next semester is doubtful.

Barbara Burke, UPC adviser, said that at the time she put in an offer with a concert agent to book the Stray Cats she thought there would be no problem in selling the 4,800 tickets necessary to break even.

Similar optimism preceded the Ronnie Milsap concert, but as a result of low attendance at both concerts, Burke said, "we lost an awful lot of money."

The Stray Cats performed in a Homecoming concert Friday in Ahearn Field House before a crowd of approximately 3,200 people. The Ronnie Milsap concert attracted about 3,500 people on Parents' Weekend Sept. 30.

The total loss from the Stray Cats concert will not be known until the facilities bill arrives within the next two weeks, Burke said, but total loss from both concerts is estimated to be $30,000.

Burke said she is doubtful that enough funds will be available next semester to risk bringing in another band.

Because the Stray Cats have sold out concerts on both coasts, Burke said, little monetary risk was thought to be involved.

"We took a chance, we took a risk and we blew it. We didn't make what we thought we were going to make," she said.

Part of that risk, Burke said, was the hope that the concert would draw an audience not only of K-State students, but also Manhattan residents, Fort Riley personnel and University of Kansas students.

That hope, in addition to "excellent feedback" she said she received from various students, provided ample reason to take the risk.

Burke said that during the 1982 fiscal year, UPC made $13,000 from the Chicago concert, but the Joan Jett concert last spring resulted in a loss of $8,000.

Burke said she hopes future UPC programs can make up for the recent concert losses.

UPC conducted a random telephone survey of students last year, she said, that showed the two most-requested bands to be Journey and the Police.

"We're not going to get the Police here," Burke said. "That is one of the important things we have to get across. Right now we only have a field house to work with."

Enticing a band to the area is difficult because K-State currently does not offer a good auditorium to perform in, a good past record of successful concerts or a popular location to attract a major band, she said.

Most bands want a percentage of the concert's gross revenue and besides the Chicago concert, UPC's record does not reflect a promising gross, she said.

Burke said the Kansas City-based band Shooting Star does not have the potential to draw a major concert audience of 10,000 people. The 1981 Shooting Star concert in McCain Auditorium did not sell out, she said.

The best chance now to ensure a successful concert would be to engage the services of an outside promoter, Burke said, but that presents drawbacks.

"They're (promoters) going to look at our past shows and are going to think we're not a real good market for major concerts," she said. "I don't even know if big name acts would take a chance here."

Jailed broadcaster discloses financial affairs

By The Associated Press

CIMARRON — A controversial broadcaster serving a 30-day sentence for contempt of court in one county erased a contempt citation pending against her in another county Wednesday by answering questions about her financial affairs.

Nellie Babbs answered the questions of Gray County Attorney Curtis Campbell, who was trying to collect more than $4,000 in back taxes owed on KTTL-FM broadcasting equipment located in Gray County.

The Dodge City station is jointly owned by Mrs. Babbs and her husband, Charles Babbs. However, Babbs was given temporary control of KTTL on Tuesday after he filed suit to dissolve the partnership with his wife. He said he had left his wife of 17 years in September because of disagreements over KTTL programming.

After the hearing Wednesday for Mrs. Babbs, Associate Circuit Judge Jay Don Reynolds tacked on an additional $600 to the amount owed by the Babbses for the costs incurred by Gray County officials in trying to collect the money.

Reynolds said he also ordered personal property turned over to Gray County, including three handguns and two .22-caliber rifles. Mrs. Babbs said the guns and other property were at the radio station when she last saw them.

The couple's license for KTTL-FM has been challenged before the Federal Communications Commission because of programming against blacks and Jews and in favor of the right-wing, anti-tax group, the Posse Comitatus.

In May, the Black Media Coalition asked the FCC not to renew the license of the station because its "broadcasts urged listeners to take the names of local Jews and go kill them."

U.S. Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., also has urged the FCC to revoke the Babbses' license.

A Dodge City-based group called Community Service Broadcasting has filed an FCC application to take over KTTL's frequency.

Mrs. Babbs was ordered to appear in court Wednesday after she failed to appear for earlier hearings on the overdue taxes. Babbs was not in contempt because he appeared at an earlier hearing, Reynolds said.

Mrs. Babbs answered questions about her income and personal finances in a lengthy afternoon session, qualifying most of her answers because her husband had won temporary control of the radio station in a court order.

Mrs. Babbs said at the hearing that advertising revenue had fallen off at the station because of the controversy swirling about it. She said contributions mailed to the station provided most of its operating funds.

After the hearing, Mrs. Babbs returned to the Ford County Jail, where she is serving a 30-day sentence imposed Tuesday by Magistrate Judge Pauline Schwarm.

Mrs. Babbs was arrested Tuesday on warrants dated Feb. 5 and Aug. 30, charging she failed to make court appearances for explanations of why she had not paid a judgment issued in a Dallas County, Texas, case against the station.

Cypriot leader rejects use of force

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — President Spyros Kyprianou on Wednesday ruled out the use of force to reunify Cyprus, but Greek and Turkish troops were reported on alert after the Turkish-occupied sector of the island declared itself independent.

In New York, a U.N. Security Council was called for Thursday to consider a British resolution condemning the secession of the Turkish Cypriots.

But Cyprus' foreign minister, George Iacovou, said he wanted a stronger complaint against Turkey for its role in the matter. He said a group of countries including Cuba and India was working on one.

Turkey, which invaded the long-disputed Mediterranean island in 1974, has 25,000 troops in the newly declared Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus — sent nine years ago, ostensibly to protect the rights of Cyprus' ethnic Turkish minority.

In Athens, Greek government spokesman Dimitrios Maroudas told reporters the Socialist government was "not contemplating to declare a mobilization or send warships to Cyprus" in reaction to the Turkish Cypriot move.

Military sources in Athens said army reservists in specialized units have been called up for duty along Greece's northern border with Turkey.

The sources, who requested anonymity, said "a number of military personnel have been placed on partial alert."

Turkish troops also were reported on alert.

Kyprianou blamed the new Cyprus crisis on the Turkish military government, which recognized the new state after an emergency Cabinet meeting in Ankara.

Authorities have closed the only crossing point on the heavily fortified "green line" dividing the Greek and Turkish sectors of Nicosia.

But there was a remarkable lack of tension along the frontier.

Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot soldiers sunned themselves in the warm autumn weather outside their concrete bunkers in full view of each other across a narrow no man's land.

Both Greece and Turkey are members of NATO.

Quaalude manufacturer to halt production

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A company that is the only legal manufacturer of Quaaludes in the United States said Wednesday it will stop producing and selling them because of diminishing sales and a bad reputation associated with the often counterfeited sedatives.

Barry R. Edwards, director of regulatory compliance for Lemmon Co. of Sellersville, Pa., said officials of the Food and Drug Administration and the Drug Enforcement Administration were surprised when the manufacturer announced its decision.

Deputy DEA administrator Gene Haislip said the decision coincides with his agency's successful crackdown on illicit trade in Quaaludes from domestic and foreign sources.

Haislip said DEA's drug abuse warning network, which receives reports of injuries and deaths from selected drug treatment centers nationwide, recorded 526 reports involving Quaaludes in September 1982, compared with 800 reports a year earlier and 1,040 reports in September 1980.

The Lemmon Co. statement cited an "increasingly adverse legislative climate surrounding the product and the resulting negative publicity about our excellent company" as the chief reason for its decision.

"Widespread availability of counterfeit methaqualone tablets and the illegal action of 'stress clinics' has led to the abuse of the drug and detracted from its legitimate uses," the statement said.

Edwards, the company official, acknowledged that diminishing financial returns also was a factor. The FDA and DEA have steadily reduced the permissible quota of Quaalude production in recent years.

The company will discontinue production of the drug immediately. Distribution will continue until Jan. 31, 1984, giving physicians and patients a chance to switch to other products.

Put Yourself In This Picture...

If you're interested in a rapidly growing and increasingly dynamic profession, dental hygiene may be the field for you. Service to mankind is the primary purpose of health professions, and the dental hygienist with a bachelor of science degree may accomplish this goal through a variety of challenging and rewarding professional opportunities. Dental hygienists are distinctive members of the dental health team. They, along with dentists, are the only ones licensed to provide direct patient services.

The University of Missouri-Kansas City provides an avenue for you to become a licensed dental hygienist. The program prepares you to perform professionally in private dental offices or to hold responsible positions in community health program planning, institutionalized patient care, or research.

The Division of Dental Hygiene is part of the UMKC School of Dentistry located on "Hospital Hill" adjacent to the UMKC Schools of Medicine and Nursing, Truman Medical Center, Children's Mercy Hospital and Western Missouri Mental Health. The integrated educational opportunities are challenging and the rewards for a dental hygienist with a baccalaureate degree are plentiful.

AT&T forecasts increase in stock dividends

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its Bell companies, which will become independent Jan. 1, on Wednesday predicted their financial performance next year would allow them to slightly increase the stock dividends now paid by AT&T.

On a consolidated basis, AT&T and the Bell companies said they would make first-quarter dividend payments equivalent to $1.365 for each AT&T share before the breakup. That compares to the $1.35 per share now paid each quarter by AT&T.

All but one of the companies, filing their long-anticipated financial projections with the Securities and Exchange Commission, predicted total operating revenues would actually decline in 1984, however.

The depressed earnings projections were blamed in part on the fact that the Federal Communications Commission has delayed until next April a system of access charges to be paid by telephone customers. The FCC's access charges had originally been scheduled to take effect Jan. 1.

The parent AT&T, which is breaking itself apart to comply with a government antitrust settlement, projected 1984 revenues of $56.54 billion and earnings of $2.1 billion, or $2.02 per share on the year. By comparison, assuming the breakup had already occurred, the company said its revenues for the 12 months ending June 30 totaled $67.6 billion and its earnings $7.2 billion.

All seven of the new regional Bell companies projected 1984 revenues of at least $7.4 billion. Net income for the regional companies was projected to range from an estimated $828 million to an estimated $1.2 billion for 1984.

Separately, AT&T's board of directors also announced it would pay its last regularly quarterly dividend for the consolidated Bell System of $1.35 per share on Feb. 1, 1984, to shareholders of record Dec. 30, 1983.

AT&T is giving up roughly three-fourths of her $156 billion in assets and about two-thirds of her 1 million employees to the seven regional Bell System companies. Under the antitrust settlement, AT&T is being allowed to retain its Western Electric Co. manufacturing arm, the Bell Laboratories and its long-distance and international operations. The seven regional firms are retaining the Bell System's local telephone networks, the Yellow Pages and other local operations such as mobile telephones.

The detailed financial statements filed Wednesday are required by the SEC before trading can begin in the new companies' stock. Thanks to the breakup, today's filings marked the first time AT&T has ever been compelled to make financial projections for the coming year.

Under a reorganization plan approved by the Justice Department and a federal judge, existing stockholders will retain their stock in AT&T while also receiving one share of stock in each of the seven regional holding companies for every 10 shares of AT&T stock they now hold.

Thus a shareowner who now holds 10 shares of AT&T stock will end up with 17 shares of stock after the breakup.

Barring SEC objections, trading in the new stock will begin Monday on what is known as a "when-issued" basis. That means that while the transactions are binding on the buyer and seller, cash won't be exchanged until the new shares are formally issued sometime early next year.

Today's filings had been eagerly awaited by Wall Street, which has been striving mightily to predict which pieces of the Bell System will do best in the new era of independence without Ma Bell's protective umbrella. Roughly 3.2 million stockholders will be affected by the breakup, since AT&T is currently the world's largest company and its stock the most widely held of any concern.

KU officials refuse comment on illegal recruiting charges

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — School and NCAA officials refused Wednesday to confirm a published report that the University of Kansas football program has been placed on probation for two years for alleged recruiting violations.

KU officials confirmed receipt of a letter from the NCAA regarding the 1½-year investigation but said they were prohibited from commenting on the letter's contents.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association headquartered in Mission routinely refuses comment on infractions cases until the appeal process is completed.

The Lawrence Journal-World reported Tuesday that the KU football program was placed on probation for the 1984-85 and 1985-86 school years. The newspaper said it learned that KU would be barred from post-season bowls and television appearances only during the first year of probation but apparently would not be restricted in the number of scholarships it may award.

The Journal-World said it could not determine if sanctions were imposed on the KU basketball program, which also was reported to be under investigation by the NCAA.

Vicki Thomas, general counsel for the university, confirmed receipt of a letter from the NCAA "concerning the official inquiry made into the athletic program."

"NCAA regulations provide that the university has 15 days to consider that letter and make an official response to the NCAA. The regulations also provide that the university can make no official comment, in fact no comment, on the contents of the letter until after the statement has been released from the NCAA. That would occur after the university responds to the NCAA," she said.

KU Athletic Director Monte Johnson also confirmed the university's receipt of the letter, which he said apparently arrived early this week, but declined comment on its contents. "If we were to release it, we would run the risk of further sanctions or court action," he said.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association maintains secrecy on its investigations until the appeal period is over and action is final.

David Berst, NCAA director of enforcement, said the NCAA reserves the right to make the first announcement on penalties.

The NCAA inquiry into KU football started in the spring of 1982. The Kansas City Star reported last year that two football recruits who went to other schools — Jeff Smith to Nebraska and Josefatu Faraimo to Kansas State — claimed that John Hadl, a former KU assistant coach, offered them up to $30,000 to accept athletic scholarships at KU.

The Journal-World said the NCAA investigation started after Kansas was turned in for alleged recruiting violations by officials at K-State, the University of Missouri and possibly other colleges.

State to surrender roadside parks, services

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The state Transportation Department unveiled today its plan to trim rest area maintenance costs by 82 percent, a nearly half-million dollar saving, by closing 38 roadside parks, transferring control of 57 to local units of government and reducing the level of services at 20 more.

Another 44 of the areas would be maintained by the state just as they are now.

Only rest areas and roadside parks on non-interstate highways are involved, none on Interstate 70 or I-35.

The report said the affected sites "are all either obsolete or infrequently utilized by travelers or annually encumber repair and maintenance costs that cannot show to be of strong beneficial use or demand to the state highway system."

Gov. John Carlin is pleased with the study, Press Secretary Mike Swenson said. The department can begin implementing the plan on its own authority now that the governor has signed it, Swenson said.

Only if the Legislature, which convenes Jan. 9, intervenes will the plan be halted. Legislators could attempt to have bills passed blocking the closings if constituents objected, but Swenson said the decisions were made largely on the basis that there was no local opposition to the closings and transfers.

Batter means bread for producers

By ELAINE STRUTT
Collegian Reporter

Many food commodities are dipped in batter and breaded, said Frank Cunningham, professor of animal science and co-author of a new book on the subject.

Items which are commonly dipped in batter and breaded include seafood, red meat, poultry, vegetables, dairy foods and fruits.

There is a tremendous batter and breading industry in dollar amount and volume. The advantage of this process to the food industry is that the product that is marketed with batter increases profit. The U.S. Department of Agriculture permits food products to be 30 percent coating, he said.

"Coatings must make the product more attractive. It must make the food more palatable by making the product crispier, for instance. The breading also adds to the flavor and protects the product from drying out," Cunningham said.

Cunningham has been doing research on batter and breading food since 1975. His research was conducted with Darrel Suderman, who was a graduate student at the time. They entered into a five-year contract with a major food company to do research and help develop a line of retail products.

After Suderman received his doctorate in 1980, he left K-State. However, he and Cunningham had agreed to write a book on their findings on breading and batter. After four years of work, the book has recently been published by the AVI Publishing Co. in Westport, Conn.

Two editions of the book, "Batter and Breading Technology," were published. The first edition is designed for the more technically inclined reader, Cunningham said.

The second edition, "Batter and Breading," is intended for the food service industry.

"They are basically the same book, but with a different cover and title," Cunningham said.

"The technology book is directed toward those individuals in the industry dealing with the technological aspects of the business, while the other book is aimed at individuals in the institutional trade to give them a better understanding of the process of batter and breading," he said.

Each book includes a chapter containing a computer program written in BASIC language for companies operating on an automated system.

"If an automated company wants to, it can enter the programming into its computer and go," Cunningham said.

"The food processing industry today is highly automated. Food products have, in many cases, never been touched from the time the products leave the farm until the consumer buys them," he said.

The only research on batter and breading currently being done at universities is by Cunningham and his graduate students.

"We start on a project because of a demand from a company for more information," he said. "We look at the quality of the food from the sensory standpoint — look, smell, taste and texture — and how coating can improve the quality."

Court injunction prevents further FmHA foreclosures

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — State offices of the Farmers Home Administration have been ordered to comply with a temporary injunction that effectively halts the agency's farm foreclosures for the rest of the year, the Agriculture Department said Wednesday.

Charles W. Shuman, administrator of the FmHA, said notices were sent to state directors on Tuesday. Agency officials were told to "immediately cease taking any of the actions prohibited" by a Nov. 14 federal court ruling in Bismarck, N.D.

U.S. District Judge Bruce Van Sickle said a temporary nationwide injunction was in place against FmHA until he could hear arguments on a permanent injunction.

Agency officials said they understood the next hearing would be on Jan. 9 and that the temporary injunction effectively bars FmHA from proceeding against laggard borrowers at least until then.

The court order resulted from a lawsuit against FmHA by nine North Dakota farmers. Van Sickle last month granted national class action status to the lawsuit. However, the temporary injunction applies only to 44 states because similar legal action is pending in six others — Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Minnesota and Mississippi.

FmHA borrowers still must pay their bills on time and meet other conditions of their loan agreements.

Specifically, Shuman said the injunction stops the FmHA from:

— "Refusing to release the proceeds from the sale of normal income security to pay a borrower's living and operating expenses. This applies only to those cases in which a farm and home plan provided for payment of such expenses."

— "Accelerating a borrower's loan accounts" by sending notices that payments must be made by specific dates.

— "Foreclosing on real estate security."

— "Repossessing chattel security" such as machinery and other property.

— "Attempting to force a borrower to voluntarily convey any security to FmHA."

Agency officials contend that the court order will have little general impact on FmHA operations and farmers nationwide.

House backs increased wheat support

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House on Wednesday endorsed and sent to the Senate a bill sweetening the price support program for wheat growers in an effort to get more of them to cut their production and cut surpluses.

The bill, passed on a voice vote just a day after it was introduced, was seen as an effort to put pressure on the Senate to modify a wheat program announced earlier by the Agriculture Department but deemed inadequate by wheat farmers. Congress is scheduled to adjourn for the year at the end of this week.

"This is the last-ditch effort to improve the program," said Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., whose district is the nation's largest wheat-growing area. "The key is whether you have a program that will allow farmers to participate. If not, down the road we'll have wheat coming out our ears."

Rep. Fortney H. Stark, D-Calif., a member of the Ways and Means Committee, opposed the bill, saying he feared much of the money would go to "major, greedy corporate farmers."

The Reagan administration has opposed the legislation, saying it would add more than $300 million to the already high cost of federal farm programs. But the administration also has expressed concern about the admittedly low incentives in its own program for farmers to cut back wheat production. Wheat surpluses total 1.6 billion bushels, a record level.

Drafted by Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash., the bill would trim the target price for wheat — the minimum price farmers are guaranteed for their crop — to $4.38 per bushel for 1984 and 1985. Current law provides for the price to rise to $4.45 next year and $4.65 the following year. If the market price falls below those levels, the government is obligated to pay farmers the difference.

In return for that concession, farmers would be paid $3 a bushel for not growing wheat on 10 percent of their land, if they agree to idle a total of at least 30 percent of the acreage they normally plant.

And they could get government-owned grain under the "payment-in-kind" program to replace up to 85 percent of wheat that would have been grown on as much as an additional one-fifth of their land. The department's announced program uses a payment rate of 75 percent.

To make the package even more attractive to farmers, those participating in the acreage-reduction program could receive advances on expected payments under the acreage-idling program and under the target price provisions.

Land taken out of production could be used for hay and grazing, and summer-fallow wheat growers would be allowed to count fallow land toward their reduced acreage for purposes of the program.

While the administration says the program would be too expensive, the Congressional Budget Office says it actually would save money — $167 million over its two-year life, primarily because of the lower target price figures.

A similar bill has been pushed in the Senate by Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., but that measure met with a filibuster earlier from Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., because it contained an across-the-board freeze on target prices for other commodities as well as wheat.

Ex-manager pleads guilty in grain elevator scheme

By The Associated Press

IOLA — The former manager of two southeastern Kansas grain elevators was sentenced to two to 10 years in prison Wednesday for a scheme to keep the businesses afloat by manipulating their financial records.

Allen County District Judge John White imposed the sentence after Dennis Krouse pleaded guilty to two counts of making false journal entries, misdemeanor theft and destroying a check. The terms are to run concurrently.

White denied a motion for probation from Krouse's lawyer, who contended that Krouse was trying to keep his grain elevators at LaHarpe and Moran afloat despite financial problems. The judge said "criminal conduct is what was at issue here."

Investigators reported that up to $200,000 worth of commodities were missing from the business.

Krouse claimed to have repaid some of the money and Price said there is evidence of some repayment, but the county attorney said records were incomplete and it could not be determined how much money was returned.

Mahre twins prepare for 1984 winter games

By The Associated Press

COPPER MOUNTAIN, Colo. — The upcoming World Cup season figures to be the last hurrah for twin brothers Phil and Steve Mahre, two of the best ski racers ever and the backbone of the U.S. men's Alpine team.

"Skiing is still fun, but the traveling is more difficult," Steve Mahre said this week during training for World Cup competition, which begins Dec. 1 in Yugoslavia. "I have a family now, and that makes it harder. I'm looking at this year as being my last."

"It's getting old," echoed Phil. "This is probably my last year."

Men's basketball team to start season tonight

By TIM FILBY
Collegian Reporter

The K-State men's basketball team opens its season tonight at 7:30 with an exhibition game against Brandon University of Manitoba, Canada.

Brandon is playing K-State as part of a U.S. schedule that also includes the University of Nebraska and Iowa State University. Coach Jack Hartman said K-State added Brandon to its schedule after Nebraska coach Mo Iba told him Brandon needed to fill in a spot on its U.S. schedule.

Adding an exhibition game should benefit his team, Hartman said.

"Having an exhibition game puts us in a game situation that is very important going into the season," Hartman said. "They are playing in front of a crowd and against outside competition. Although the purple-white game last weekend helped us get ready to play in front of crowds, this game will help more since we won't be playing ourselves."

Hartman said his teams have played exhibitions in the past against such international teams as the Soviet Union, and although last year's team had no exhibition game, he plans to schedule more exhibition games in the future since they help his team prepare for the regular season.

Going into the contest, Hartman said his team knows little about Brandon, a team that last year compiled a 28-7 record and was ranked third in Canada. Hartman said he hoped to find out more about the team Wednesday night when Brandon plays Nebraska at Lincoln.

Brandon has four starters averaging in double figures. The team is led by 6-foot-4 sophomore John Carson who is averaging 20 points and 12 rebounds per game, and center Will Marshall, a 6-foot-8 senior who averages 18 points and 10 rebounds per contest. Brandon's guards, 6-foot-1 senior Grant Coulter and 6-foot senior Carl Roberts, are averaging 13 and 12 points per game respectively. John Bukich, a 6-foot-5 junior, rounds out the starters, averaging four points and four rebounds per game.

K-State plans to counter with a starting lineup which includes new players forward Tom Alfaro and guard Eric Watson. The two juco transfers will be joined by returning players Jim Roder at guard, Eddie Elder at forward and Ben Mitchell at center. Forwards Lafayette Watkins and Parker Laketa and guard Jonas Cody are the team's top-line reserves.

Tonight's game is not part of the regular season ticket package, and a separate admission will be charged. Tickets are $4 for adults and $2 for students.

Jamie Mock, senior in physical education, uses every bit of her 96-pound body to clean 225 pounds.

Weightlifter to qualify for nationals

By STEVEN BURNETT
Collegian Reporter

The concentration and fatigue is expressed on her face as she increases the weight that she is about to lift. Jamie Mock, senior in physical education, is a woman powerlifter.

At only 5 feet tall and 96 pounds, Mock has been surprising men and women for almost three years since she started lifting after having watched her boyfriend work out in the weight room.

"I started lifting just to get into shape, then realized it was a lot of fun," Mock said. "In 1981, K-State held its first intramural meet, and I entered for fun. I won first place and that really inspired me to keep lifting."

"In powerlifting, you compete in three different lifts — the bench press, squat and dead lift," Mock said. "The judges add the weight of the three lifts, then divide it by your body's weight to determine the winner," she said.

Mock's participation in her first state meet was unique because she was the first female to compete in her weight class — 97-pounds — and thus won first place.

"Since it was the first time any women had lifted in my weight class, all my lifts were records," she said.

In the spring of 1982, Mock qualified for national competition based on the total of her three lifts. The 556-pound total that she previously lifted easily met the 518-pound requirement set by the International Powerlifting Federation (IPF). Mock placed fifth with a 573-pound total. Mock continued last year to compete in various meets, which included another fifth-place finish at the nationals last January.

Her most recent meet was the state meet last month in Fort Scott. Like the last two years, she finished first.

The next national meet, to be held in March at Villanova University in Philadelphia, is special to Mock.

"It's the collegiate nationals, and it's the last year that I am eligible because I am a senior. I'm heading into this meet with the intent to win and set some records for K-State," she said.

Mock's workout routine depends on her meet schedule.

"I set my sights on the upcoming meet and figure out how many days I have to train," she said. "For the first three to four weeks, my workouts are based on different repetitions — maybe eight to start with — then I gradually decrease the repetitions and increase the weight."

"After those few weeks, I cut back to only three repetitions — trying to increase the weight to prepare myself for the amount of weight that I'll be lifting at the meet. Of course, it all depends on the number of weeks before the meet. Usually I try to give myself a couple of months between meets," Mock said.

Mock admitted her diet before a meet isn't exactly normal.

"Most people go on a high-protein diet, I don't. I'm a junk food junkie," Mock said. "I eat lots of hamburgers and french fries, not to mention all the Pepsi. There was a joke going around at the last meet that my diet of pickles, Pepsi and chocolate chip cookies is what got me where I am today."

Women's powerlifting got its start in 1979 and has steadily increased in popularity since then, with over 200 women now registered with the IPF. The number of participants in the sport grows every year, Mock said.

"Girls are pretty interested when they see me in the weight room," she said. "Although there are no other girls involved in powerlifting at K-State, I hope that will change soon."

"As far as I know there's only a few universities that sponsor teams. I know Purdue University is one of them. I'm hoping that K-State will sponsor a team some day, and if they did, maybe more girls would become interested," Mock said.

Basketball information

The K-State ticket office has announced that tickets are now on sale at the Central Ticket Office for men's basketball games Dec. 23 against California State University-Northridge and Jan. 4 against the University of Texas.

These games are not a part of the student season ticket package and cost $4.50 per game. Students may only purchase one ticket per game and are required to show their current fee cards.

Also, K-State opens its 1983-84 season tonight when it entertains Brandon University of Manitoba, Canada. This exhibition contest begins 7:35 p.m. in Ahearn Field House. Adults can purchase tickets for $4 and students for $2.

The K-State women's basketball team has scheduled an open house in Ahearn Field House at 7 p.m. Friday. A scrimmage will follow.

The Associated Press has released the preseason rankings for women's basketball, and the Wildcats were ranked ninth in the nation.

Women's basketball season tickets are on sale at the ticket office and the cost is $6.

High school stars sign letters of intent with KU

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — Basketball player Danny Manning, who moved from North Carolina to Lawrence after his father became an assistant basketball coach at the University of Kansas, has signed a national letter of intent with the Jayhawks.

Manning averaged 18.8 points and hit 65 percent of his free throws while leading Page High School of Greensboro, N.C., to the state title last season. His father, Ed, was hired at KU earlier this year.

The younger Manning is now a senior at Lawrence High School.

The signings of the 6-foot-10 Manning and two other players were announced as KU signees on Wednesday, the last day of the early signing period.

Antonio Campbell, a 6-foot player from Vashon High School in St. Louis, and Milton Newton, a 6-4 player from Coolidge High School in Washington, D.C., also were signed by the Jayhawks.

League MVP ignores baseball jinx

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — The sophomore jinx never bothered Cal Ripken Jr., who finished the 1983 season as the American League's Most Valuable Player.

Ripken, who played every inning of every game for the world champion Baltimore Orioles, said Wednesday he overcame the so-called jinx simply by ignoring it.

"I heard about the sophomore jinx plenty of times last winter," the 23-year-old shortstop said Wednesday after being named MVP. "I never believed in the sophomore jinx."

"I thought I would have an advantage in my second year as opposed to my first year because I knew the pitchers a little bit (better). I felt a little more confident on Day One (in 1983) instead of having to work (up) my confidence."

With Robin Yount of Milwaukee named the league's MVP last season, it was only the second time in history that different shortstops have won the award in consecutive years. Ernie Banks of the Chicago Cubs won two straight in 1958-59 and Dick Groat of the Pittsburgh Pirates followed him as National League MVP in 1960.

Ripken became the first major leaguer to win the rookie and MVP awards in consecutive seasons. Fred Lynn took both honors in 1975 with Boston. Four other players — Thurman Munson and Rod Carew in the AL and Jackie Robinson and Pete Rose in the National — have won both awards during their careers, but not in consecutive years.

Ripken's 322 points enabled him to edge teammate Eddie Murray, who received 290 in the balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. Ripken received 15 first-place votes, nine second-place votes, three thirds and one fourth-place vote.

Chicago White Sox catcher Carlton Fisk finished third with 209 points, followed by Boston's Jim Rice (150) and Milwaukee's Cecil Cooper (123).

Ripken told reporters at a Memorial Stadium news conference he could not have been named MVP had it not been for his teammates on the 1983 World Series championship team.

"You know this honor could never have been possible without the help of my teammates. I honestly believe that the MVP award should be shared among all 25 players," Ripken said.

Ripken batted .318 in 1983, with 27 home runs and 102 RBI. He led the league in at-bats (663), runs (121), hits (211), doubles (47) and extra base hits (76).

First baseman Murray hit .306 with 33 home runs and 111 RBI in 156 regular-season games.

In a statement issued through the Orioles, Murray, who is currently driving home to Los Angeles, said Ripken deserved to be named MVP.

"I feel like he deserves it, and I hope he does it again and that the Orioles win the world championship again," Murray said.

Oldies never die

Muhammad Ali did it, and now the former football great Jim Brown, a 47-year-old Hall of Fame fullback who played for the Cleveland Browns, is seriously considering a return to his well-known fighting ground.

After an 18-year absence from the sport, Brown apparently feels threatened that his National Football League career rushing record of 12,312 yards may fall to the likes of Franco Harris of the Pittsburgh Steelers or Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears.

Harris is within 588 yards of Brown's record, achieved after over nine seasons with the Browns. The Chicago Bears' Walter Payton is 1,293 yards short of Brown's record.

"I have the greatest respect for Franco Harris, but he is just hanging around to try to break my record," Brown told The Plain Dealer in Cleveland during an interview from his Los Angeles home. "Even if Franco beats my record by 500 yards, I will come back."

SEAN REILLY
Sports Editor

Brown also states that he wishes not to wait until he is 50 years old to make a comeback.

Realistically, I can sympathize with Brown. However, I, for one, hope he does not consider a comeback even at his current age of 47, let alone 50.

Why must old athletes feel they can never give up and just accept the inevitable?

This attitude is by no means a disrespect for Brown as a person, nor as a strike against his impressive past history of performance and records.

True, when Brown was involved in professional football, there was a 12-game format for the season, but now they're on 16-game.

Brown has proudly stated his accomplishments were done in nine, 12-game seasons (records set in both the 12- and 16-game seasons exclude post-season play). Harris has played in both the 12- and 16-game format, and his accomplishments also have been accumulated in 12 years, including this year.

Brown has reportedly planned to communicate with Al Davis, managing partner of the Los Angeles Raiders, to see if he would give him a chance. Davis seems the type of eccentric individual who will seriously contemplate this proposition.

Along with a schedule change in the NFL, other aspects of the game have come under change — most notably the shift in the attitudes. The public now has the prevailing attitude that most football players today are more interested in money; not the game. In the past, the football greats rarely considered money first; the game came foremost to them.

While Brown should be commended for the fact that his accomplishments mean more to him than money, he should accept the fact that his records will be broken, if not now, then later — possibly when he is beyond the age of 50.

Therefore, Brown should sit back and avoid doing anything which would tarnish his accomplishments — as in the case of Muhammad Ali. Otherwise, if Brown persists, we may see a gridiron great, who was famous for stiff-arming opponents, resort to the use of a cane to ward off defenders.

Steinbrenner agrees to drop injunction

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — George Steinbrenner, owner of the New York Yankees, agreed Wednesday to drop his request for an injunction barring baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn from investigating his behavior in last summer's "pine tar bat" incident.

State Supreme Court Justice Irwin Silbowitz said Steinbrenner did not waive his right to contest any findings by Kuhn that the Yankees boss might deem biased or prejudiced. Instead, Steinbrenner simply dropped his request for an injunction against Kuhn's investigation at this time.

Sources close to Steinbrenner have said he has expressed concern that he could be fined as much as $250,000 and suspended for his actions in connection with the controversy.

Steinbrenner was openly critical of American League President Lee MacPhail, after MacPhail overruled umpires who disallowed a two-out, ninth-inning home run by Kansas City Royals star George Brett on July 24 and called him out, ending the game.

The umpires ruled Brett had pine tar too far up on the handle of his bat when he put the ball into the seats at Yankee Stadium.

Brett's two-run homer put Kansas City ahead 5-4. But the umpires' decision gave the Yankees the game.

The Royals appealed to MacPhail, who ordered the game continued from the point of Brett's homer.

After considerable objection on Steinbrenner's part that the game should be completed after the regular season, he finally bowed to MacPhail's order. The game was completed Aug. 18 with the Royals holding their one-run lead and winning.

Steinbrenner has questioned whether Kuhn could give him an objective hearing in the matter.

Student prepares for FFA presidency

By TOM HARMS
Staff Writer

When Ron Wineinger, junior in agricultural education and agricultural economics, first joined Future Farmers of America as a freshman in high school, becoming the group's national president was only a fantasy.

But that fantasy became a reality for Wineinger Saturday during the organization's 56th annual national convention in Kansas City, Mo., when he was elected president along with five other national officers.

The FFA is a national non-profit, non-political organization for persons interested in vocational agriculture fields, Wineinger said. Membership is available from the time a person is a freshman in high school until four years after graduation.

Wineinger's new position will require him to travel across the nation as well as to foreign countries.

"Officers in the past have traveled over 42 states across the country. Also, our international experience tour this year will go to Japan, and we will travel to another country that hasn't been decided on as of yet," he said.

While traveling, Wineinger will also carry out the duties of the national president, which include meeting with members of other chapters and working with member relations, convincing sponsors to help the FFA and planning the organization's national activities.

While traveling, Wineinger will meet with a small percentage of the FFA's 500,000 members. That, Wineinger said, is what he looks forward to the most.

"I look forward to the chapter visits to the small rural schools, and meeting all the people this opportunity will give me," he said.

Ron Wineinger, national FFA president

Staff/Jeff Taylor

Wineinger will not have much time to celebrate his election. After a short visit with his parents in his hometown of Marion, he will assume his office immediately, spending two weeks in Alexandria, Va., in orientation. He will not return to Kansas until March, and only then for a brief stay.

Because his duties begin immediately, Wineinger will have to drop out of college until the spring of 1985, when his presidency ends.

"I will lose three semesters of school. You have to sacrifice time and employment, but I can think of no other experience that could match this one," he said. "I will be more than willing to make that sacrifice."

Wineinger will spend the entire year of his office on the road. He will have no permanent office and said, "My closet will be my suitcase."

"We (other candidates) had talked to past officers so we knew what was involved. I will be getting up early and going to bed late and will still have a lot to do," Wineinger said.

FFA will pay Wineinger's expenses during the year, but will not be paying him a salary.

Wineinger first began his career in agriculture in elementary school when his parents gave him a dairy cow. Since then, he and his brother have bought 160 acres of pasture land and currently have 11 dairy and 13 beef cattle.

Wineinger's brother, a high-school senior, plans to become more involved with farming, but Wineinger said he doesn't plan to.

"Right now I haven't really decided what I'm going to do. I'm looking into ag business, ag teaching or law school. But right now that is secondary," he said.

In addition to ending his presidency in one year, Wineinger will also be ending his career in FFA.

"I guess I will pick up what's left of an education. I will have four semesters left."

But, along with all the advantages Wineinger's new position will bring him, he is also aware of the disadvantages.

"One of my biggest regrets will be leaving K-State," he said, most especially FarmHouse fraternity, his residence.

Court considers ruling in Cryts soybean case

By The Associated Press

ST. PAUL, Minn. — The constitutionality of a contempt citation by a bankruptcy court was argued before a panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals today in a case involving Missouri farmer Wayne Cryts.

A federal judge had overturned a bankruptcy court's contempt conviction of Cryts, saying the bankruptcy court lacked jurisdiction to take such an action. The district court then found Cryts in contempt.

In February 1981, Cryts had removed soybeans he owned from an elevator near New Madrid, Mo., which was in a bankruptcy proceeding. He took the soybeans to another elevator, telling authorities he would leave them there.

He later removed them from the second elevator and sold them, resulting in the contempt citation.

An attorney for the trustee of the bankrupt elevator, Ben F. Arnold, argued that the original contempt conviction by the bankruptcy court should be reinstated. He said Article 1 of the U.S. Constitution, under which Congress created the court, provides the powers it needs to function, including the power to find someone in contempt.

Cryts' attorney, Thomas D. Kershaw, argued that Article 1 courts, including bankruptcy courts, do not have constitutional authority to issue contempt rulings. He also said he was appealing the district court ruling on grounds that the bankruptcy court had not adequately protected Cryts' holdings at the elevator.

Cryts has been tried and found innocent on charges of criminal contempt of court in connection with the case.

Cryts, 37, who farms 2,000 acres near Puxico in southeastern Missouri, listened to the arguments from the front row of the spectator section.

GOP leader accuses Slattery of hypocrisy

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Republican State Chairman Dave Owen Wednesday accused Democratic U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery of espousing budget reductions to lower the federal deficit but belying his words by voting to increase federal spending.

"Slattery has voted for huge spending increases in a number of federal programs, and he has even voted to create new programs," said Owen, a Stanley banker. "Yet, he continues to tell us he wants to cut federal spending. Does he think the people of the 2nd District won't look at his voting record?"

In response, Ken Peterson, Slattery's press secretary in Washington, said it was "predictable that the Republicans would make such an attack" but labeled Owen's information misleading or wrong.

"For anybody to suggest Jim's not concerned about reducing the deficits is ridiculous and just not true," said Peterson.

Owen cited Slattery's votes on five amendments last summer which he said added $20.2 billion to the federal budget.

The GOP chairman said Slattery voted June 23 against a $12 billion general budget reduction, voted July 13 to add $900,000 for a new federal housing program, voted Aug. 3 against cutting unemployment health insurance by $2.2 billion, voted Sept. 13 to increase spending for social programs by $1.6 billion and voted Sept. 21 for a $3.5 billion public works jobs bill.

Peterson said the votes cited by Owen basically were for social programs which Slattery has vowed not to reduce further until President Reagan and the congressional leadership agree on a budget cut-tax increase plan to reduce the deficits.

"Congressman Slattery has always continued to support these programs," said Peterson.

He said one vote was for energy assistance to the elderly and those on low income and the jobs bill was for a program to put those on welfare to work.

Peterson also said Owen's interpretation of one vote was in error. He said Slattery voted against the unemployment benefits bill.

University officials agree with open admissions decision

By TOM HARMS
Staff Writer

After debating whether to allow the Board of Regents to restrict admission to state-funded universities, a legislative committee voted Wednesday to stick with open admissions. Most K-State officials agree.

"I think open admissions is good. Kansas is a good supporter of education and I think it is our responsibility as a university to assist those who might not have the kind of background as they should have," said Owen Koeppe, University provost.

Rep. Kenneth Francisco, D-Maize, who led the move, told the Legislative Planning Committee some students at public universities in the state were not serious about their studies and were "wasting tax dollars while they were playing."

Koeppe said Francisco's statement was not correct.

"Good students fool around as much as the bad ones," he said. "When I was going to school some of my friends that were good students fooled around so much in their first year that their low grades made it hard for them to go elsewhere."

Bernd Foerster, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, said he did not believe "that the seriousness of the student can be determined by their grade point average. There are good high-school students that come here and play."

"Some people come in that are simply not prepared enough where they can't make it," he said.

Although Foerster agreed with Koeppe that a good student does not determine his seriousness toward school, Foerster said there should be an "extra" requirement before admission.

"The choice is not as simple as just saying to have admission requirements or not," he said. "There should be an extra requirement so the student will be successful after he is out of high school."

Foerster said K-State admission requirements should be raised by the individual colleges. He said a school-wide requirement probably would have little effect since most professional fields have admission requirements of their own.

John Dunbar, dean of the College of Agriculture, said open admission fits the provisions of a land grant college.

"We should give everyone an opportunity to make it as far as they can go," he said. "I am perfectly comfortable with open admissions."

According to The Associated Press, the two days of hearings were highlighted by the testimony of John Green, president of Washburn University in Topeka.

Green testified the state's community colleges should continue to have an open admission policy and accept any Kansas resident that has graduated from high school.

Green also recommended to the committee that the University of Kansas should be designated as the "flagship of the state," saying entrance to the school should be strictly limited and depend mostly on academic qualities.

Koeppe and Foerster disagreed with Green's remarks.

"Obviously K-State has just as much mandate in the area of research as KU," Koeppe said. "I don't think Green can be looked upon as an authority of higher education."

Foerster said different "universities have flagships of their own. What's good for one is not good for all. I don't see why K-State's standard should be lower than any others'."

State prison inmates may lose work pay

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Inmates confined to Kansas' five major penal institutions would no longer be allowed to keep the money they earn for working in prison industries and educational programs if the Legislature goes along with a proposal approved Thursday by a legislative study committee.

The interim Committee on Corrections, with only one opposing vote, endorsed a plan under which only those inmates in work release and prerelease programs and at the prison system's honor camps would be permitted to keep the wages they earn.

That pay presently ranges from 60 cents to $1.05 a day.

The committee's decision stunned David Barclay, administrative assistant to Corrections Secretary Michael Barbara. Barclay, who sat in on the committee's deliberations, said for many inmates the meager wages they receive represent the only way they have to obtain such basics as toiletries.

Even Sen. Edward F. Reilly, R-Leavenworth, who pushed for the proposal, admitted after the meeting that it may have gone a little too far, but said he agreed with the basic concept of denying inmates earning power until they prove they are "good actors" deserving of being allowed to make some money while behind bars.

The committee meets again today, and could modify the recommendation.

For one thing, under the proposal as approved Thursday, the 21 inmates at KCIL who work for Zephyr Industries during the day and return to the prison each night would not be allowed to keep the money they earn.

That work release program is generally lauded as one of the best rehabilitation tools at Lansing.

State Rep. Ambrose Dempsey, a Democrat from Leavenworth, cast the lone vote against the proposal, although Rep. Wanda Fuller, R-Wichita, the chairwoman of the panel, said she was against it. She did not vote, however. It is common practice for a committee chairman not to vote when the question is not in doubt.

Those supporting the denial of wages said they viewed it as an incentive for inmates to maintain good records while they are in prison so that when they qualify for work release programs and honor camps, or are nearing release, they can then begin to accumulate small amounts of money.

However, Barclay said the earnings represent a valuable incentive for all inmates to work and be more productive while in prison.

"It is a meager attempt to provide an incentive to work," said the corrections secretary's chief assistant.

"For those inmates who have no outside resources, it's the only way they can obtain even the most basic amenities."

Judge rules for 'Baby Doe'

By The Associated Press

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — A federal judge Thursday rejected the Reagan administration's request to see the medical records of "Baby Jane Doe," the severely disabled infant whose parents do not want her to undergo corrective surgery.

It was the first time the federal government had gone to court over the medical rights of a handicapped infant.

The judge ruled after a one-hour hearing in which the Justice Department conceded it had found no evidence that the 38-day-old infant was discriminated against during the first week of her life.

U.S. District Judge Leonard Wexler granted the motion of the child's parents and dismissed the government's request for the records.

"I feel really good," the father said. "... We are just praying that this is the end. We have been bounced around quite a bit."

Richard Rifkin, the assistant state attorney general who represented the hospital, said the decision "means...when a hospital acts appropriately the federal government will not be permitted to intrude in the operation of the hospital or the medical treatment."

Charles Cooper, a Justice Department lawyer, said the decision "could represent a major obstacle to full, vigorous investigation and enforcement of federal health regulations." The government, he said, would decide "quickly" whether to appeal.

Doctors testified earlier that without surgery the child was likely to die before age 3.

The infant has spina bifida, or incomplete closure of the spinal cord, excess fluid on the brain and an abnormally small head.

delegate Yuri Kvitsinsky in Geneva, and said the talks were continuing. Another session was set for Wednesday.

Soviet officials were noncommittal when asked if the threat to leave the Geneva talks meant a temporary walkout or a longer one.

Vadim Zagladin, a Communist Party Central Committee official, also said deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles would have a negative impact on the parallel talks on strategic missiles. But he did not say if the Soviets were threatening a walkout from the strategic arms reduction talks as well.

The last public statement by the Soviets was made by President Yuri V. Andropov late last month.

Greyhound drivers clash with police

By The Associated Press

Greyhound strikers clashed with police from coast to coast Thursday as the nation's largest bus company resumed limited service with non-union drivers. More than 100 arrests and half a dozen injuries were reported.

Most buses carried only a few passengers, but Greyhound called the turnout "encouraging." The AFL-CIO said the resumption of service was an attempt to "destroy" the union and called for a nationwide boycott of Greyhound.

The most violent outbursts were in San Francisco, where rocks and bottles were hurled at buses and workers as 300 strikers demonstrated in the rain, and in Seattle, where strikers smashed headlights, ripped wipers and mirrors from moving buses and splattered eggs and bashed their placards against the vehicles.

In Newark, N.J., about 10 pickets threw themselves onto the ground in front of a bus trying to leave Pennsylvania Station, said police Capt. Michael O'Connor.

Both the union and the company said they were far apart in negotiations, although they caucused at the same hotel in Phoenix, Ariz., across town from company headquarters. The union said Thursday it had reduced its wage and benefits demands by $60 million, but the company did not respond.

The company, which provided 60 percent of America's intercity bus service before the strike, said it would run buses in only 27 states.

Most of the arrests were in Boston, where 51 protesters were hauled in after they stood in front of the familiar 10-ton red, white and blue Americruiser buses.

Boston police spokesman Peter Woloschuk said many of those arrested appeared to be members of "outside groups," adding that authorities were trying to determine what organizations they represented. "My sense is that very few, if any of them...were Greyhound employees," he said.

One Boston policeman suffered a broken leg, another had his thumb broken and three or four others were also injured, Woloschuk said.

In Philadelphia, hundreds of strikers, reinforced by Teamsters and unionized carpenters, plumbers and local transit workers, surrounded the bus terminal, stopping buses from leaving and forcing an inbound bus to discharge its passengers several blocks away.

At the loading area, the strikers burst through a police line, surrounded a bus and refused to let it budge.

In response to the violence, Greyhound asked judges in Philadelphia and Atlanta for injunctions limiting the number of pickets. A judge in Atlanta quickly agreed, ordering no more than two pickets at each entrance to the central bus terminal. A judge in Philadelphia issued a restraining order, too, and about 45 pickets were arrested for violating it, police said.

In San Francisco, police said they were limiting the number of pickets to six.

The buses were the first to roll since Greyhound was struck two weeks ago by 12,700 bus drivers and terminal workers.

The company said its final offer before the strike included a 9.5 percent wage cut. The drivers had been making $27,000 a year.

Model train enthusiasts keep engines rolling

By NANCY MALIR
Staff Writer

The fire beneath the water tower was small, yet the ragged hobo roasting his dinner over it seemed content with its size. In the background, a defiant alley cat arched her back, hissed and prepared to defend herself against an attack by a snarling dog.

Nestled close to the track in the tiny rail yard, the scene's characters appeared unaffected by the oncoming rush of an Amtrak passenger train.

Suddenly a giant in a train engineer's cap leaped above the rustic scene. He spoke.

"If you laid 87 of our little boxcars end to end, you'd have the actual length of one boxcar," he said as he described the size of an operating HO scale modular railroad on display this week at the Manhattan Public Library. HO scale is one specific scale used to measure model railroad equipment.

The "giant" is Richard Napper, a member of the Manhattan Area Rail Joiners. The model railroad organization is displaying the model train exhibit jointly with the library.

"There are 12 modules here, built by nine individuals ranging from age 13 to 66," Napper said.

Modules are sections of a train display, that when combined form a complete unit.

Napper said that between 300 to 400 feet of track comprise the unit, which is 22 feet long and 12 feet wide. Three different trains are operated continuously on the display.

The display consists of more than train engines pulling cars across yards of track. Tiny, detailed replicas have been carefully built in order to recreate authentic rail yard scenes.

"The themes on each module are left up to the individual," Napper said.

Some of the module objects are built from kits while others are constructed from scratch — such as a cattle corral made from matchsticks, a house built from part of an orange crate, and a shredded rope piled an inch high that represents a haystack.

"Godzilla under this bridge is a favorite of the kids," Napper said as he pointed to the black ape lurking beneath a section of track.

Thirteen-year-old Mike Nelson, the youngest member to display a module, constructed a complete turntable, a switching device and engine house.

"We think he did a pretty decent job with it," Napper said.

Another module, still being built by one group member, uses broken ceiling tile held together by plaster and stained with coffee to represent a cliff near a mine shaft.

"You experiment — try something," Napper said in describing how one conceived a module plan.

He said the exhibit contains $10,000 to $15,000 worth of railroad equipment. He has four of his own modules on display, which took four years to build.

"Each of the three engines of my Frisco train is worth $100," Napper said.

Two eye-catching features of his modules are a tiny handcar that runs on its own power supplied from an even tinier engine and "Donna's Diner." The diner advertises "cold beer, hamburgers, and hot dogs" on its miniature marquee.

"I about went mad trying to build that," Napper said as he nudged the little baggage cart with its minute suitcases as it stood near the depot.

A module belonging to Don Claggett "is considered one of the best modules on display," Napper said.

This module is of a small town park scene, complete with a rotating carousel, fruit stand and a white, latticed gazebo. Off to the side, a parked patrol car actually flashes its siren.

Napper said the train display has been shown annually for the last six or seven years in November, which is National Model Railroad Month. Different module themes are used each year, he said.

The model train unit will be on display at the library through Saturday. The display will be shown in the Goodnow House Museum during the first three weekends in December.

NATO deployment threatens arms talks

By The Associated Press

The Soviet Union rejected President Reagan's latest arms reduction proposal, and a top Kremlin spokesman said Thursday his country will pull out of the Geneva arms talks if NATO goes ahead with deployment of Pershing 2 missiles.

But in West Germany, where all 108 Pershing missiles are to be sited, Chancellor Helmut Kohl said the Soviets had signaled possible new concessions at the Soviet-U.S. talks on medium-range weapons — specifically a willingness to drop their demand that British and French nuclear arsenals be included.

U.S. arms negotiator Paul H. Nitze met for 2½ hours with Soviet

He also writes a national column on school law which appears in The Community Education Journal.

MASUA chooses honor lecturers

Paul Windley, professor of architecture; Melvin Center, associate professor of biology and Dale Hawley, professor of chemistry have been chosen as lecturers for the Mid-America State Universities Association (MASUA) Honor Lecturer Program this year. The program, which began in 1958, is a talent exchange among midwestern schools, according to John Noonan, associate dean of the graduate school and MASUA coordinator. Schools in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Nebraska and Iowa participate in the program. Most of the presentations are technical seminars for which the lecturers receive a $100 honorarium and travel expenses. The program is funded through a contribution from each institution.

Students may have responsibilities

Students: be aware of your reporting responsibilities to the Social Security Administration. Failure to make timely reports can mean delays in receiving checks and could also cause overpayments to occur. Common changes that should be reported include changes in address, even if you have direct deposit; earnings that exceed the annual limit, even if you do not receive benefits the entire year; if you marry; if you leave the United States for 30 or more days; and if you cease being a full-time student. Changes can be reported to the local Manhattan office at 222 Southwind Place, phone 539-4681.

Three bills may alter SGA money guidelines

By The Collegian Staff

A trio of spending and funding bills that will have various effects on Student Governing Association policy received first readings at Student Senate Thursday night.

"These are hard, fast guidelines that senate would have to live with," Mark Terril, business senator, said about the revised SGA spending regulations. Putting the regulation additions in writing will provide consistency, he added.

Added were regulations that would not allow any SGA allocated money to be spent on "parties, social functions or banquets, including decorations and/or table arrangements," "the purchase and/or the personalizing of gifts, plaques, awards or flowers" and "clothing — with exceptions being approved by Finance Committee and Student Senate."

The exception for clothing is for clothing needed by the K-State Players, Terril said.

The revised Council Funding Policy calls for considering all councils under the policy and not just college councils. Included in the bill is the definition of a council as "a governing body which presides over two or more related organizations wishing to maintain their own autonomy."

Manhattan business women to speak

By The Collegian Staff

Three Manhattan women will speak at the Focus on Women Series at noon today. "Business Women of Manhattan" is the theme of this week's program,

Also considered was the 1984-85 Spending Policy for Councils. All three bills will receive second reading and a vote at the next senate meeting Dec. 1.

In formal action, senate approved funding of $450 to help 15 members of the K-State chapter of the Association for Student Chapters of the American Institute of Architects defray costs to attend a national convention in Atlanta during Thanksgiving break.

Another first reading was a resolution calling for senate to sponsor receptions for senate candidates next semester. According to the bill, the receptions would be established by each college but "overall coordination and oversight" would be left to senate.

Tracy Turner, arts and sciences senator, suggested the arts and sciences, business administration, and architecture and design college receptions be in the Union Courtyard around noon for the three days before the election. The agriculture reception would be in the Agriculture Reading Room, engineering reception in Durland Hall lounge and it is unsure now where education and home economics receptions would be, he said.

Anti-cult group adviser warns against mind control tactics

By MIKE HEDGES
Collegian Reporter

Mind control can make people do "the most bizarre things imaginable," said Frank Tillman, head of the Department of Industrial Engineering. Tillman spoke on mind control by cults at noon Thursday in the Catskiller as part of the Union Program Council's "Let's Talk About It" series.

Tillman, also faculty adviser for Students for Free Minds, a support group for ex-cult members and families of cult members, noted today as the fifth anniversary of the Jonestown cult tragedy, where 913 followers of the Rev. Jim Jones committed suicide by drinking cyanide-laced punch.

"What happened at Jonestown was the most public display of what mind control can do to people," he said.

Tillman said the American public became aware of how mind control affects people when 550 captured American soldiers opted to stay in North Korea after the end of the Korean War.

The soldiers were tried for treason in the United States but were acquitted when it was determined they were victims of mind control.

"It is easier today to gain mind control over a young person because there is a larger, more willing audience."

"They get you involved, keep you busy and control your thinking. Eventually, the person literally snaps. At this time, they have mind control," he said.

He characterized people under mind control as emotionless, immature, robotlike and having the "1,000 mile stare." The "stare" is when someone tries to tell them what they have been programmed to believe is wrong, and they just stare right through that person.

Tillman said cults can be defined in general terms and as destructive cults.

"Generally, any organized group of people can be termed a cult," he said.

A destructive cult is a group of people bonded together by a devotion to a person, an authoritarian leader who uses deceptive practices and psychological manipulation, Tillman said.

He said there are various ways to help somebody who is in a cult and subject to mind control.

"Sometimes, time alone will help and sometimes deprogramming works, although I'm not sure that is the best thing in every case," he said.

Tillman's daughter was deprogrammed from Maranatha, a group which has since been barred from University-approved organization status for at least one year. Tillman said his daughter related the deprogramming experience to the same feeling as waking up from a dream. The deprogramming took about 24 hours.

"She told us when she was in the group, she thought it was the happiest time of her life. But after she was deprogrammed, she realized how miserable she really was," he said.

Tillman cited a book by Robert Liften, a Yale psychologist, that outlines an eight step recipe for mind control:

— There is control of the environment. Individuals are kept busy and television viewing and reading material is censored. A fundamental part of this practice is keeping the individual at odds with parents.

— There is mystical manipulation. The group claims to have a special underlying purpose for existing, but won't reveal it to the individual until "later."

— There is a need for purity. The group convinces the individual he is unclean and unfit, and promises to help him.

— There is confession. The individual is required to share his imperfections with the group in order to establish trust among members.

— There is an aura of sacred truth. The individual must accept what the group says as the absolute truth, no questions asked.

— There is loading of the language. The group develops its own language, in order to keep the individual from thinking on his own. Idle time is spent chanting.

— There is a doctrine over the person. "The end justifies the means" is used as a way of justifying wrongs in the group. For instance, the group may say it is all right to steal money because it is the devil's money and they are returning it to God.

— There is dispensing of existence. Members of the group are regarded as "good," but non-members as "no good."

Tillman said three or four of these steps are found in most religions, but it is the degree to which they are used that concerns him.

"No organized group that does all these things can say they do them innocently and they didn't know what was happening," he said.

He also said he believes the main motivation of these cult leaders is the need to see how much power they can exercise on a group of people.

Tillman, who has talked to members of several different cults, said they tell him the money they make goes to help needy people in the world.

"There are some legitimate groups in the United States, and some that started out good have gone bad. How groups are depends a lot on how effective their leadership is," he said.

There are about 3,000 different cults in the United States at this time, he said.

Tillman stressed that educating people as to how they can fall victims to these different groups is the easiest way to keep them from doing so.

"Every Christian-quoting group is not necessarily a Christian group. Some have ulterior motives. It is up to the individual to believe what he wants to believe."

Westerners analyze Kremlin's strategy

By The Associated Press

BERLIN — Just past Checkpoint Charlie, a few feet west of the Soviet Empire, the word "Solidarnosc," or Solidarity, is emblazoned on a tall building. Every so often, someone wonders whether Russian tanks will roll across and blast it off.

Few expect an imminent Soviet invasion. But tension over NATO's imminent plans to install Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe focuses attention on how the Kremlin sees the world.

Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov says, as his predecessors did, not only that Moscow promises not to launch a first nuclear strike but also that its conventional forces are maintained for defense alone.

The danger, Western analysts say, is that Soviet strategists attach a wide range to what they consider as defense.

"The Soviets are more than defensively aggressive, but not foolhardy," said a respected Asian diplomat in Moscow. "They will not embark on something they cannot win — or with too high a cost."

For example, the Soviet military invasion of Afghanistan on Christmas Eve, 1979, was explained as a response to a plea by a friendly neighboring government.

"It's on our border," observed a Soviet journalist in conversation. "What do you expect?"

Perhaps 125,000 Afghan civilians and guerrillas and 5,000 Soviet soldiers have been killed so far in continuing war and reprisals. Soviet commentary suggests the human and material loss is not considered excessive, and the political cost has been relatively low.

As elsewhere in the Soviet Empire, journalists' access is restricted. The British weekly Economist observed recently: "The 55 American advisers in El Salvador rate much greater attention than the 105,000 Russian soldiers in Afghanistan, largely because the bloodshed in Central America is served up to American television viewers with their breakfast cornflakes."

Afghanistan is the only country forcibly added to the Soviet sphere since the 1945 Yalta accords, but Cuba, Vietnam, Cambodia, Ethiopia and Angola have committed themselves totally to Moscow.

South Yemen provides full access to the island of Socotra, essential to the Soviet fleet in the Indian Ocean.

Syria, Iraq and Libya account for most of Moscow's $5 billion a year in arms sales. Other Third World states closely embrace the Soviet Union, relying on its military aid and political support.

India and other key non-aligned nations tread carefully to avoid offending Moscow, not only a vital source of arms but also the only counterbalance to a Western capitalism that some leaders distrust.

Moscow spends an estimated $5 billion a year on subsidizing Cuba and Vietnam, according to Western experts who acknowledge such a figure is impossible to determine.

A recent British Foreign Office survey calculated Soviet non-military aid to the Third World last year at $8.3 billion, only 0.19 percent of its gross national product, and 76 percent went to Cuba, Mongolia, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and Afghanistan.

"They can only do so much," said a ranking State Department official in Washington, with wide Third World experience. "Their record for keeping friends without paying has not been great."

In Egypt, Somalia, Indonesia and Mali, among others, officials speak bitterly of past ties with the Soviet Union.

Leftists claim U.S.-backed troops killed 100

By The Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Troops rounded up and killed more than 100 leftist sympathizers, including women and children, in three towns in northern El Salvador, survivors told foreign journalists who visited the area.

The army said Thursday that soldiers "caused about 100 casualties to...subversives." The journalists said they saw 20 bodies being buried. Their reports matched claims made by two leftist clandestine radio stations earlier in the week.

After the news reports surfaced on Thursday, the high command of the armed forces said "the discovery of a score of bodies" by journalists and testimony they obtained from other victims "confirm that the army caused about 100 casualties to the subversives during a military operation in early November."

The communique also said troops on Thursday retook the town of El Tablo, 116 miles northeast of San Salvador in Morazan province, long a guerrilla stronghold. It said 13 soldiers were wounded in heavy fighting.

The rebels had seized the town Tuesday, scattering a defending force of about 200 soldiers.

In broadcasts monitored in the capital, the underground Radio Venceremos and Radio Farabundo Marti claimed that troops from the U.S.-trained Atlacatl army infantry battalion "massacred more than 100 people" in the towns of Copapayo, San Nicolas and La Escopeta.

The towns are about 45 miles northeast of the capital, near Lake Suchitlan, in guerrilla-held territory close to two hydroelectric dams that supply half of El Salvador's electricity.

The broadcasts said the victims were non-combatant supporters of the guerrillas fighting a four-year-old civil war.

Six journalists who visited the three towns Wednesday said residents told them the victims surrendered to army troops and were herded into houses and killed with submachine gun fire and grenades.

Making a mature judgment

Not everyone should watch "The Day After," the movie about a nuclear holocaust. We think that young children should not be permitted to view the program. Otherwise, anyone who considers themselves informed, responsible citizens, and the rest of us who aspire to be such, have a responsibility to view what may turn out to be the most accurate, impartial portrayal of the after-effects of a nuclear war.

There have been many arguments presented as to why people should not watch this controversial movie. Most, however, depend on an attitude that the viewer is too immature to form intelligent opinions.

Any concerned citizen should view the movie to gain a comprehension of the destructive power and annihilation of a nuclear holocaust, the possibility of which is becoming more real to us every day.

The worst thing someone can get out of the movie is the belief that the United States must practice unilateral disarmament to cut the risk of nuclear war. This kind of thinking is dangerous in that it could lead to nuclear blackmail and a great loss of the freedoms we have in America.

As responsible and intelligent adults, we need to be fair and open in our perspective of nuclear arms. The situation is much more complex than the notion that the United States can either throw away all of its nuclear weapons and live in peace forever or die in a nuclear holocaust. However, there is as much fallacy to the belief that we can continue to stockpile nuclear arms and never be forced into a showdown.

Critics of the movie are correct in their warning that young children should not watch the movie. It needs to be taken in a mature context; one that is not based wholly on emotional appeal. Young children are too prone to emotions and are not informed enough to deal with such matters as nuclear war. The movie could only serve to instill in them a fear they will never outgrow.

The critics seemingly have a valid point in that the movie presents a nuclear war in a bad light, but then such a thing cannot be presented in a pretty way — death and human suffering will never be attractive. Television has besieged us with pretty images of bloodless death. The American people have been sheltered from the pain and death of war. It is time to be exposed to it.

Watch the movie and form your own opinion about it. We still have the right to make our own decisions on such matters and act on them. Don't let this opportunity pass you by.

Still counting...

After both my parents had not shown interest in my having learned how to count to a thousand on a Monday morning in 1927 (when I was five years old), I became angry, in the way that only a small child can become angry — blind angry, unreasonably angry. My father had shooed me out of the school where he was teaching, ordering me to wait until lunch to tell him anything.

While leaning my head against the closed door of the school, I decided to run away. There is someone somewhere who will care that now I can count to a thousand, I thought.

Then I remembered Dalton Brewer, the district government cattle inspector in Southern Rhodesia where I lived, and how he had told me I could help him count cattle as soon as I learned to count to a thousand, while they were being put through a disinfecting dip. These dips were composed of some sort of evil-smelling solution designed to kill the blood-sucking ticks which would make the cattle sick and die if not controlled. For some bureaucratic governmental purpose, it was necessary for Dalton Brewer to keep records of what cattle had been disinfected each time they were put through this sort of an operation.

I resolved to go see Uncle Dalton, as I called him. I was certain he would be receptive to my newly-acquired ability of counting to a thousand.

In his late 20s, Uncle Dalton lived in a two-room mud building eight miles from Matopo Mission. His place was at the edge of the Matopo Hills just before they leveled off into a dry, flat desert area. There had been times he had helped me make fantastic structures out of my tinker-toy and erector sets when he had visited the mission. He was never so busy but he would stop to define a word for me when I asked him. Once he had helped me nurse a baby deer which had gotten separated from its mother.

I left the school to go get my small bicycle, which was next to the back door of the main mission building. Noticing that my mother was scrubbing away at the washboard in the laundry hut, I called to her that I was going for a ride on my bike. She called back something about being careful. I rode off down the dirt road leading away from Matopo Mission to find Uncle Dalton.

Eight miles is a very long ride for a five-year-old boy. Fortunately, the day was warm and the ride was mostly downhill. The mission was at an altitude of 4,000 feet; in the eight miles to Uncle Dalton's place, the altitude lowered by a good 1,500 feet. Perhaps even more fortunately, I was not afraid of the leopard I passed close by; it blinked sleepily at me from where it was sunning itself on a large granite rock next to the road and growled lazily. But I just rode on. I was too young to be afraid — or to know that the leopard sometimes can be very vicious and on occasion will attack without warning or cause.

By the time I reached Uncle Dalton's place, the sun was quite high in the sky and I was getting very hungry. After all, I had missed my mid-morning bread and butter and jam to make this trip. He was sitting on a chair in front of the doorway to his little cabin, smoking a pipe, when I rode up.

"Hi, Uncle Dalton," I said. "Joel! What on earth are you doing here? Is your father coming on behind you?"

"No. I came down by myself."

"Is that right? Whatever for?" "I can count to a thousand now," I said, "and I came down to help you count the cattle when you send them through the dip."

"You can count to a thousand? That's quite good. So you learned how to do that?" He was completely calm in attitude, making me feel that I was engaged in a meaningful grown-up conversation. He puffed thoughtfully on his pipe. "There's just one problem, Joel," he went on. "I don't have another cattle inspection scheduled until next week."

"Oh," I said disappointedly, "I thought maybe you would have one today or tomorrow I could help you with."

"I'm afraid not. Not until next week. By the way," he went on, still very calm and casual in his manner, "do your parents know you're down here?"

"I told my mother I was going for a ride on my bike," I said defensively.

"Mmm, mmm — well, I see." Suddenly his mouth broke open in a broad grin. "Say, I'll just bet you're hungry, old chap! I've got some bread and butter and jam — and I'll fix you a cup of tea. That ought to hit the old spot, don't you think?"

I was very glad to be with Uncle Dalton right then.

Inside, as he was fixing the bread and jam, he continued talking to me. "You know," he said, "I was going to come up to the mission tomorrow. Might just as well do that today, though. We can strap your bike on the back of mine and you can ride on the handlebars — and I'll take you back up to your home. And we'll tell your parents you can count to a thousand now. And we'll see if we can't make some arrangements for you to help me with my next cattle inspection."

"I tried telling them this morning I could count to a thousand, and they wouldn't listen to me," I said, rubbing my eyes, almost ready to cry. "I'll just bet they'll listen to you now!" he said.

The day after...

There will be a movie on television Sunday night which may change the way America views nuclear war. It is called "The Day After." Whether you are for or against the use of building and maintaining a strategic nuclear arsenal makes no difference. This movie should make us all stop and think about the world we live in.

I haven't previewed the movie. All I know about it is that it is set in Kansas City, Mo., and Lawrence. I have read that Kansas City and Lawrence will suffer the wrath of a nuclear bomb. I have read that the movie explains the circumstances leading to the cities' destruction, and the way the survivors try to cope with life after "the bomb."

I guess the thing which may make this film "hit home," so to speak, is that it is set in this area. I have read that missiles will launch during a football game (I guess "Silo Tech" will take on a new meaning), that Kansas City and Lawrence are destroyed and that Allen Field House becomes a hospital/morgue — a place to die.

The movie will use special effects in order to show the destructiveness of the blast. Nothing new, right? Wrong. We will see people vaporize right before our eyes in a way that may scare the hell out of us. Radiation sickness will take a toll, also. We will not be spared the agony of watching people disintegrate before our eyes.

So why watch the movie? Because it is what we dread the most: annihilation by nuclear means. Because it is the unspoken fear that we all live with. "Just because" is a good enough reason.

The Rev. Jerry Falwell and others have criticized the movie because it supposedly doesn't present America in a good light. Falwell said he thought the movie's lesson was that America has only two alternatives: annihilation by nuclear means, or capitulation to the Soviet Union.

Falwell also said he believed that those who favor the stockpiling of nuclear weapons as a deterrent to Soviet aggression would be seen as warmongers by those who view the movie. He complained that the movie portrayed President Reagan as "an irrational warmonger, a super patriot."

Falwell, leader of the Moral Majority, said the group would organize a boycott against the companies which have advertisements during the movie. The Moral Majority also will ask for equal time, in order to present its view on America's current stand on stockpiling a nuclear arsenal as a deterrent to Soviet threat.

It is interesting to note that a lot of commercial air time has been bought by nuclear-disarmament groups. Actors Paul Newman and Meryl Streep will appear in commercials. But that is the right of these groups; if no one else is willing to advertise during this movie, then these groups have the right to buy the time from ABC, the network airing the movie.

As for the charge that the movie is nothing more than propaganda for nuclear-disarmament groups, I find it lacking. Articles in Newsweek and TV Guide this week discuss the fight that Nicholas Meyer, the movie's director, had in keeping the film neutral — in other words, it isn't mentioned who "pushed the button" first. Both articles detailed Meyer's fight with ABC in order to keep certain scenes in the movie, so it wouldn't appear that the movie is either for or against nuclear disarmament.

ABC will have a panel discussion immediately after the movie on "Nightline." Panelists will include Carl Sagan, Henry Kissinger and Robert McNamara, and will include discussion on all issues raised in the film.

Newsweek reported the network also will air this warning before the movie starts: "Although based on scientific fact, this film is fiction. Because the graphic depiction of the effects of a nuclear war may not be suitable for younger viewers, parental discretion is advised."

The question of whether children should be allowed to watch "The Day After" has many baffled. Some organizations recommend that children under the age of 16 not watch the movie; other organizations encourage parents and children to discuss the movie before it is shown and afterward.

Many church groups are sponsoring "view and discuss" sessions, where members will watch the movie and then discuss their reaction to the movie.

From what I have read, this movie will be one of the most objective presentations of nuclear war ever presented. It won't be a comedy, like "Dr. Strangelove (or How I Learned to Love the Bomb)"; nor will it be a romantic movie, like "On the Beach." It may be another "Fail Safe" — except this time, we will see the wrath of nuclear war.

I've read about the destruction that Hiroshima and Nagasaki suffered from nuclear strikes by the United States at the end of World War II. I even did a research paper for English Composition II at a community college, in which I justified the use of atomic weapons against Japan in order to end the war. I'm not going to debate the issues in that paper (although I'm going to re-read it over Thanksgiving break).

It is easy to overlook Hiroshima and Nagasaki because the incidents happened so long ago; because the destruction didn't happen in America, and because it happened in different circumstances. It doesn't make it right, but it makes it easier to gloss over the situation. "The Day After" happens in modern America, in a place which many people can relate to — "middle America."

I'm not sure about the present situation (nuclear disarmament), but I will listen to both sides and allow them to present their opinions before I make up my mind. That's why I will watch this movie and read as much as I can about it.

I applaud ABC for standing behind the movie and presenting it. I applaud the advertisers for advertising despite the Moral Majority's threat of a boycott. And I applaud everyone who has the guts and intelligence to watch this movie.

It won't be an easy movie to watch, but it may be one which changes forever the way we think about nuclear war.

Judges vs. jury decisions

I'm afraid our jury system is in real trouble.

The recent decision Christine Craft won against a Kansas City television station was overturned by a judge who said the jury's decision was "passion, prejudice, confusion or mistake." He made it sound as though the press was guilty of forming the juror's opinion before Craft went to trial. The judge's attitude says little for his understanding of the press and its role, and less for the public's ability to sift through what they read and form an educated, intelligent opinion.

The judge disrupted a most important part of our legal system — the right to a jury trial.

A decision was made by a group of Craft's peers. They listened to the evidence, evaluated it and made their decision. The case was closed and should have been left to rest.

While the action the judge took in the Craft decision is not all that uncommon, one must look at the precedent it might set.

What about the large settlements awarded to the victims or their families of the Hyatt Regency Hotel collapse? Will these settlements be overturned by a judge who says the jury was misguided? It could happen just as it did in the Craft case.

What good is there in a jury trial then — a trial by your peers, if you would — if a judge can reverse the decision simply because he disagrees with it?

Do the people who run our legal system think so little of the judgment of the public that they must disregard the decision of the jurors as if they were stupid?

If the answer is yes, and I believe it is, our legal system is in trouble. But not only because judges might believe jurors are uneducated in legal matters, but because they may be right.

A recent study, titled "The Amer-cian Public, The Media and The Judicial System," did show startling flaws in the American people's knowledge of fundamental legal principles.

For instance, over half the answers showed that the public does not understand or appreciate the legal concept of innocent until proven guilty. In another question, respondents were evenly divided over whether a district attorney's job was to defend or prosecute an accused criminal who could not afford an attorney (in case you're wondering, the job of the district attorney is to prosecute criminals, not defend them).

The survey also showed that the public believed that police and members of the judicial system should step up enforcement and punishment of victimless crimes, such as illegal sexual behavior between consenting adults and juvenile offenses, such as school truancy, breaking curfew and drinking.

What the public did know was its basic rights, such as everyone having the right to be represented by a lawyer, the district attorney deciding whether or not to prosecute a case, and the fact that not all cases are heard before a jury.

The rights they did know about concerned the possibility that they might be arrested. People seem to be more concerned with the legal system working for them than working for the legal system.

People should be more aware of their duties as potential jurors. You can bet that if their life depended on a 12-person jury, they would want well-informed, educated people who knew about the laws which may affect them.

I remember a feeble attempt by a high school teacher to teach our class about trials and the way they worked. But it was not until I began working for a newspaper where I reported on court cases that I really began to understand our complicated legal system. I still don't understand it all, and never will. I also am convinced that half the people in the legal profession don't understand it either.

So whose fault is it that the public doesn't know about our legal system? Is it the media's fault? Do we glamorize trials and not cover the fine details of how they actually work? Or should our schools be more in tune with how trials work? Or is it our own responsibility as citizens to be prepared to sit on a jury?

I believe it is the responsibility of each individual to understand the way our legal system works before sitting on a jury. Learn about the law, not only for your protection, but for that of others as well.

Perhaps if judges felt jurors were more qualified to make decisions, fewer court cases would be tossed out, easing the burden on the court due to mistrials and retrials. This also would lessen the burden of the cost to the taxpayers.

But more than this, we have responsibilities as citizens to be educated jurors, to see that justice is done.

You never know when an educated juror may be the only thing standing between you and justice.

Department name change not yet official

Editor,

Your article in the Thursday, Nov. 17 Collegian announcing a departmental name change for the Department of Pre-Design Professions to Department of Environmental Design was inaccurate and misleading.

In order for an academic unit to change its name, it must follow the approval sequence outlined in the Kansas State University Faculty Senate document on Approval, Routing and Notification Policy.

In the case of the Department of Pre-Design Professions, they are following the procedure to obtain approval to change their name, but before it becomes official, they must obtain approval from the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee, the entire Faculty Senate, the Council of Chief Academic Officers, the Council of Presidents and the Board of Regents Academic Council.

So, although they have announced their intention and achieved approval within their college, there are still many steps to be taken before the name can be changed officially and listed as such in the University catalog and other official announcements of the University.

Fire inspectors find campus violations

By ANGIE WILSON
Collegian Reporter

Fire inspections last fall revealed that many campus living units failed to comply with current fire code regulations. Work has begun to correct some of those deficiencies.

The need for a smoke detection system in Jardine Terrace Apartments was reported by the fire inspectors during the first week of August 1982.

Smoke detectors are being installed in Jardine, said Lloyd Davenport, chief of housing maintenance.

According to the Life Safety Code, each apartment is required to have a smoke detector.

"We're still working on it. It's better than half-finished," Davenport said.

He said it doesn't take very much time to install the smoke detectors. The work is expected to be completed in two weeks.

"We started (installing the smoke detectors) back in August," Davenport said.

According to the LSC, an approved single station smoke detector that is continuously powered by the house electrical service should be installed in every living unit within the apartment building. When activated, the detector should initiate an alarm which is audible in the sleeping rooms of that unit.

The detectors being installed in Jardine are battery operated.

Glen Wilkinson, assistant fire chief and city fire marshal, said exceptions to the requirement of electrical smoke detectors are sometimes made with the agreement of regular testing and battery changing.

"These (Jardine's detectors) meet the criteria. We have a record

Workers install alarms

and the detectors will be checked one year after installation," Davenport said.

"Hard-wired smoke detectors cost entirely too much. I suppose they will someday have hard wiring, but for now, we need some sort of protection. The battery-operated detectors are extremely sensitive," Davenport said.

Jardine was not the only campus housing unit reported to be in violation of the fire code. Inspection reports made in the fall of 1982 noted several violations in some residence halls.

Boyd and Putnam halls were reported to be deficient because the fire escapes do not extend to the ground as specified by the LSC.

Van Zile Hall was reported to be deficient in requirements for enclosed stairways, fire alarm systems, exit illumination and emergency lighting. The codes specify that any interior stairway and other vertical openings in educational buildings should be enclosed. The code also states that manually operated fire alarm facilities are required in every educational building.

Separation doors on Van Zile's first floor are paneled glass and in order to meet regulations, the doors must be wired glass.

"At Van Zile, we hope to get things started next year," Thomas Frith, director of housing, said.

Additional automatic emergency lighting for each wing and floor level of corridors are needed in Goodnow Hall, according to inspection reports. Fiberboard ceilings in the building do not meet minimum code standards either.

To meet code regulations, exit signs at the interior ends of hallways leading to the central lobby are needed in Marlatt Hall. The hall also needs a smoke detection system throughout the building.

Smoke detection systems are also needed in Ford, West, Moore, and Haymaker halls.

"Smoke sensors for residence halls are a budgeted item. An architect is working on it now. I assume in a couple of months we'll see the specifications, then we'll budget it. This project will probably be completed within the next fiscal year. The next fiscal year starts July 1, 1984," Davenport said.

Ford, Moore and Haymaker halls also require emergency lighting in corridors and stairways.

Code deficiencies are not always corrected immediately because of budgetary problems, said Paul Markley, chief of the fire prevention division at Topeka.

"Being realistic, much money must be put into repairs such as these. Universities can only spend as much as they have. Each one gets a little share of the pie, (money from the Board of Regents) so to speak," Markley said.

"Dormitory and residence hall programs are not funded by state appropriations that come through our office. They are maintained by their own funds," said Warren Corman, facilities officer for the regents. "Although they are legally state owned, we don't have anything to do with their funding."

Frith said budgeting was not a problem and the reason some code violations have not been repaired is due to a time factor.

"To date, we have been able to keep up with the costs of equipment required. In the process of making repairs, it frequently takes time," Frith said. "We must go to a University architect to draw up plans. These plans must then be approved and then there is a bidding process. All of these steps are necessary. However, it does take a lot of time."

Frith said suggestions by University budget administrators, hall directors, maintenance personnel and students help determine what repairs need to be done.

"We determine with in-house people what needs to be done," he said. "The percent of the budget spent on improvements varies significantly from year to year."

Wilkinson said the LSC has many regulations and technical information, but the most important considerations are proper exits, emergency lighting, smoke detection and alarm systems.

"As long as you do something to make the building a little safer, you've accomplished something," Wilkinson said. "The building can be replaced, that's a loss. But a life can't be and that's a greater loss."

New federal budget may add to 'red ink'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress abandoned all hope Thursday of major action this year to reverse the tide of budgetary red ink, as House and Senate negotiators agreed to increase the government's line of credit by $101 billion to $1.49 trillion.

Final action by the House and Senate on the compromise national debt limit bill was the last big obstacle to congressional adjournment for the year. Senate leaders said they might ask the full Senate to ratify the compromise Thursday night while the House was not expected to act until today.

The end of the 1983 battle to reduce federal budget deficits was signaled Wednesday night when the Senate refused, 65-33, to consider an $88 billion deficit-reducing package of tax increases and spending cuts proposed by Sens. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., and Lawton Chiles, D-Fla.

Another chance for deficit-reduction action was closed off Thursday evening when the House voted 214-204 to reject ground rules for consideration of several proposed anti-deficit plans. One plan, approved by the House Ways and Means Committee, would have raised about $8 billion in taxes over three years, chiefly from high-income investors and the life insurance industry.

"As we leave Washington, word of our impotence will precede us. We have confessed to an already doubting nation that we are ruled by political fear, rather than economic courage," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., lambasted Republicans for contributing to the House vote that all but ended efforts to trim deficits this year.

Congressional conferees met on the debt limit following a 58-40 Senate vote early Thursday on a bill restoring federal borrowing authority by raising the national debt limit to $1.45 trillion, allowing the government to extend its credit bill until February.

Sometimes too much drinking can spoil a good time . . .

Or spoil a dress . . . or a rug . . . or a party . . . or a job . . . or a friendship.

It's easy not to think about it, to drink more than you want to. You're talking or unwinding or having a good time. And someone pours you another drink. You hardly notice.

But take the time to make up your own mind. Don't accept more alcohol when you don't want to. It's OK to refuse.

How do you say "no" when you don't want another drink? Any way you want to.

Disabled man covers Wheaties box

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Wheelchair racer George Murray says getting his picture on cereal boxes next year gives him a chance to point out to millions of Americans that disabled athletes can also be champions.

"Personally, it's the chance for me to have an effect," said Murray, one of two people to first cross the United States in arm-powered wheelchairs in 1981. "It's a vehicle, the opportunity to get the message out that wheelchair athletes are legitimate athletes, too."

General Mills selected Murray, a University of Illinois graduate student, as one of six top amateur athletes in a "Search for Champions" contest. His photo is to appear on boxes of Wheaties next summer.

Rock Hudson gets cake in desert

NEBI MOUSA, Occupied West Bank — Movie star Rock Hudson got his birthday cake Thursday atop a sand dune movie set in the desert east of Jerusalem.

"Birthdays are for kids," Hudson, 58, said with a doubtful look. He is playing a CIA agent in the movie "The Ambassador," a tale of Middle Eastern intrigue and adventure.

Bee Gees star donates efforts

MIAMI — Bee Gees pop star Maurice Gibb has written and produced the soundtrack to a promotional film that officials hope will sell Miami to even the harshest critic.

The Metro-Dade Tourism Authority commissioned the 15-minute, $60,000 "Greater Miami — Gateway to Adventure," which was completed this week, said film producer Grant Gravitt.

Gibb, a Dade County resident, is not charging for the soundtrack. "The people in this city have been very kind to me, and this is my way of repaying something to the community, doing something positive," said Gibb. "I think that Miami's one of the best places in the world to live."

Helicopters search for governor

GRAND CANYON, Ariz. — Helicopters were sent aloft in the rugged Grand Canyon and a search-and-rescue team was put on alert after a report that the governor's hiking group had failed to arrive at a meeting point.

But the crews of two search helicopters spotted lanterns at the camp of Gov. Bruce Babbitt and his companions late Tuesday, and found they were safe and sound, said Lt. Carlton Hill of the state Department of Public Safety.

"Darkness caught them down there, and rather than climb out, they elected to spend the night," Hill said.

Police chief's wife lands in jail

PLYMOUTH, Minn. — Erica Bouza, the wife of Minneapolis' police chief says the worst part of her seven-day jail stay was the 2½ days she spent in isolation after an anonymous caller threatened her life.

"I wouldn't do that to an animal," she said.

Mrs. Bouza, 52, said she was in the isolation cell for 2½ days, during which time she addressed 800 post cards, read two novels and jogged in place.

She was released Thursday after serving seven days of a 10-day sentence for trespassing during an Oct. 24 protest against nuclear weapons.

City paves way to cut sorority's parking spots

By WAYNE PRICE
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Board of Zoning Appeals voted 3-1 Wednesday night to uphold an earlier decision by the city planning staff which stated that the parking lot to a Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority annex is in violation of a 1983 zoning variance.

The variance states that off-street parking at the annex shall not be within 25 feet of the property line. Currently, the lot to the annex has two parking spots that are within the designated distance.

In 1981, Kappa, at 517 Fairchild Terrace., was granted a variance which stated that off-street parking could extend to five feet of the property line because land behind the annex had not been purchased for a new lot, City Planner Larry Hulse said. When land for the lot was purchased, a new variance was issued to the house which stated that the 25 foot limitation should be put back into effect.

Currently, two parking spots remain within the designated barrier. Neighbors living around the annex complained that the sorority had the two spaces paved when members of the house knew they might have to give up those spaces when the land was bought. The spaces in question extend east toward the street and neighbors said the spots don't keep the "character of the neighborhood."

Joseph Knopp, the attorney representing the sorority, said there was some confusion when talking about the "lot" as to whether this referred to the first part of the lot that was paved or the new section of the lot.

To make way for the new part of the lot, a garage had to be removed and a tree either taken away or replanted. When the garage was removed and the tree replanted that signified that the new lot had begun, neighbors and board members said. The 1983 variance was thereby in effect and the parking spaces within the 25 feet limit could no longer be used.

Roy Spratt, chairman of the board, doubted the rationale of the greek house when pouring cement in spaces they knew might only be temporary.

"The issue before us is not whether or not what we did was a rationale," Knopp said. "The decision, I think, is whether or not we're entitled to use that (the parking spaces) for the next period of time."

One neighbor said that if members of the Kappa house thought they were justified in thinking there was an interpretation of the variance that was not correct, they should have come to the board, not the concrete contractor.

Another neighbor said the sorority also did not abide with certain landscaping procedures which were to be done with the parking spaces. He said as of yet no landscaping, to his knowledge, has been done.

The board's decision not only upheld a previous decision, but also requires the sorority to have the concrete removed from the two parking spots by July 1, 1984.

Spratt, who voted against the decision, said he questioned whether the board has the authority to order the removal of the concrete.

Members of the sorority have 10 days to file an appeal with the district court.

Class to conduct annual cattle auction

By The Collegian Staff

The Livestock Sales and Management class will be conducting the annual registered cattle K-Sale.

Miles McKee, professor of animal science and industry, said the sale is conducted by the class each year.

McKee said that there will be 75 students participating in the auction, which is scheduled for 1 p.m.

Tuesday in Weber Arena.

The sale is advertised through local sale bills and registered cattle magazines, he added.

"Right now we have 82 head of registered cattle to be sold. Every year we sell a different breed of cattle. This year we will be selling Angus," McKee said.

There will be local cattle buyers and bid takers at the sale.

Rural crime rate drops with rise in awareness

By RHONDA WESSEL
Agriculture Editor

Both the number and the dollar value of crimes committed in rural areas has shown a slight decrease nationwide over the past year. This decrease has been attributed to an increase in communication between rural residents and law enforcement agents.

"The trend in rural crime is decreasing nationwide. This decrease is due to programs like the neighborhood watch programs," said Ralph Utermohlen, area extension specialist for community development.

Rural crime increased 600 percent in a 15-year period which ended in 1981. In addition, the rural crime rate rose 23 percent faster than experienced by urban areas for the same time period, he said.

"However, the statistics for 1982 show a slight decline in the number of crimes committed and an increase in the amount of property returned," Utermohlen said.

Statewide, the overall crime rate has decreased by 7.2 percent, the property crime rate has been reduced by 7.1 percent, and the property recovered has increased by 2.4 percent, he said.

A neighborhood watch program has not been formed in rural Riley County, and there is only a slight decline in the rural crime rate reported, said Mike Christian, Riley County agricultural extension agent.

"Although the rural crime statistics show a decline in the amount of crimes committed, it still happens, and it's still a problem," Utermohlen said.

Even though Riley County doesn't have a neighborhood watch program which is officially working with the police department, people have started calling in more often when they see something suspicious, he said.

"I think the community is working closer with the police department, and they have started marking their equipment," he said.

Stealing from farm homes is more attractive to a robber because of greater distance between farms, poor lighting, and the value of items stolen is usually greater per item than those taken from urban homes, Utermohlen said.

"That's where all the valuable stuff is — out in the country. Our farm homes are pretty well equipped. If you stop and think about it, we have TVs, stereos, and most big farms now have home computers," he said.

The highest dollar amount of property stolen on the farm comes from the theft of large farm equipment, Utermohlen said, adding that it is hard to identify farm equipment even if it is recovered because each manufacturer makes all equipment uniformly.

"The farm sheds are filled with valuable tools which are highly merchandizable and sought after. The livestock out in the pastures is easy to get to and also is quite valuable," he said.

"That's the reason it is so popular to steal farm items. They are hard to (identify) because they all look alike," he said.

Large metal items are now being marked with a special number assigned by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The number is composed of 10 characters. It lists the county and state of the owner and the first initial of the last name along with the special number, Utermohlen said.

"The equipment which is recovered and not marked with an ID number has to be sold in a public auction because there is no way to find the rightful owner," he said.

Grain, an item often stolen because there is no way of proving rightful ownership, also can be marked with this special ID number. Small pieces of colored paper with the number are mixed through the grain, he added.

Stephan says funding irrelevant in decision

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The state Board of Education has no power to reject a proposal for an area vocational school because of concerns about a lack of funding for the program by lawmakers, Attorney General Robert Stephan said Thursday.

In a legal opinion, Stephan said the board is required to review plans for a vocational school, conduct public hearings and then decide whether the proposal meets guidelines set forth by the Legislature. However, funding is not a factor that must be considered, according to state law.

"The state Board of Education lacks the discretion to reject a plan for the establishment of a proposed area vocational school solely for the reason that the Legislature may not provide additional financial support therefor," Stephan concluded in the opinion to state Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola.

"Thus, the state board, except as interested observer and a source of information and recommendations, may not consider upon review of an application for an area vocational school whether the Legislature will provide funding for an area vocational school which meets the legislative and administrative criteria."

The issue of the state board's power surfaced last month when the group considered applications for area vocational schools in Olathe and Shawnee Mission school districts. The board approved the proposals, but expressed concerns about state funding.

In addition, the board called for a one-year moratorium on establishment of any further vocational technical schools. However, that decision was reversed by board members a day later.

THE SCHOLARSHIP THAT LEADS ENGINEERING STUDENTS RIGHT INTO MANAGEMENT

There's a lot more to an Army ROTC scholarship than tuition, books, lab fees, supplies and up to $500 per school year for living expenses.

There's leadership. You start sharpening your ability to lead while you're still in engineering school. So when you graduate as a second lieutenant, you're ready to take charge.

You're trained. You know how to motivate people. And you're capable of managing the thousands of dollars worth of equipment you're in charge of.

And as you progress, you'll discover increasing opportunities to advance your engineering skills to attend graduate school while you serve your country.

All the while, you'll be acquiring the management skills that industry leaders look for.

So look into an Army ROTC scholarship. Talk it over with the Professor of Military Science on your campus.

Judge sentences three in Royals' drug case

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY — A federal judge, noting a professional athlete's "special place in society," sentenced All-Star center fielder Willie Wilson and two other 1983 Kansas City Royals to three months in prison and fined them up to $5,000 Thursday for trying to buy cocaine.

First baseman Willie Aikens and outfielder Jerry Martin — neither of whom will be with the Royals next season — and Wilson were sentenced by U.S. Magistrate J. Milton Sullivan in a courtroom overflowing with reporters and spectators.

The three pleaded guilty last month before Sullivan to a misdemeanor charge of attempting to possess cocaine.

Sullivan recommended that the players be sent to the federal prison in Fort Worth, Texas, to spend three months participating in its drug rehabilitation program. The judge said the sentences would be served at another prison or federal corrections facility with a drug treatment program if the one at Fort Worth is filled.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's office said it was the first time an active player was given a prison sentence for drug violations.

Pitcher Vida Blue, 34, who has pleaded guilty to possession of three grams of cocaine and faces the same penalties, has been granted a request for the delay of his sentencing until Dec. 5.

Blue, a Cy Young Award winner and American League Most Valuable Player, was released by the Royals Aug. 5 after failing to win a game during the 1983 season.

Wilson, 28, the first player to be sentenced, did not speak in his own behalf in court. He and his lawyer, David W. Russell, criticized the judge afterward.

"They made an example out of me," Wilson said after leaving the courtroom with his weeping wife.

Russell said "the judge did not sentence him because he needed a reason to sentence him but because the courtroom was full of media."

"You guys win," he told a cluster of reporters. "He gave you what you wanted. He didn't sentence like a judge. He abided by the media. There's no justification for what he did."

Before imposing Wilson's sentence, Sullivan told the 1982 AL batting champion that he was "a national hero" who occupied "a special place in our society." The judge also told Aikens and Martin that as professional athletes they carried the responsibility of setting a good example for young people.

"There are certain obligations and responsibilities you must live up to," Sullivan said. "The court regards this as a serious offense. There is an increasing awareness of the harm coming to our society from the proliferation and use of drugs."

Sullivan first sentenced each of the defendants to the maximum one year in prison, but immediately suspended nine months of the term. Wilson and Martin were ordered to begin serving their sentences Dec. 5, and Aikens is to surrender Jan. 3. All three were placed on two years' probation to begin upon completion of the term.

Wilson and Aikens were fined the maximum $5,000, and Martin was fined $2,500 after his lawyer told the judge that his client was close to "financial catastrophe."

The Fort Worth facility is a minimum-security institution, said Dolores Nisle, a case management specialist there. She said prisoners were not locked into cells, although units containing the rooms were locked at night.

"They have access to phones, there is a library, there is an exercise yard and an auditorium for playing basketball," she said. "There is weight equipment. There is a small church."

The facility, about 50 years old, has 730 inmates, about 170 of whom were in the drug program.

Prosecutors said in open court last month that FBI wiretaps had intercepted the three players trying to buy cocaine last June from a residence in suburban Johnson County.

Twelve people were subsequently indicted by a federal grand jury on charges stemming from the investigation. None of those indicted has any connection with the Royals or professional sports. Their trials are expected to begin early next year.

The players could still face disciplinary action or fines by Kuhn, who has said he would not decide until Dec. 15 whether to take any action against the Royals' players or Los Angeles Dodgers' pitcher Steve Howe, who has been treated for drug dependency and was fined by the club because of drug-related absences.

Rick Cerone, a spokesman in Kuhn's office, said Thursday, "The commissioner has said all along that he'd make a statement — on the 15th of December. That hasn't changed. He has nothing else to say at this point."

Royals majority owner Ewing Kauffman, asked if he felt Kuhn would set an example with the action he takes, said, "I can't see what greater example he could make than the judge already made."

"It's a tragic situation for the baseball players and their families," Kauffman said.

During a news conference after the sentencing, Royals general manager John Schuerholz described the situation as "a kick in the organizational stomach."

Schuerholz also revealed for the first time that Aikens would not return to the team next year. "We have made a decision after evaluating our club. The decision was that Willie is not a part of our plans for 1984."

During the hearing, Russell said Wilson's elevated place in society because of his athletic abilities "doesn't mean he has any more understanding of the system or intelligence than the average person."

He asked the judge to view Wilson "as an ordinary defendant," noting his client's plans to take part and assist in drug prevention and rehabilitation programs.

"He's been afraid to go out and talk to people" because of the adverse publicity surrounding the case, "That's more than enough punishment."

Aikens' lawyer, James E. Kelley Jr., told the judge that he was surprised by the sentence handed to Wilson. "But I personally believe probation is the right thing for Mr. Aikens," Kelley said.

Kelley told the court that Aikens was an in-patient at a drug and alcohol rehabilitation institute and would be involved in the program until Dec. 22.

Aikens, 29, read a prepared statement to the judge.

"I have learned a tremendous amount about myself and others from this experience," Aikens said. "I made a grave mistake and I am truly sorry for the hurt and disappointment that I have brought to my family, my friends, my team, Kansas City and baseball. I realize that my life took a bad turn."

Martin's lawyer, William P. Simpson, also asked the judge to place his client on probation because a prison term "would effectively end his baseball career and create a financial catastrophe for him and his family."

"The next few months will decide whether I have a future in baseball," said Martin, 34, who was released by the Royals this fall and is trying to latch on to another team.

It was also revealed in court that Martin entered a drug rehabilitation institute prior to the 1983 spring training. Simpson told the court that Martin underwent the treatment not because he needed it, but to assure his wife, Scarlett, that he was "clean."

"It was something of a grandstand play to convince Mrs. Martin there was nothing for her to be alarmed about," Simpson said.

'Cats trounce Brandon with second half surge

By HUEY COUNTS
Staff Writer

Using a combination of defensive quickness and fine shooting, the K-State Wildcats busted loose in the second half of their home opener Thursday night to trounce Brandon University, from Manitoba, Canada, 79-48.

The Wildcats came out smoking in the second half. Using superior quickness the 'Cats held Brandon scoreless for nearly eight minutes as they scored 21 unanswered points to take a 56-27 lead.

Wingman Eric Watson and point guard Jim Roder led the second half surge as Watson hit six straight points followed by Roder's five.

The Wildcat defense constantly forced Brandon into bad shots and the team hit only 34 percent of its shots in the second half.

K-State was able to take advantage of Brandon's misses, using a well-executed transition game leading to a large number of layups and medium-range jumpers as the 'Cats hit nearly 66 percent of their second half shots.

The 'Cats opened their biggest lead of the game, 67-35, with 7:38 to go in the game when Lafayette Watkins hit a 10-foot jumper in the lane. Brandon put a slight dent into the Wildcat lead as guard Grant Coulter hit six of the game's next 10 points, cutting K-State's lead to 23, but K-State forward Alex Williams ended the 'Cats' slight scoring drought with a two-pointer from underneath the hoop and the 'Cats cruised the rest of the way.

Forward Tyrone Jackson came off the bench to provide the 'Cats with some extra quickness and brought the crowd to its feet with a one-hand slam dunk over Coulter, but the basket was disallowed on a charging call.

The first half was highlighted by the outside shooting of forward Tom Alfaro who hit his first four shots as the 'Cats took an early 10-point lead. Brandon battled back and took the lead, 27-26, with a basket by forward John Bukich with just over two minutes remaining in the half. But, center Eddie Elder scored five straight Wildcat points, Roder took it the length of the court for a layup, and Ben Mitchell followed with an easy two points off a feed from Elder for K-State's 35-27 halftime lead.

Jack Hartman, head coach, was pleased with his team's effort.

"I saw a lot of good things," he said, emphasizing the 'Cats' defensive plays in the second half.

K-State was led by Elder's 15 points and 10 rebounds. Watson scored 14 points — 12 in the second half. Alfaro chipped in 12 tallies and Jackson added nine points and seven boards.

Pigskin picks

For this week's "quote of the week", the prognosticators have adapted — to meet their miserable needs — that famous quote by one John Paul Jones saying, "We have not yet begun to predict — and we probably never will!"

After 10 weeks of involuntary torture inflicted by the eight at-one-time sports enthusiasts, it's time to bid a fond and maybe even a joyous farewell to this — at times — disappointing and embarrassing group.

Gone — but hopefully not lost from one's memory — will be Dan "Give Me Another Beer" Owsley; Joel "What's the Problem?" Torczon; Kevin "I'm On a Winning Streak, Let's Keep Picking" Dale; Judi "I Don't Care What You Say, I'm Still a Dallas Fan" Wright; Sean "What's that Phone Number?" Reilly; Tex "Where's the Photographers?" Hanson; Brian "Believe in Miracles, Go Northwestern Go" La Rue; and Andy "You're Ugly" Nelson.

As a finale to this weekly ridiculousness, awards have been given out to highlight this otherwise dismal season.

Without a doubt, Torczon — the Collegian's very own "Polish Predictor" — wins the reputable award as "Mr. Consistency." He finished in the top two places in all but three of the weekly picks. Torczon's record for last week was 9-3 and his awesome overall record is 91-38. Oh, to be Polish!

The next award — the "Diehard Award" — goes to "Mr. Northwestern" La Rue for always having somewhat of a stubborn heart and voting for Northwestern even if they played the Ohio State Buckeyes. La Rue finished with an 8-4 record last week despite voting for the losing "Mildcats." His overall record now stands at 76-53.

Double winners in the "Reverse Strategy Award" were Nelson and Dale. Nelson posted the first winning record of the season and continued as a possible threat for the first-place finish during the first couple of weeks. But, his luck — and it was luck — ran out and he began climbing down the ladder of success instead. Nelson's record was 9-3 this past week and his "declining" overall record is 81-48.

Dale, on the other hand, thought — in the early season — that losing was the thing to do. He reversed his strategy, however, when he figured out that "money talks" in the world of sports. In his useless come-from-behind attack, Dale posted a 7-5 record last week to boost his overall record to 76-53 — leaving him still 15 games out of first place.

Hanson is the proud recipient of the "Mr. Uncooperative Award" for not wanting to pick the professional games. In his acceptance speech he was quoted as saying "The words professional and football are mutually exclusive — I'm sorry Jim Brown." Despite his reluctance, Hanson continued to pick the pros and had a 7-5 record for last week. His overall standing — pros included — is 79-50.

Another award that had double winners was the "Competitive Award" which was given to Reilly and his brat of an assistant Wright. Throughout the season, the two constantly tried to outdo the other in picking the winners. Reilly, very regrettably, has pulled ahead of Wright. The two will fight right down to the wire with this week's picks as the final determinant of their bet. Reilly posted an impressive and undoubtedly, lucky record of 9-3 this week compared to Wright's 7-5 mark.

Overall, Reilly has a 78-51 standing while Wright has a 75-54 mark. Wright's only comment on the standings is that she doesn't want to do better than Reilly in everything so she decided to give him a chance. She also added that Reilly needed to feel good about himself after all the nasty columns he's written.

Last, but certainly not least, to win an award was "Walking Sports Encyclopedia" Owsley. Not living up to the expectations of others, Owsley has assumed responsibility of taste-testing beers for living groups on campus to assure them they are receiving the finest quality for their money. For his participation in community service, he was worthy of the "Friends Don't Let Friends Drink Alone Award." When he's partially sober, Owsley posts an overall record of 85-44 and he went 7-5 in last week's picks.

There's no designated "Crummy Game of the Week," so let's keep this honor right at home. Remember, don't call your bookie and pick Nebraska because they've got the week off!

K-State, Colorado to clash in Big Eight cellar matchup

By SEAN REILLY
Sports Editor

K-State's football team will attempt to climb out of the Big Eight Conference cellar when it tussles against the University of Colorado in what can be termed the Toilet Bowl. Kickoff will be at 2 p.m. CST Saturday at Folsom Field in Boulder.

The winner of the game — the season finale for both schools — will be assured of finishing in sixth place in the conference while the loser remains in the league basement.

Whoever who winds up in last place may have company, however, depending upon whether or not the University of Kansas is able to defeat the University of Missouri. If KU loses, there will be a tie for last place.

The Buffaloes and the Wildcats, both of which enter the game with a 1-5-0 mark in conference play, will attempt to salvage the season with a win.

"I'm anxious to see how we (K-State) wind it (the season) up," Jim Dickey, K-State's head coach, said. "We're not playing for anything but pride — both teams are. I'm anxious to see who really competes."

Last year at this time, K-State dumped Colorado 33-10 and at the end of the contest, the 'Cats received word that they were invited to their first bowl game — the Independence Bowl. However, there will be no invitations this year for either K-State or Colorado.

The Buffaloes enter this year's game after a bittersweet 41-28 loss last week to Oklahoma. At one time in the game the Buffaloes were trailing 34-0, but came back to score four of the game's next five touchdowns.

"We could have laid down last week," Bill McCartney, head coach for Colorado, said. "We were embarrassed at halftime, but the team did fight back."

For the Wildcats it was the opposite. They were ahead 27-12 at one point in the game only to relinquish their lead and lose 49-27.

"Our offense came off the ball and blocked well even though the field position we had in the second half was horrendous," Dickey said. "Between the penalties and mistakes, we gave ourselves little chance to win. As a whole we played unsure of ourselves and with little confidence."

McCartney enters the game against K-State with a 5-15-1 career mark as Colorado's head coach, including a 2-10-1 record in the Big Eight. Dickey is 22-43-1 in six years at K-State and is 3-2 against Colorado, but the Buffaloes lead the series 27-11-0.

Since 1977, both teams have taken turns winning every other year — Colorado winning in 1977 followed by K-State in 1978.

Dickey is confident that K-State will not claim possession of last place in the conference.

"We're going to go all out for one more win. I really believe we can do it," he said. "It would be great to get that one last win. It would move us up in the Big Eight rankings and would give us new life for next year."

For 16 K-State seniors the Colorado game will be their finale as Wildcat players and they realize the importance of winning Saturday's matchup.

"When playing the game of football, you've got to be determined to fulfill your goals, even when you're not successful," flanker Eric Mack said. "We should try hard to win our last game so that the returning athletes will have some confidence to build on next year."

"Feeling sorry for ourselves won't help us, so we must go out and compete against Colorado," Mack added. "A Wildcat never gives up, and I'm sure none of our players will."

Mack, who injured his ankle in the game against Iowa State last week, is listed as questionable this week. Dickey said the decision will be made on Friday as to whether or not Mack will make the trip to Colorado.

"Hopefully he (Mack) can play," Dickey said. "He's a mentally tough guy."

Dickey sees the Colorado offense as one that likes to run and with sophomore Derek Marshall as quarterback, it likes to utilize its passing game too. On defense, Dickey said Colorado is very aggressive.

They (Colorado) are not quite as big as some of the teams we've played, but they're aggressive," Dickey said. "It should be a game of who's the most competitive and how each team plays."

Chiefs, Mackovic prepare to play Cowboys in Dallas on Sunday

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — John Mackovic insists his inside knowledge of the Dallas Cowboys will be of no practical use to his Kansas City Chiefs in their National Football League match in Texas Stadium on Sunday.

But Mackovic, who spent two years as Tom Landry's quarterback coach before the Chiefs gave him his first head-coaching job this season, does admit that a coach "might have a certain feel" for a team with which he spent time.

So far, Mackovic has done nothing different than the last four head coaches the Chiefs have run through in a so-far unsuccessful effort at rising above mediocrity — he has lost more games than he has won.

A victory over Cincinnati last Sunday, in what may have been their best effort of the year, raised the Chiefs' record to 5-6. The Cowboys, of course, are barreling into the playoffs with a 9-2 mark after a loss last week at San Diego.

Mackovic, always known as an offensive specialist, has concentrated his coaching almost entirely on the Chiefs' offense and has left the defense to assistant coach Bud Carson.

"I probably know the (Dallas) offense much better than the defense," he said Tuesday in a media briefing. "I spend a majority of my time working against the other team's defense, rather than its offense, so from that standpoint, we don't necessarily have any benefits. Although, obviously...if one of our coaches left right now after 11 games, he would have a certain feel for what we do."

Mackovic said he will make a point not to let his personal attachment to the Cowboys be a factor in the Chiefs' preparations.

"I am the only person connected with our team who has any personal link with the Dallas Cowboys, outside of (reserve running back) Lawrence Ricks," he said. "It would be unfair, because of the position I'm in, for me to make this any more than another game, a game between the Dallas Cowboys and the Kansas City Chiefs."

"I have to divorce myself from my personal feelings. If I try to make it any more than a regular game I would be doing a big disservice to the Chiefs."

"When the game is over, I'm sure there will be special feelings because I do know the players."

Mackovic's last official act with the Cowboys before joining the Chiefs was to help coach the NFC All-Stars in the Pro Bowl.

Only two prep champions remain

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Only two of the Kansas high school football champions crowned last year — Wichita East and Kapaun-Mt. Carmel — are still alive and defending their crowns as the 1983 semifinal playoffs commence on Friday night.

East's Blue Aces put their 9-1 record on the line in Class 6A competition against upset-minded Wichita Southeast's Golden Buffaloes, 8-2. The Buffaloes will be looking for revenge, having lost to East 14-0 earlier in the season.

The other 6A match-up finds the Lawrence Lions, 6-4, taking on the highly touted Shawnee Mission West Vikings, 9-1 and ranked No. 1 in 6A much of the season.

In Class 5A, Kapaun's Crusaders, 8-2, must defend their crown against Salina South's Cougars, 8-2. However, the reigning champs are not favored to repeat. Pittsburg's Purple Dragons are 10-0 and rated on top in the class.

The Dragons will have to drop Roeland Park's Bishop Miege Stags to get a shot at the state title. And the Stags, at 9-1, promise to breathe a little fire of their own.

Fredonia's Yellowjackets, 10-1, face the Marysville Bulldogs in Class 4A action Friday. The Dogs also boast a 10-1 and will be a challenge to No. 1-rated Fredonia.

The Yellowjackets have played tenacious defense all season, and have shut out their last two opponents while scoring 78 points of their own. In the other 4A contest, Clay Center, 9-2, plays Norton, also 9-2.

The Class 3A semifinal games pit the No. 1 Osborne Bulldogs, 11-0, against Belleville's Buffaloes, 7-4. The Bulldogs have punished recent opponents, including a convincing 26-7 win over the powerful Hugoton Eagles.

Also in 3A, the No. 5 Yates Center Wildcats, 9-2, will play St. Marys, 9-2.

Garden Plain's Owls hope to hold off a hard-charging Stanton County in 2A action this weekend. The Owls, 10-0, were rated second in the poll one notch above the Trojans, 10-1.

The No. 4 Pittsburg-Colgan Panthers also are very much alive in 2A and will put their 10-1 record on the line against Holton-Jackson Heights' Cobras, also 10-1.

In Eight Man I action, a battle is on tap as No. 2 Highland, 10-0, faces No. 3 Logan, 10-0. In addition, unranked Jetmore, 8-2, takes on Bushton-Quivira Heights, 7-3.

A game between No. 5 Northern Valley, 10-1, and Ell-Saline, 9-2, in Salina highlights Eight Man II action. No. 3 Protection, 11-0, will tangle with Rolla, 10-1, which knocked off top-rated Ingalls to advance.

On Saturday afternoon, Frankfort's Wildcats, 9-1, will face Colony's Crest Lancers, 8-2, for the championship of Class 1A. The contest is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. at Emporia State University.

In the final AP poll, Frankfort was ranked No. 1 in the class and the Wildcats eliminated Baileyville's Falcons 20-14 in overtime on their way to the title game. Baileyville was the defending 1A champion.

A Little Night Music

Anne Egerman (Mary Peterson), the 18-year-old child bride of Fredrik Egerman (Chamblee Ferguson), readies herself for bedtime. After 11 months of marriage she remains a virgin.

A weekend in the country. Step in from the November chill — into a world where every night is a summer night, and every dream a possibility.

"A Little Night Music" takes place during the turn of the century in Sweden or as the program says, anywhere the night smiles.

The musical, set in waltz time, is a collection of love, lost love, unrequited love and new-found love.

The cast includes a middle-aged lawyer, Fredrik; his 18-year-old wife, Anne, who after almost a year of marriage is still a virgin; the lawyer's son, Henrik, a seminary student who is in love with his stepmother, Anne; and Petra, the lustful maid, who makes it with Henrik. Add to that Desiree Armfeldt, a famous actress who is an old love of Fredrik's, and Count Carl-Magnus Malcolm who is married to the Countess Malcolm, but has an affair with Desiree; and it's soap opera time!

The plot gets even more confusing, but this kind of confusion is fun.

The story takes off when Fredrik (Chamblee Ferguson), decides to visit Desiree for old time's sake. As Fredrik stands in a robe in Desiree's room, the Count, (J. V. Heffel), discovers the two together and flies into a jealous rage. After the Count storms out, he goes home and tells his wife, played by Kathleen Pfister, about how his mistress has been unfaithful. He talks her into telling Anne, (Mary Peterson), about Fredrik's infidelity. And that's just the beginning.

The lyrics, written by Stephen Sondheim, keep the audience on its toes, but it is the Madame Armfeldt, (Cheryl Shell), who gets many of the laughs. Madame Armfeldt is not only the Desiree's mother but the grandmother of Desiree's illegitimate daughter, Fredrika, played by Nancy Sloan. Scenes with these two break up the production as Madame Armfeldt tells Fredrika invaluable bits of warped wisdom she has accumulated over the years.

The old woman, hardened by her past youth, kicks out lines like, "The only thing that requires complete honesty is solitude," and makes the toast, "To life and to the only other reality — death."

The play, written by Hugh Wheeler, is so well put together some of the problems in the play's production can be overlooked.

The production was well done but some of the musical aspects could have been better. Characters in a musical have to be able to both sing and act, and considering that restriction, Kate Anderson, director of the musical, struck a good balance of actors and singers.

Although the musical was written in a light tone, with jokes and sarcastic witicisms constantly flying through the air, there was a more serious undertone that doesn't come out until the near end of the production. Rather than being merely about laughing at love and all its ups and downs, "A Little Night Music" is about being young and especially about growing old.

ABOVE: Egerman's son, Henrik (Clay Miller), and the housekeeper, Petra (Beth Sherby), are surprised as Mr. and Mrs. Egerman return home early from a play. Henrik, who suffers from post-adolescent puritanical guilt also has an unholy crush on his stepmother. LEFT: Fredrik Egerman's ex-mistress, Desiree (Linda Johnson), and Egerman share an intimate moment near the end of the play.

Minister urges 'Day After' precautions

By PATTI SHIPP
Collegian Reporter

A new dimension will be added to the controversy over the threat of nuclear war after the showing of "The Day After," a film depicting the aftereffects of a nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union. The film, set in Lawrence and Kansas City, Mo., will be televised at 7 p.m. Sunday on Cable Channel 9 and Channel 49.

"The Day After" begins with a view of a Kansas wheat field. The nuclear bomb is dropped shortly afterward and the viewer is left with the realization that life is very fragile, said Jack Bremer, a Lawrence campus minister, after he previewed the film.

Rod Saunders, Ecumenical Christian Ministries' campus minister, encouraged people to watch the movie and also take certain precautions.

"Watch the movie with someone else and talk about it," he advised.

As soon as you begin to feel any emotions about the movie, begin to discuss your feelings with those around you. If you are not watching the movie with someone, talk about it as soon as possible afterwards, Saunders said.

Another way to cope with feelings, he said, is to "realize that this (nuclear war) is a possibility and it can actually happen" and to put those feelings to use.

"Realize that the fear can be a motivation in a sense that there are positive acts that can be taken to stop the nuclear exchange," Saunders said.

He suggested that people who oppose nuclear attack should join an organization that is fighting the problem of the nuclear threat. He also suggested writing to congressmen and senators.

Saunders encourages people to watch the film because "it will mean that more than just a few people will be exposed to the reality of what nuclear war really means."

"This may be the first movie on this subject that will be seen by the mass audience," he said.

Viewing guides which help prepare viewers and help them discuss the movie after it's over also will encourage people to see the movie.

"The Day After" may not be an easy movie to watch. But precisely because it so accurately portrays the destructive potential of nuclear war, it is important that every American view the film," states the viewing guide published by Ground Zero, a non-advocacy nuclear war education organization.

ECM distributed the viewing guides Thursday in the Union. The guides were published by the Educators for Social Responsibility, the Cultural Information Service and Ground Zero.

"They (publishers of the viewing guides) have discovered that the movie is so powerful and so overwhelming that they want to get out as much information as possible," Saunders said, "and we (ECM) want to aid in that process."

The viewing guides also recommend that children under 12 should not view the film because they do not have the defense mechanisms to cope with the situation, Saunders said.

Lorraine Tudor, junior in journalism and mass communications and member of ECM, plans to watch the movie.

"I feel that the movie is very relative at this time," she said. "This is something that the American public needs to know. They need to be shocked into the reality of what a nuclear war could do to this country and to the world."

The discussion after watching the movie is very important, Tudor said. "People sometimes have trouble talking about things that they are afraid of. It's easier to put things out of your mind than to see the reality, to deal with it and to talk about it. That's why the movie is so important — so people will see what could really happen and not just forget about it," Tudor said.

In response to the Rev. Jerry Falwell's criticism of the film, Saunders said Falwell has underscored the meaning of what the movie is about.

"The question I would pose to him (Falwell) or anyone else who is concerned about communism is, 'Which is more dangerous to God's creation, nuclear weapons or communism?' A nuclear holocaust is much more threatening to God's creation than communism ever has or ever will be," Saunders said.

House subcommittee slams FCIC, calls for restructuring of agency

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Members of a House subcommittee Thursday tore into the government agency that is supposed to be farmers' main line of defense against crop losses, with one congressman calling it "a dead agency" and "a disgrace."

The target of derision was the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, an agency that was revamped in 1980 with the hope that farmers would turn to affordable insurance to protect them from storms, floods, drought and frost instead of turning to the federal government after the fact for disaster aid.

But participation in federal crop insurance has been dismal, with just 16 percent of eligible crops covered this year.

"I was talking to some farmers in western Kansas, and mentioned the FCIC," Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., told agency manager Merritt Sprague. "They laughed, like I was telling a joke. People don't believe you're credible."

Glickman, the author of two proposals to expand the agency's responsibilities, said he offered them "as a way to resurrect a dead agency, one with no participation, no imagination and no creativity. It is a disgrace. It is doing nothing...Can anybody else come up with a way to build interest in this system?"

Rep. Ed Jones, D-Tenn., chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee with insurance jurisdiction, said the 1980 law seems to have done little to revitalize and expand FCIC participation.

"To say that I have been disappointed thus far with the implementation of the 1980 act would be an understatement," Jones said.

"It seems clear to me that the administration intends for the crop insurance program to be the primary, if not the only, disaster relief program available to American farmers in the years to come. If this is to be the case, then we had better get serious about this program and get it in shape to make it work. After three years' time, if this program can't attract more producer participation than it has, then something is seriously wrong."

Sprague responded that the agency has "made great strides" toward improvement and expects to raise participation next year to 25 percent of eligible farmers. That growth will come with improved insurance contracts, more widespread individual tailoring of policies to specific farms and a more receptive attitude toward insurance engendered by the summer's drought, he said.

The agency took in about $330 million in premium payments in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, said Sprague, and paid out $630 in claims, for a loss of $300 million. Administrative costs were another $100 million or so, he said.

The hearing was called to examine several proposals for expanding FCIC coverage, including Glickman's legislation offering producers a "discount bank" for grain

KSDB to broadcast forum following nuclear war film

By The Collegian Staff

A live public affairs panel discussion will be broadcast at 9:30 p.m. Sunday on KSDB-FM as a forum for the expression of ideas and feelings following the premiere of the controversial television film "The Day After."

The film, which is scheduled to be aired on Channel 49 and Cable Channel 9 at 7 p.m. Sunday, depicts the chain of events after a nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Audiences who have previewed the film have commented about its realistic portrayal and intense psychological impact.

Psychologists have been quoted in the media as saying that because of the film's psychological effects, viewers should watch it in groups rather than alone.

"We're hoping to provide the community with a way to unwind and unload after the film and help them get over what they've seen," said David McFarland, moderator for the panel.

McFarland said the group will answer calls, discuss issues and ideas related to the movie and counsel callers about their feelings and reactions to it.

"We felt we could provide a service to the community,"

"The Day After," a movie made for television, graphically illustrates the effects of a nuclear holocaust.

'Nuclear holocaust' hits close to home

By PATTI SHIPP
Collegian Reporter

Fright and optimism were the general responses expressed by K-State students after watching "The Day After," the TV movie aired Sunday night about life before, during and after a nuclear attack on Kansas City and Lawrence.

Students gathered before television sets in residence halls, sorority and fraternity houses, the Union and in apartments and houses throughout Manhattan to watch the movie and to discuss their reactions and feelings.

"It was frightening and seemed very realistic because it was close to home, being filmed in Kansas City and Lawrence," Trish O'Connor, freshman in elementary education, said.

Herb Tucker, freshman in physics, said he hoped the movie would get people motivated to do something about the nuclear arms problems.

"The problem has to be brought to a level of awareness. Otherwise people in power will continue to make our decisions for us that aren't in the best interest of the people. The people in power are only interested in the power structure and not interested in the people," Tucker said.

Lorraine Tudor, junior in journalism and mass communications, said that the scene with the farmers was very realistic. Farmers were shown being instructed by a government agent how to recoup their losses and restore their land.

"The government will be using their nuclear jargon to tell the farmer what to do after the nuclear attack and the farmer is not going to understand," Tudor said.

"A lot of people believe that they are going to die if this would happen," Greg Matthews, junior in philosophy, said. "But many people avoid it at the subconscious level. They do not understand it and reject it and continue on with their daily lives. The basic belief that this will happen has not reached an equivalent amount of people who can stop this attack from happening."

Elisabeth Lodge, graduate in special education, said the movie was summed up for her in a statement by an Air Force serviceman after the missiles were launched but had not yet hit. He simply said "the war is over."

Lodge said an expression of her despair at the situation presented by the movie would be to continue on and do the things she would be doing in her normal daily routine. She compared this feeling to that of the woman on the farm who continued to make the bed even though she should have been in the cellar to protect herself from the radiation.

Cuban diplomat says U.S. must pay

By The Associated Press

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — The lone Cuban diplomat on Grenada says he's staying put until Cuba gets back $2 million in equipment used to construct the airport the Reagan administration contends was becoming a Cuban and Soviet military base.

"It is only right," says Gaston Diaz, who remains in the Cuban Embassy in St. George's with an aide, Pablo Mora. "I will not leave until I get a positive response."

"It's paradoxical and ironic that the country that accused us of building the airport for military purposes has now turned it into a military base," Diaz said during an interview at the embassy.

He said Cuba spent more than $35 million on construction and equipment for Point Salines airport, about a dozen miles south of St. George's, the capital.

The charge d'affaires wants the United States and Grenada to return vehicles, heavy equipment and machinery the Cubans were using to build it.

Diaz also insists on the return of a Cubana Airlines plane parked at Pearls Airport, Grenada's only commercial airstrip.

The diplomat and his aide say they are the only Cubans left of 784 who were on Grenada when the United States and Caribbean forces invaded the island Oct. 25. U.S. Army Gen. John Farris has said he believes 12 to 30 Cubans are hiding out in the hills or on Grenada's tiny out-islands.

The Cubans on Grenada when the invasion occurred were construction workers at the airport project and soldiers who Diaz said advised Prime Minister Maurice Bishop or were "engineering and technical experts."

The airport "would have been finished on time, in March of next year," Diaz said.

Armed trio kidnap heiress of Bulgari jewelry stores

By The Associated Press

CAMPO DI CARNE, Italy — Three masked gunmen kidnapped a Bulgari jewelry store heiress and her teen-age son from their country estate south of Rome, leaving her husband bound and beaten and eight servants tied up.

The men, armed with shotguns and submachine guns, lay in wait for Anna Bulgari Calisconi, 56, her husband, Franco, and 16-year-old son, Giorgio, at the villa Saturday night.

When the family returned home the gunmen grabbed their two victims and fled in Mrs. Calisconi's gray Fiat 132, which was found Sunday abandoned on a rural road. Police said there was no trace of the kidnappers or the victims, and no ransom demands have been reported.

Mrs. Calisconi's 69-year-old husband was hit with a gun butt during the abduction and was hospitalized for treatment of heart problems.

A jewelry designer, Mrs. Calisconi is co-owner with four of her cousins of the Bulgari jewelry stores in New York, Rome, Paris, Geneva and Monte Carlo.

Mrs. Calisconi's cousin Gianni Bulgari, another of the owners, was kidnapped on April 13, 1975, and freed a month later after the family paid a ransom equivalent to $2 million.

Giuseppe Mauri, the brother of one of the servants, was driving through the estate's gate as the kidnappers were driving out. Two of the gunmen drew their weapons, leaped out of the Fiat and demanded to know if Mauri were a policeman. When he said no, they ran back into the car and drove off.

Mauri discovered the bound victims, untied them and then drove in to town to call police.

Irish gunmen attack Protestant worshipers

By The Associated Press

DARKLEY, Northern Ireland — Two gunmen burst into a Protestant church during a Sunday night worship service and opened fire on the congregation with automatic weapons, killing three people and wounding at least seven, police reported.

Sgt. Cyril Davidson, a police spokesman in Belfast, said the killers fled in a car driven by an accomplice and police on both sides of the Irish border launched a search for them.

Davidson said the gunmen attacked during a prayer meeting at the Mountain Lodge Pentecostal Church in Darkley, a town in County Armagh three miles north of the border with the Irish Republic.

"On the face of it, it looks like a deliberate and naked sectarian attack," said a senior police officer who asked not to be identified.

Press Association, the British domestic news agency, said local residents believed the attack was in retaliation for the killing of a Roman Catholic, Adrian Carroll of nearby Armagh, two weeks ago.

An extremist Protestant group calling itself the Protestant Action Force said its members killed Carroll.

Sunday's deaths brought to 2,330 the number of people known to have been killed in Northern Ireland's sectarian violence that erupted in 1969.

The predominantly Catholic IRA and INLA are fighting to unite the British province and its Protestant majority with the Irish Republic, which is overwhelmingly Catholic.

Report lists ways to cut higher education costs

By LAURI DIEHL
Collegian Reporter

Kansas spends more per capita than most states for higher education, but a recently released state report suggests ways to reduce that spending.

According to a study published this month by the Legislative Division of Post Audit, Kansas ranked 11th in the nation in 1983 for per capita tax revenue appropriated for higher education.

The study reports the cost per student is slightly below average, but the state has more than an average number of students in public higher education institutions. The study reveals the state has more but smaller two-year institutions than most states.

The report offers several cost cutting suggestions to reduce higher education spending and bring about greater efficiency.

One alternative is to consolidate or reduce degree programs. Programs offered at several institutions could be eliminated entirely at one institution or scaled down to offer only courses needed to meet requirements in other majors.

Support termed austere but adequate

The Board of Regents is currently conducting a five-year study of program duplication. But Stanley Koplik, regents' executive director, said he does not foresee the Kansas Legislature making any program cuts on its own.

"We (regents) will be watched very carefully by the Legislature," he said. "We must show them that program cuts we make are the most effective ones possible. I believe we can do that."

John Visser, president of Emporia State University, said many schools have their own program reviews.

"Periodically, we review all of our degree programs to see if they're still productive," he said. "If they are not worth the resources we are putting into them, we look into discontinuing them."

Enrollment caps or restrictive enrollment policies were also suggested in the report. Leo Hafner, audit supervisor in the post audit division, said enrollment caps are being used at universities in Oregon and Colorado.

"Enrollment caps try to restrict the number of students attending a particular institution," he said. "The state will fund a school for a certain number of students. The school can accept more students, but those students will not be funded."

Restricting the number of students attending more popular institutions would encourage students to attend others with lower enrollments, Hafner said.

"This would keep enrollments at a certain level," he said. "That way one school will not be expanding while another is not making full use of existing facilities."

Koplik said enrollment caps for Kansas schools are unnecessary.

"Caps are good in situations where institutions may be looking at expanding their facilities. Building is expensive," he said. "But the demographics we're looking at in Kansas don't show institutions expanding beyond certain levels. We may be seeing enrollment go slightly the other way."

Reducing the number of institutions is another alternative the report suggests, with community colleges the primary area for such cuts.

James Ihrig, president of Cloud County Community College, said he does not foresee the report affecting the future of the school.

"It is difficult to say what a report of this nature will mean in the long term," he said. "I would like to believe we provide services that no one else in the area can provide."

Tuition increases were also suggested by the report. The report pointed to the low level of student support in funding higher education in comparison to other states.

The report uses fiscal year 1981 tuition figures and since then, Koplik said, Kansas colleges and universities have experienced two tuition increases. Still, tuition rates are lower than in most states, he said.

"At the present day, our tuition rates are probably less than the average for public schools," Koplik said. "Everyone has experienced tuition increases in the last two

Legislatures cut funding for colleges

By The College Press Service

An analyst of how state legislatures fund colleges said states are cutting back on their support of higher education, that the long-term outlook is gloomy, and that they ought to consider closing some state colleges in order to save others.

Tax cuts and the recession have forced many states to slow the growth in the amount of money they give to colleges, said Steven Gold, an analyst of government financing for the National Conference on State Legislatures.

"With the number of college graduates expected to decrease in most states and with the fiscal outlook fairly gloomy," Gold said. "I think higher education will continue to take its lumps in most states."

years."

These alternatives and others have been presented to the Legislative Education Planning Committee and will be presented to the legislature in its next session which begins in January.

Koplik opposes cutting state funding for higher education.

"I don't think there is a way to reduce the funding without diminishing the quality of education in Kansas," he said. "We (regents) have our own cost studies that I think are more accurate than this report."

Kansas is not spending too much for higher education, Koplik said.

"Our funding is less than many of our peer institutions," he said. "I know the funding is not too high."

Visser also said funding for higher education in Kansas is not high.

"The report is somewhat misleading," he said. "I don't think their research supports the conclusion that Kansas spends more than most states on higher education. I think the state funding situation is best expressed by a quote from the late Gov. Robert Docking, 'Kansas' support of higher education is austere but adequate.'"

Results of '83 Congress satisfy administration

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan didn't get everything he wanted from Congress this year, but he continued his three-year string of victories in holding down — if not cutting — federal spending.

The lawmakers did vote to spend about $11 billion on domestic programs Reagan said he didn't want, and they cut a like amount from the money he requested to continue the nation's defense buildup. But when measured against administration expectations at the start of the session, Reagan considered the results quite satisfactory.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, reviewing the final flurry of legislation after Congress adjourned Friday night, said the administration was generally pleased with the outcome.

"The best evidence is we're not vetoing anything," Fitzwater said. "We went in thinking there would be at least four or five (spending bills) we couldn't accept."

Reagan's starkest defeats were in domestic social policy, where liberal and many moderate members of Congress lined up against the president's conservative ideology. A constitutional amendment to permit prayers in public schools never even got within range of passage, and the Republican-controlled Senate rejected Reagan's plan to provide private school tuition tax credits. An administration plan to give poor families vouchers that would help them pay private-school tuition never went anywhere either.

The Senate also voted down a proposed amendment to ban abortions, but the House and Senate agreed to prohibit federally financed health insurance programs from paying for them.

Reagan boasted about passage of revisions in Medicare that he predicts will save $20 billion in hospital payments during the next five years. But missing from the final measure were his proposals to tax private health insurance benefits as income and give Medicare recipients the option of buying their own insurance with federal vouchers.

Congress invoked the War Powers Act for the first time to restrain a president's power to send troops into action on his own, but in doing so it gave Reagan permission to keep Marines in Lebanon for 18 months.

As the year began, Reagan faced dire predictions that the Democrats, whose House majority had been reinforced by 26 new members elected in 1982, could finally halt the Reagan juggernaut that had dominated the 97th Congress. Plans were laid to block the third year of the three-year, 25 percent income tax cut Reagan had won early on, and substantial tax increases were contemplated to cut into the huge deficit deplored by members of both parties.

The president resolved to veto any tax increase and vowed he would not permit a resumption of the high spending levels of earlier years. Administration concerns were borne out by early defeats in both the House and Senate, which bolted from Reagan's budget requests and set their own guidelines calling for new taxes and only modest spending cuts.

Reagan also suffered early setbacks in his effort to deploy the new long-range MX missile, which he insisted was crucial if the United States were to gain the Soviets' attention at the strategic arms talks.

But as time went on, the administration's skill in manipulating a divided Congress reappeared. Despite continuing concerns about administration policy in Central America, Reagan won passage of the Caribbean Basin Initiative he had sought for two years, and Congress authorized him to establish a new propaganda radio station, to be called Radio Marti, that will beam Spanish-language broadcasts at Cuba.

And in the closing weeks, as the House and Senate began floor action on the 13 appropriations bills that finance government operations, it became clear Reagan would lose less than his early setbacks had indicated. Few of those spending bills have been enacted in recent years, as Congress has become bogged down in the budget process and pulled itself out of financial crisis at the last minute with emergency spending legislation by-passing the formal legislative process.

Reagan often has lamented the lawmakers' inability to spend money in an orderly way, but this year, 10 of the 13 appropriations bills were passed, and the president found all of them close enough to his own spending goals that he has or is expected to sign all 10.

The $250 billion defense appropriation bill didn't contain all he wanted and dropped the money he had requested to resume production of weapons to wage chemical warfare. But the funds are there for all the other major weapons systems he had requested, including the MX missile, the B-1 bomber, 21 new ships and more M-1 tanks than the Army had asked for.

Although it will cost more than $15 billion for a domestic housing program he didn't want, Reagan finally won the $8.4 billion in increased aid for the International Monetary Fund that he had been seeking for months. Critics complained it was a bailout for big banks that made bad loans in the Third World.

For the first time, Reagan got a foreign aid package that meets most of his demands, although it does put some unwanted restrictions on aid to El Salvador.

CHEF CAFE FAST BECOMING A FAVORITE AMONG STUDENTS

Downtown nestled just a quarter of a block south of Poyntz on Fourth Street lies Manhattan's oldest family owned and operated restaurant, "the Chef Cafe." The Chef Cafe is to downtown like Kite's is to Aggieville, a big favorite with a long standing tradition.

Recently the Chef, after 30 years in the same area, just finished major expansion and remodeling which has been met with very favorable response especially among K-State students, and it's no wonder. There isn't an item on the menu over $3.95 and that includes the full course meals complete with the best salad bar downtown has to offer.

Couple this with the fact that students get a 10% discount card good for the whole semester just for the asking, it's no wonder they've found a home away from home.

And if you're a movie buff, staying open till 9 p.m. and being just across from the Warehouse Theater, enables many a movie goer to find the best possible combination for dinner and theater in town.

So if you're tired of eating out of a paper bag when, for the same price, you can enjoy homemade soups, pies, cookies, muffins, chili and daily specials then I'll be seeing you at "the Chef." And, oh yes, don't forget to ask for your student discount card.

Let JFK rest in peace

There is a trend developing in the United States toward memorializing any public figure from the past 25 years who has had a "dream."

The effort to keep John F. Kennedy alive can be witnessed by looking at the TV directory or the newspaper. Although Kennedy was shot 20 years ago, people refuse to let him die. It is time to stop living in the past and riding on the ideals of long ago.

Kennedy is being honored for his charisma by people who have memories of a dashing young man who would change the world. He knew how to deal with the media, which is the reason he was portrayed so well by them.

If Kennedy was alive today, he might be remembered primarily for getting the United States involved in Vietnam. Do we remember that? Who was the president who gave so much water to the seeds of U.S. involvement there? It was JFK.

Kennedy was not the perfect president and we need to stop thinking of him as such. He was a good man, but there are men and women shot and killed every day who are at least as "good." The only difference is that these people were not the sons and daughters of a rich man. And they didn't charm their way into the White House.

The fact that a man was shot and killed, even if he was John F. Kennedy, does not make him worthy of national commemoration and honor. We should not honor every public figure who dies at the hands of a gunman.

Kennedy was a decent president, but certainly not an outstanding one. He was shot and killed by an assassin. Now let him rest.

The reality of nuclear war

Editor,

Concerning ABC's movie "The Day After," I would like to address the notion that the movie's airing is purposely timed to coincide with a peace movement which has gained momentum in recent years, and one critic's complaint.

One should realize that there has always been a segment of our society which has held views represented by the movement, and another segment which sits on the other side of the table. There is nothing new about the existence of these two groups.

The camp to which Reagan belongs is quite obvious. His repeated comments on the possibility of a "limited nuclear war" hosted by our European friends at Washington's invitation, his advisers who insist that such an attack can be survived by having plenty of shovels on hand and three inches of dirt over your head when a bomb detonates, and a runaway military budget leaving a well of red ink make his position clear. Few deserve as much credit as the retired Hollywood actor for the recent support the peace movement has enjoyed.

It is because the hawks have such clout that the opposition has finally become visible in the United States, and the movie happens to be shown when the peace issue is part of people's thoughts. If ABC would show it when there wasn't as much talk about the arms race, the same critics would accuse them of trying to "stir up trouble" or "make a mountain out of a molehill." There isn't a time when the movie could be aired without criticism.

The second issue is an argument put forth by Rev. Jerry Falwell. He has accused the film of presenting nuclear war in a bad light. The purpose of the film is not to pretend that war is attractive, but that it can bring about hell on earth in a matter of minutes.

That point cannot be overstated. I have been to Hiroshima several times. I have seen the films of a city flattened in four seconds, of people whose flesh has melted and dripped off their bodies, of the thousands of people dying from then-unknown diseases which no doctor could treat. I have heard the story from a survivor of the Hiroshima bomb, scarred all over her body by flying shards of glass. These people, most of whom died within four days of the atomic bombing, know that "The Day After" is not science fiction.

Come on Americans. Let's wake up to reality. One of Friday's editorials said it well: "The American people have been sheltered from the pain and death of war. It is time to be exposed to it."

The day before

Last night "The Day After," a film about the aftermath of nuclear holocaust, was shown on ABC.

It's always been my opinion that if it was appropriate to say something once it's appropriate to say it again. Therefore, as a follow-up to that film, in this space today I will resubmit (with the exception of the first two paragraphs, which are not relevant here) my column "Mass Suicide," which appeared originally in the Oct. 24 issue of the Collegian.

JOEL CLIMENHAGA
Collegian Columnist

Last year, I received a letter from an editor of a magazine accepting a poem of mine. He went on to say he hoped to publish the poem "prior to Armageddon." It was clear he meant the phrase as a metaphor for the collision course political leaders have the world on, which can only end up being all-out nuclear war.

I objected at the time — and still do — to the use of the word "Armageddon." Being the son of a man who was a fundamentalist evangelical holiness fire-and-brimstone preacher, I was exposed to eschatological theology from my beginning. I am very familiar with the theological concept of Armageddon.

Belief in Armageddon implies a belief in a thousand years of peace afterwards. True believers in Armageddon want it to come! Belief in Armageddon carries with it the concomitant belief in prophecy, the signs of the times, the Second Coming of Christ, the Rapture, the saving of the saints from the years of tribulation, and all that jazz.

I can't remember a time when among those people who form my ancestral and sociological heritage, Armageddon and all the rest has not been "just around the corner" (just like prosperity was just around the corner among the Republicans of my childhood during the Great Depression). Among my relatives in Pennsylvania and Canada, belief in Armageddon and all the rest is still what seems to me to be their most powerful article of faith.

The threat of nuclear annihilation is very real — something which should be, must be (if we are to survive), taken very seriously.

The trouble with using the concept of Armageddon as a metaphor for nuclear threat is that it isn't serious enough. It isn't accurate enough.

To make Armageddon synonymous with nuclear obliteration is a mistake.

Should nuclear exchange occur, there will be no remnant, there will be no saints saved, there will not be some taken away to heaven (or wherever) in order to be free from the years of tribulation.

Armageddon, on the other hand, promises the Second Coming of Christ, promises the Rapture, promises the thousand years of peace afterwards. Using the word Armageddon when what is meant is nuclear confrontation and the subsequent suicide of the human species is to create an illusion — an illusion which, unfortunately, is buried in our Jungian subliminal unconscious — that there will somehow be a remnant. That's what political leaders are doing — trying to brainwash us into believing that somehow after the Bomb there will be survivors (that somehow the moon will go on shining over Miami, so to speak).

Don't misinterpret what I am saying here. I am not taking any "political" side. I do not know of any leader of any nation whose hands are not mired in the development of ever greater and greater nuclear threat. It is not a matter of political ideology. It is instead what seems to me to be a mistaken notion of what constitutes power.

I believe the threat of nuclear suicide should be taken seriously, should be taken factually, should be called exactly what it is.

This is one time when what must be made is a straight prose declaration. This is one time when metaphor does not communicate, when symbol tells a lie, when poetry will not do. This is one time when there is only one way to describe it.

Suicide of the human species.

Not to call it holocaust. Not to call it all-out war. Not to call it Armageddon. All those imply that somehow there can be a remnant.

Murder doesn't describe it. Killing doesn't describe it. Not even death describes it. All those imply something left afterwards. The murderer remains after murder. The killer remains after killing. There is no death without life.

The only way to say it is to face the fact unblinkingly — and call it exactly what it is: suicide of the human species.

If only all word-users and word-worshippers were to comprehend that this is one time when there are no synonyms; if only all poets were to realize there is no poem that can be written on this subject, then perhaps there would be enough cultural force gathered from the effect of our understanding that even political leaders could grasp that their rhetoric had no more appeal because no one hearing believed it.

Were that to happen, there would be hope once again. There would come the ability to work our way out of this paralyzing mess our "leaders" have us in.

An old statement says, "...and the truth shall make you free." I have tried to tell the truth here.

Last night "The Day After" was shown on ABC. Its statement cannot be misinterpreted, cannot be shrugged away.

As a species we will become extinct through our own hands — if we do not reverse our path. In that "if" is all the hope of the world. That "if" clearly indicates the fact that such reversal can happen.

Should nuclear exchange occur, it will not matter who started what. All that will matter then is that everything which is human will be finished.

As a species we need not finish ourselves. As a species we can still avoid "The Day After."

We can instead reverse our path — making this the day before we turn our backs on mass suicide, making this the day we start toward non-destructive means of settling our disputes.

The turkey minority

The turkey is one of the most discriminated-against birds in our "equal rights" country.

"Discrimination" refers to any action or treatment which deprives a particular category of someone equal access to what life offers — someone like a turkey.

Besides being discriminated against, many folks are prejudiced against turkeys.

The term "prejudice" refers to the biased, emotional attitudes people have about something — something like being a turkey.

The turkey is a definite minority. It's not like the cows and pigs who get attention throughout the year. The turkey is only appreciated on holidays.

Every Thanksgiving, thousands of turkeys lose their right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. But do you see anyone setting up any special laws just for the turkeys?

The turkey should be commended. Never has a turkey screamed that it wants equal rights with the chickens...or even geese or ducks. Never have any had due process of law before they are sentenced to be a Thanksgiving meal.

Turkeys are a minority but are not given special consideration above the chickens to have THEIR free rights. They just continue to be the best turkeys that they can.

You don't see any turkeys demanding a national "Tom Turkey Day" to commemorate all the turkeys that have suffered and the dream that someday, turkeys will be a protected species.

EDEE DALKE
Collegian Columnist

You don't see any turkeys demanding that a version of the Bible be written inserting THEIR names: "And there were shepherds abiding in their fields, keeping watch over their flocks and their turkeys by night."

And you don't see any turkeys demanding that there be a percentage of turkeys represented with Turkey McNuggets or Kentucky Fried Turkey.

Turkeys also must live with prejudicial turkey jokes. Have you ever thought about the effect that it has on a turkey to hear the expression that someone is "a real turkey"? To them, it is slamming their own family. But they just go on, being the best turkeys that they can. No one gives them special considerations.

A turkey will always be a turkey. It has not had the fair chances to have equal opportunities. No one can tell turkeys "you've come a long way gosling." They don't squabble about not being "accepted." They just go on, being the best turkeys that they can.

The fact that they're turkeys might be the only thing considered when it comes to hen house promotions. But the "outstanding turkeys" might get top loft because they have WORKED for it, not because they were minority turkeys. They know that they can't slide by...just because they are turkeys.

Some turkeys are a rare breed. Through all the discrimination, they just go on, being the best turkeys that they can.

But there are turkeys who think they can be handed everything on a "platter." These are the ones who scream "discrimination," every time they don't get what they want. The chickens have every right to protest this reverse discrimination.

"Reverse discrimination" refers to any action that tries to compensate for one category's discrimination and therefore overcompensates and discriminates against the other category.

Whether it be turkeys, blacks, women, or any other so-called minority; discrimination is being reversed and equality is meaning "representation of equal CATEGORY," not equal quality.

MISS JONES, IT'S MARGARET THATCHER'S BIRTHDAY... SEND HER SOME MARINES WITH A NICE LITTLE NOTE...

A young man with charisma

It was a beautiful day in the big Texas city.

The sun was shining down on a parade. The president and his young wife were riding in an open car, waving to the cheering crowd. A luncheon awaited them.

Suddenly, three shots rang out. The president slumped forward, his brain made into jelly by an assassin's bullet.

While this may sound like a plot line of a television soap opera, it is not. The events above occurred 20 years ago Tuesday.

President John Fitzgerald Kennedy became the fourth president of the United States to be assassinated while in office. He was shot shortly after 12:30 p.m. Nov. 22, 1963, while riding in a motorcade through downtown Dallas. He was taken to a Dallas hospital, where he died shortly after 1 p.m.

Interest in Kennedy has recently blossomed, due to the 20th anniversary of his assassination. Magazines are printing articles about Kennedy. The television networks have shown, or will show, specials about Kennedy. Newspapers are printing "where-were-you-when-Kennedy-was-shot" articles. Nostalgia may rule the day.

For the record, I don't know where I was when President Kennedy was killed. Hey, give me a break — I was all of 2 years old when the incident occurred. The murder of the president wasn't high on my agenda of worries at that time.

Not so anymore. I'm not studying every minute detail of Kennedy's assassination. I've got too many other things to study right now. But I have read articles and books pertaining to Kennedy. I find his presidency fascinating to study.

What was it like to hear this young president, at his inauguration address in 1961, tell a nation that America was embarking on a "New Frontier"? Who could have believed his pledge to have an American walking on the moon by the end of the decade?

BRIAN LA RUE
Collegian Columnist

The Bay of Pigs incident could have defeated Kennedy. He could have taken the "big plunge" after admitting he sent Cuban exiles, without air support to back them up, to invade Cuba and topple Fidel Castro. The exiles had no chance of victory without the air support. Castro used this incident as propaganda against America. Kennedy took responsibility for the actions.

When Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev met in Vienna, Kennedy was supposed to knuckle under to the Soviet leader's demands and wishes. Instead, Kennedy held his ground and gained respect.

Kennedy added to this respect by his stand during the Cuban missile crisis. He played hardball with Khrushchev and made his demands clear: get the missiles out of Cuba, or else...

I guess the world lived under a very tight strain for a couple of days before the Soviet leader backed down and had the missiles removed from Cuba. I say "I guess" because I, obviously, don't remember this crisis. All I know is what I have read, watched and have been told about it.

From watching old news footage of Kennedy, I can see how he was able to sway an audience. He was handsome, young, energetic, vibrant and poised. The press conferences looked like fun, not staid, stuffy gatherings. He joked with the press, and the reporters responded in kind.

He had a beautiful, yet shy wife and two young children. It was as if he was the head of a corporation — rich, but likable; strong-willed, yet compassionate. The Bostonian accent was noticeable at first, but no more irritable than Lyndon Johnson's Texas drawl. The aristocrat and the cowboy made an all-American team.

Probably the best public relations coup Kennedy made was during his visit to West Berlin in 1963, when he proclaimed "Ich bin ein Berliner" — "I am a Berliner." What better way to give moral support to a city divided by ideologies and a wall?

The hardest fight Kennedy won was battling critics who charged that if Kennedy, a Roman Catholic, won, the pope would then rule America. He attacked the issue during the 1960 Democratic primaries by stating he was an American. He had an aura about him which no one could defeat.

Except for three shots from a rifle in Dallas.

The years Kennedy were in office have been called "Camelot," the kingdom of King Arthur. It was, in many ways, a magical time. The handsome couple could do little wrong.

Except send American soldiers to a place called Vietnam. Except not fulfill his promise for civil rights for all. Except he was the son of a rich man, and some distrusted his father's motives.

It all matters little now. Three shots put an end to Camelot's reality, and made the legend of Camelot all too real all too soon.

However, I guess all legends are better than reality.

Students create one-night 'restaurant'

By PAM JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Moments before the guests arrived, the host, hostess and 14 waiters and waitresses scurried to double-check the dining room tables, cornucopia decorations and place settings. As the doors to Justin Hall were opened on Sunday night, the air was scented with the aroma of barbecued ribs, twice-baked potatoes and hot biscuits. The Country Harvest Dinner, prepared by the Restaurant Management Club, was ready to be served.

Preparations for the event involved 30 people and took 14 hours. Justin Hall lounge was transformed into a one-day, 100-seat capacity restaurant and food was prepared in the quantity food laboratories. Each process of preparation — from marinating, seasoning, slicing and cooking the food to carving a cornucopia-shaped ice sculpture for a table centerpiece — had to be ready on time with no imperfections.

Like restaurant managers, students in the club did all of the planning, purchasing, preparing and serving the dinner. Each member worked in each step of putting on the dinner, gaining insight on how a restaurant operates.

In preparing for the dinner, students see and experience what they cannot in a classroom, said Charlie Partlow, instructor in dietetics and institutional management. He is also the faculty adviser of the Restaurant Management Club.

Club sponsors special dinner

"While 75-85 percent of the club (members) have had experience in working in a restaurant, other members learn in class the basics of putting on a large quantity meal such as a restaurant serves," said Partlow.

Through classes and training sessions, students learn proper table settings, how to smile and greet customers and to serve in the correct manner. In waiting tables it's important to know the entree is served from the left and placed toward the customer, and again removed from the left. The beverage is served from the right and also removed from the left.

Customers realize the style in which they are being served, according to Stephanie Burke, senior in restaurant management and president of the Restaurant Management Club.

Burke emphasized how the restaurant crews should work together to avoid mistakes and have a successful dinner.

"Although this is a learning experience for us, we do stress having a good time while maintaining a professional attitude," she said.

In early preparation for the dinner, a name, menu and decorations to accompany the theme were chosen in September. Members took into account past dinner themes and the number of people attending in those years, Partlow said.

"We decided on a Country Harvest Dinner because it was a Kansas theme. In planning our menu, we had to think of our competition with other restaurants and their Sunday night menus. We also took into consideration what people were doing that evening. For the type of meal we selected, we had to consider the variety, texture, flavors, appearance and popularity of each item for the dinner to get a balanced menu. After becoming confident with the menu choice, club members sold tickets which paid about 40 percent of the total meal cost," Partlow said.

"Once a year you can psych yourself up and prepare for the dinner," said Patti Simonis, graduate student in institutional management. "Like people in the restaurant business, you have to have a personality and willingness to greet and wait on people. The proceeds we earn from this dinner go to pay for our expenses to Chicago for the national Restaurant Management Club convention in the spring."

"Comments from our dinner are usually good. We do get constructive criticism which we take in at our evaluation of the dinner afterwards. It helps us prepare for the next year's dinner," she said.

Some of the equipment needed for the dinner was donated or sold by area restaurants to the Restaurant Management Club. The same procedures at a restaurant are followed for the dinner. For a dinner this size, it helps to have equipment to speed cooking so food can be prepared ahead of time, Partlow said.

In addition, 100 percent of the items are made prior to the dinner, he said, adding that everything is worked out on paper first, so that each operation will run smoothly.

"After three settings of the tables, and each seating is served, we sit down and evaluate our dinner. This is one way we learn from each other and helps us prepare quality dinners later," Partlow said.

Women discuss business experiences

By LUCINDA ELLISON
Manhattan Editor

Two women, speaking about their experiences in the business world, were the featured panelists for the Friday Focus on Women.

The program, "Business Women in Manhattan," was the last of this semester's series. Pat Ball, co-owner of Functions, 1123 Moro St., and Terry Nelson, owner of the East Side Market, 124 E. Poyntz Ave., and Westside Market, 531 Richards Drive, spoke on their experiences in beginning and operating a business. Julie Strecker, of Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave., was also scheduled to speak, but was not present.

Nelson began business eight years ago with East Side Market in a partnership with her sister.

"It evolved into an individual ownership business after five years," she said.

Although Nelson said she thinks women in a corporation are likely to be discriminated against, she has not suffered from discrimination in her business.

"I don't feel like I've experienced any tremendous amount of discrimination," she said. "Being a woman in business hasn't been a problem for me. It's an asset to me and it has been."

Ball, who began business first as the owner of a real estate agency, experienced some discrimination then through working with women clients.

"It was my experience that single women could not get loans on houses," she said. "That has changed over the years, which is good."

Recently, Ball and her husband opened the store in Aggieville. Because she knew nothing about retail business, she affiliated with a similar store in Kansas City. Being associated with an established business has helped Ball establish credit, she said.

Although she has changed the type of business she operates, Ball said she does not think people must continue doing the same thing throughout their career.

"I never thought just because I was good at one thing, I had to keep doing that thing. Just because you do something doesn't mean you can't change down the line and do something else," she said. "Age has nothing to do with it."

After the women discussed their individual businesses, members of the audience asked questions about their business experiences.

During the remaining time, the women discussed budgets, advertising, paper work and trends in business. Another concern — the problems women face with co-ownership and state laws — was discussed.

"Kansas is a pretty good state for women," Ball said. There are two ways in which a woman can own a business with her husband. The couple can own the business as tenants in common, or joint tenancy, she said.

"If the husband dies, the woman either gets the property, or one-half with the other half being distributed among the heirs," she said.

"There's another side to that. Once you get half of it (the business), you have to be responsible for half of it," Ball added.

Nelson stressed the fact that women don't have to be victimized by the law in business ownership cases.

"You can read the law. You can go to a lawyer," she said. "If you are astute enough to be in business, you can be aware of those things."

Flattery gets couple somewhere

DENVER — Newlyweds Milly Draper and Rich Walker wanted to stay at "The Brown" on their wedding night, but didn't have the green — so they requested and received a nuptial gift from Denver's Brown Palace Hotel.

Ms. Draper, a teacher's aide and part-time bus driver, wrote to hotel president Art Mangual before her marriage to Walker, a policeman, on Saturday.

"Both my fiancé and I are natives of Denver and appreciate the cultural heritage and historical significance of the Brown," she wrote. "However, I'm afraid we cannot afford the cost of even a one-night stay."

"Both of us have large families; he has four children and I have five. We are having a large wedding, and unlike young people whose parents usually foot the bill, we are paying the expenses ourselves," she wrote.

She said she and her husband-to-be were willing "to work off the cost of our stay at your fabulous hotel."

The flattery got her somewhere. Mangual responded by telling Ms. Draper, 44, and Walker, 39, that a limousine would pick them up at their wedding reception and that their stay in the Brown's $350-per-night bridal suite was on the hotel.

The couple's stay ended after breakfast Sunday.

Shields enters basic acting class

PRINCETON, N.J. — Brooke Shields, who at 18 is a veteran film actress, has been accepted into a beginning acting course at Princeton University.

Miss Shields, star of "Pretty Baby," "Endless Love" and "The Blue Lagoon," was among 34 students recently accepted for the spring term of Acting 207, described in the course catalog as "a workshop at the basic level, designed to introduce students to some of the requirements of acting ...."

'Real People' host cheers 'Huskers'

OMAHA, Neb. — Skip Stephenson, co-host of NBC's "Real People," returned to his hometown for a benefit for his high school last week, and now says he'll join the University of Nebraska's yell squad when the Cornhuskers meet Oklahoma in football.

Saturday's game to decide the Big Eight Conference championship will be televised nationally from Norman, Okla. If top-ranked Nebraska wins, it would be the third straight Big Eight title for the Cornhuskers, bound this year for the Orange Bowl.

Junk collection 'has no continuity'

BISMARCK, N.D. — Quiz for the day: What do a sombrero, a cat's tombstone, a chunk of rock from the Philippines, an opium pipe and a dentist's advertisement for false teeth have in common?

All are artifacts belonging to the North Dakota Historical Society, now part of an exhibit called "Gems, Junk or What?" at the state's museum, the Heritage Center.

"You name it, we've got it," said Robert Hollow, collections curator.

Hollow and staff rummaged through the society's attic and came up with some of the oddest paraphernalia ever acquired by the Historical Society. Not surprisingly, much of it has never been displayed before.

The exhibit is typical of those of the 19th century, before curators came up with the idea of building exhibits around themes, Hollow said. "There's no continuity. It's just things," he said.

For those rushing out to get tickets now, take it easy — the exhibit runs through Jan. 29.

Clinical trials examine value of bypass surgery

By The Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Bypass surgery to soothe chest pain and prevent heart attacks has grown to become a $3 billion a year industry in the United States, while a critical question has remained unanswered. Does the surgery increase a patient's chances of survival?

Ten years ago, the federal government's National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute was given the resources to conduct the definitive, long-term study of coronary artery bypass surgery.

Last week, the results of the completed Coronary Artery Surgery Study were analyzed and discussed by many of the 15,000 cardiologists and others at the annual meeting of the American Heart Association.

The study's conclusions: The surgery may prolong life in some patients some of the time.

But which patients? And under what circumstances? In numerous discussions at the heart association meeting, doctors disagreed.

"Coronary artery surgery has been scrutinized more than any other operation in the history of medicine or surgery," said Dr. Floyd Loop of the Cleveland Clinic Foundation.

Yet the questions remain.

Scientists are finding out that doing research on any form of heart disease or heart disease treatment is exceedingly difficult.

There are many reasons, but one of them is that the rate of heart disease deaths is dropping rather quickly all by itself.

Nobody knows why that should be happening. But it is difficult to tell whether, for example, bypass surgery is lowering the number of deaths when that number is dropping already.

The Coronary Artery Surgery Study — which involved 25,000 patients — was what's called a clinical trial.

Through careful statistical procedures, patients who were admitted to the study were evaluated, and in those for whom there was a choice of whether to have surgery, some were given surgery and some were not.

Various other risk factors for heart disease — such as high blood pressure, smoking and obesity — were ruled out of consideration by matching patients who had surgery with patients who were otherwise identical in terms of risk factors.

Then the matched groups could be followed to see whether surgery made a difference.

Such clinical trials are extremely expensive and time-consuming. Enormous numbers of patients must be included to make the proper matches, and the patients must be followed for a long period.

Another recently announced clinical trial, the MRFIT (or "Mr. Fit") study, was also confounded by the drop in heart disease deaths.

MRFIT — the Multiple Risk Factor Intervention Trial — was intended to see whether lowering the risk factors for heart disease would reduce deaths.

One group of patients was instructed to lower its risks; the other group was to serve as a control, for comparison purposes, and was not told to change habits.

Children's Thanksgiving recipes

By CATHY KARLIN
Features Editor

Thanksgiving dinner — that turkey-trimmed hour of eating oneself into oblivion — is traditionally a home-cooked meal. It's a time to dig past the frozen TV dinners and hamburger patties in the freezer and pull out the bird.

Cooking a Thanksgiving dinner can be a satisfying way to showcase your culinary skills. For the less experienced cook, preparing a feast of turkey, potatoes and pie can be a traumatic experience.

Though making the dinner may be intimidating for the person with limited cooking skills, the best way to learn is to plunge in and do it. All that is needed is an adventurous spirit, creativity and good recipes.

The following are simple recipes that even the most inexperienced cook can follow. They were created by the members of Joyce Crill's first-grade class and Ruth Morgan's third-grade class at Marlatt School. Though these recipes are not guaranteed for success, they do provide fresh techniques for preparing the traditional meal.

Dinner by Jane.

Have turkey and stuffing. Take bread, then you mix it up and put it in oven. Bake in a hot oven for 2 hours. I'll drink 7UP but the rest of the family will have wine. Serves 7 people.

Roos by Jamie

The oven should be about 130 degrees. I will make 1 pound of dow. You take the dow from the paper and flatten it out. Then cut some cyrcs. Then bake them in oven for about 20 minutes. I drink root beer. It will serve about 5 people.

Dinner by Brian.

Serve turkey, drinks and punch. Smush some butter on potatoes. Stuff turkey with butter. Put it on a pan. It weighs 2 lbs. Bake for 2 hours at 3 degrees. Have jello for dessert. Serves 10.

Dinner by Sandy.

Have steak, peas and jello. Fix in a warm oven. Drink orange juice and tea.

Dinner by Cory.

Have turkey, peas, strawberry ice cream and cold tea. Get a 6-pound turkey. Cut it into pieces. Take all bones out. Cook in oven at a warm temperature for a long time. Serves 5.

Dinner by Kristen.

Eat hot dogs. Meat would be good too. For dessert, serve orange ice cream. Serves 6 people.

Dinner by Jay.

Have turkey, maybe some carrots, and pumpkin or apple pie. Put turkey in oven and cook it at a hot temperature. For potatoes, I take a fork and mash them. Put juice from meat, and squeeze it out, and put it in. I take little tiny strips of meat and put it in the dressing. Drink maybe a punch. Serves quite a few people.

Dinner by Aaron.

Turkey, mash potatoes, corn, gravy and pumpkin pie. First go to the store and buy a 50-pound turkey and a bag of corn and a can of pumpkin mix, and 7 potatoes and a stick of butter. Cook the turkey and potatoes for 7 minutes. Make some gravy. Put pumpkin mix in the mixer and add a pinch of sugar. Then put the crust in the pan. Cook about 8 minutes. It will serve about 10 people.

Cranberry sauce by Christina.

I go to the store and buy some cranberry sauce. One can. Open the can. Drink Dr. Pepper.

Turkey by Christina.

Get a 6-pound turkey. Take the wrap off. Cook half with barbecue sauce and half without for 2 hours. Drink Dr. Pepper. Will serve 4 or more people.

Cranberry sauce by Jamie.

First you go to the store. Then you get a pound of cranberries, 2 apples and 3 oranges. First you get a grinder and grind the cranberries. Then grind the oranges. Then the apples. Then mix them all together. It takes about 15 minutes to make. I drink Pepsi.

Mashed potatoes by Jeremy.

Get 5 potatoes. Then put in hot water for 20 min. Take them out of water. Take off skin. Mash them up in a bowl.

Mashed potatoes and gravy, anonymous.

J. TORCZON
K-STATE COLLEGIAN

Get some potatoes. Skin them. Put them in the oven at 100 degrees. Mash them. For gravy: get some milk. Get some flour. Get a pan. Get some grease. Pour the grease into the pan. Pour the milk in the pan. Put some flour in the pan.

Yum! Pumpkin pie by Amy.

To make crust: 2 eggs, beaten; 1 cup flour; 3 teaspoons salt; 1 cup water. After bottom crust is on put pumpkin in: 2 cans pumpkin; 1 tsp.

water; 3 teaspoons sugar; 5 pinches of cinnamon. Put top crust on. Fold at side and make ruffley. Put in oven at 200 degrees for 25 minutes. After, you may put on whip cream, raisins and other fine things or serve alone.

Stuffed chicken breasts and mushroom gravy by Paul.

Buy 9 chicken breasts. Put in stuffing. Put in oven for 2 hours on 500. For mushroom gravy: Slice 4 pounds of mushrooms in a pot. Clean mushrooms. Put in oven for a half hour.

String beans by Julia.

Take 3 pounds of string beans and put them in water and turn on oven. Cook 20-30 minutes. Drink raspberry Kool-ade. Serves 12 people.

Dinner by Kevin.

Have turkey, mashed potatoes, gravy and corn. For dessert, pumpkin pie. Bake turkey at 5 degrees for 2 hours. Take all wrappers off first. I think it serves 6 people.

Mashed potatoes by Bethany.

Go buy 10 potatoes. Take them home. Wash them. Peel the skin off. Then you turn the oven to 110 degrees. Then you cut up the potatoes and mash them up. Then put the potatoes in the oven and let them cook 10 minutes. Take them out and they're ready.

Buffaloes stampede over Wildcats

K-State finishes in Big Eight cellar

Greg Dageforde is helped up from the turf after injuring his ankle in the second quarter. Dageforde recorded 100 yards prior to his injury.

By KEVIN DALE
Staff Writer

No one thought it could happen again — but it did.

For the second straight week K-State's football team blew a halftime lead and allowed the opponents to score more than 30 points in the second half. This time, it was the University of Colorado that wiped out a 21-7 halftime deficit by scoring 31 second-half points en route to a 38-21 defeat of the Wildcats.

Saturday's Big Eight Conference clash in Boulder, Colo., — the final game of the season for both teams — gave K-State a 1-6 league record (3-8 overall) and put the 'Cats in last place in the Big Eight for the 16th time in the 26 years since it joined the conference. Colorado, which now has an overall record of 4-7, finished in a three-way tie for sixth place with the University of Kansas and Iowa State University with 2-5 conference records.

"We seem to figure out a different way to lose it each week," said Jim Dickey, Wildcat head coach. "We let them execute in the second half and we played very poorly. It's an embarrassing way to end a season."

In a fashion similar to last week's tussle against Iowa State when K-State had a commanding 21-12 lead at intermission, the 'Cats pushed CU all over the field and managed a 21-7 halftime edge despite four turnovers.

Fumbles hampered scoring chances by the Wildcats in the first quarter, in which they had 125 yards in total offense. But with just over a minute left in that quarter, the 'Cats embarked on what turned out to be their first scoring drive of the game — a 11-play, 80-yard march that culminated with a touchdown pass with 11 minutes remaining in the second quarter.

Facing a first-and-10 at the CU 20, 'Cat quarterback Stan Weber rolled right and hit tight end Eric Bailey at the 10. Bailey sidestepped a Buffalo defender and walked into the end zone. Steve Willis connected on the extra point and the 'Cats led 7-0.

K-State's defense then gave the offense another golden opportunity. On third-and-six, CU quarterback Derek Marshall overthrew Dave Hestera and 'Cat safety Pat Hall picked off the pass to give K-State the ball at the CU 47.

On first down, Greg Dageforde took a hand-off from Weber and raced 24 yards to the Buffalo 23.

Two plays later Dageforde ran right and was stopped at the CU 9. As he was tackled, he twisted his left ankle and was forced to leave the game.

The injury spoiled an possible record-breaking day for Dageforde, who had collected 100 yards on 13 carries in just 20 minutes of play.

Without Dageforde, it was up to Weber to pick up the slack in the offense — and he responded well. With 8:26 remaining before halftime, Weber ran around right end from the 9 and dove into the corner of the end zone for the 'Cats' second touchdown. Willis nailed the extra point and K-State pushed its lead to 14-0.

At this point, CU made a quarterback change and started to move the ball.

Junior Steve Vogel, who has started all but three games this year, came in to move CU 70 yards in just six plays, capped by fullback Chris McLemore's 1-yard touchdown plunge. Tom Field was good on the extra point kick as the Buffs trailed 14-7.

Behind the running of freshman

Eric Mack (88) sits on his knees in frustration as the Colorado defensive unit celebrates Kent Davis' fourth-quarter interception near the end zone. The 'Cats had eight turnovers in the game.

Todd Moody, K-State struck back with a 13-play, 74-yard scoring drive. At first-and-goal from the 4, Weber rolled right and ran in for his second touchdown of the day. Willis made his 48th straight extra point kick and the Wildcats took a 21-7 intermission lead.

Then came the nightmarish second half.

On K-State's first play from scrimmage, CU recovered a fumble by Moody after he had gained 7 yards. Two plays later, CU trimmed the 'Cats lead to 21-14 on a 13-yard scoring pass from Vogel to Darryl Johnson with just 36 seconds gone in the third quarter.

On K-State's next possession, Moody again fumbled on an errant pitch and CU's Kent Davis jumped on the ball. The bobbie by Moody tied a school record for fumbles lost in a game with six.

CU capitalized on the miscue on just one play as Vogel hit fullback Lee Rouson with a 28-yard scoring pass. Field was good on the extra point try to give the Buffs a 21-21 tie.

The Wildcat offense refused to fold, however, as a determined Stan Weber began to move to team again by carrying the ball seven times in a row to move the 'Cats to their own 42. Runningback Carlos Adams moved the ball into CU territory, but then the Buffs' defense held.

K-State was forced to punt and CU's ensuing drive wound up on a 40-yard field goal by Field with 4:52 remaining in the third to give CU a 24-21 lead it never relinquished.

CU scored again on its next possession when Vogel capped a 11-play, 77-yard drive with a 17-yard touchdown pass to Ron Brown. Field kicked the extra point to move the score to 31-21 in favor of the Buffaloes.

K-State began to move the ball once again when CU cornerback Victor Scott picked off a Weber pass and ran 71 yards for the game's final touchdown. Field's conversion provided the final score of 38-21.

"I still don't know where we went wrong today," Weber said. "We made some mistakes, but it was like an instant replay of last week."

K-State dominated the statistics with 455 total offensive yards compared with 350 for CU, however, that wasn't all K-State dominated. The 'Cats had eight turnovers compared to four by CU.

Dageforde's 100 yards led all rushers. CU was paced by Rouson with 79 yards on 11 carries.

Weber rushed for 70 yards and passed for another 144 while CU's Vogel completed 8 of 15 pass attempts for 187 yards and two touchdowns. Vogel broke CU season records in pass attempts (236), yardage (1,385) and touchdown passes (12). He also set a new career mark for touchdown passes with 18.

K-State quarterback Stan Weber is comforted by a trainer as the team leaves the stadium after the 38-21 defeat.

Stan Weber carries the ball into the Colorado defensive line during one of his seven consecutive carries in the second half. Weber rushed for 70 yards and passed for an additional 144 yards during the battle for the cellar of the Big Eight.

Tigers drop game to Jayhawks

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Oklahoma State, Colorado and Kansas were the winners in the Big Eight Conference Saturday as the regular season came to a close for everyone but Oklahoma and Nebraska.

Losers were K-State, Iowa State and Missouri.

The Tigers, ranked No. 19 nationally, disappointed a group of people from the Holiday Bowl by losing in Lawrence to the Kansas Jayhawks, 37-27. Missouri had already been assured of a bid to the Holiday Bowl to meet Brigham Young.

Oklahoma State, which is headed to the Bluebonnet Bowl to play Baylor, beat Iowa State 30-7. Colorado closed out its season with a 38-21 victory over mistake-plagued K-State.

The final full weekend of Big Eight action put K-State alone in the cellar with a 3-8 overall mark and a Big Eight loss of 1-6. Oklahoma State was the Wildcats' only conference victim.

Colorado and Kansas climbed out of last place into a tie for next-to-last at 2-5. Overall, the Buffaloes and Jayhawks have four victories each. Colorado checked in with seven losses while Kansas had only six and a tie with Texas Christian University.

Nebraska, with one game to play — a date with Oklahoma — is 11-0 overall, in first place in the Big Eight at 6-0 and headed for the Orange Bowl against Miami, Fla. Oklahoma, 7-3 overall and 5-1, could gain a first-place tie by upsetting the No. 1 Huskers next week in Norman.

Despite the loss to Kansas, Missouri, 7-4 overall, nevertheless was guaranteed of nothing worse than a second-place finish at 5-2 in the Big Eight.

Iowa State and Oklahoma State were next in the conference standings at 3-4. Iowa State finished 4-7 overall but Oklahoma State, which won all its non-conference games, will take a 7-4 mark into its bowl game.

The Oklahoma State defense held Cyclone quarterback David Archer to just 168 yards passing, well below his average of 247. Nevertheless, Archer finished with 2,639 passing yards to eclipse the Big Eight record of 2,476 yards set in 1969 by Lynn Dickey at K-State.

However, Archer himself was passed up by Kansas' Frank Seurer, who bombed Missouri for 354 yards and two touchdowns. Seurer wrapped up his career as the Big Eight's career and single-season passing leader, totaling 2,789 yards this season and 6,410 yards for his career.

Seurer's endured a lifetime worth of adversity this season. His world had fallen to pieces in August when his father, who had moved the family to Lawrence and opened a restaurant, was murdered. During the season, Seurer frequently missed practice to attend the trial of a former employee of the restaurant who was convicted in the stabbing death.

"The adversity he faced was unbelievable," said Kansas coach Mike Gottfried. "His mental toughness through all of these things was more than I have ever seen. He's mentally tough, he's a good person and he'll have an excellent opportunity in professional football."

Steve Vogel came off the bench for Colorado and passed the Buffaloes to victory over K-State, which was apparently playing the run on defense.

"They were playing an eight-man front defense," said Colorado coach Bill McCartney. "They were just daring us to throw the ball and prove we could. In the first half, it was a comedy of errors. Vogel did a good job in the first half under trying circumstances and he was very sound in the second half and did a workmanlike job."

Vogel passed for 187 yards and two touchdowns after coming off the bench in the second quarter. Wingback Ron Brown was the favorite target, with six catches for 137 yards.

Lesbianism poses problem for high-school athletes

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Lesbianism is a problem in women's athletics that needs to be addressed, several women say in a copyright story in the Sunday issue of The Kansas City Star.

"Eighty percent or more of all high-school girls will be confronted with lesbianism in college, so it's important to understand it and know where you stand," said April Nelson, a former athlete at Emporia State University.

"We have more females involved (in homosexuality) in the sports world than we do men, even though in our society we have more men homosexuals than we do women," said Annice Norman, the Fellowship of Christian Athletes representative in Dallas.

"A reason for that, I say, is probably because girls spend so much time with their athletics," she said. "I don't think they are necessarily more dedicated to their athletics than guys are, but they are more dedicated to their relationships among the team members."

Mary McGowan, who said she was a former lesbian, described the scene at a meeting of the FCA at which she appeared.

"I spoke at an FCA meeting (in July at Northfield, Minn.) of about 300 girls," McGowan said.

"And the people came up to me afterward. It was like a line waiting. And this is just high school. A lot of them had been involved themselves or had tendencies or feelings or knew someone in high school that had (feelings) or was (a lesbian)," said McGowan.

McGowan, 25, operates a Christian counseling agency in Minneapolis that helps people who wish to exchange a homosexual lifestyle for a heterosexual one.

Debbie Wall, 29, the FCA national director of ministries, said lesbianism in athletics "is becoming more visible."

"It may not be more prevalent, but it is coming out into the open more," she said. "It is something we can't ignore because a lot of our high-school athletes are going to play sports in college, and they are going to be sucked right into it without them realizing that it is even there."

Cheryl Levick, 31, the NCAA's assistant director of women's programs, said, "I think the fairest statement (is that) homosexuality certainly exists in sports."

"But as in so many other myths, I think it is probably exaggerated as far as the number of people who are gay and involved in the arts-drama, art and music world," she said.

Vivian Stringer, women's basketball coach at Iowa, said society has an "exact image of what the female model should be."

"So women have a tougher row to hoe," she said. "And not only in sports. Let's say a woman is between the ages of 18 and 35. She is considered young and beautiful and attractive, and these are all the positive things associated with women. And it is not quite the same with men. Men's stature or dress is more or less recognized by the kind of money and kind of power he has. It is unfair, but realistic."

Andropov reacts to deployment

By The Associated Press

BONN, West Germany — Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov sent a letter to Chancellor Helmut Kohl, a spokesman for Kohl said Sunday, the eve of Peabate on the deployment of NATO nuclear missiles in West Germany.

Meanwhile, police reinforced security in the government district to discourage violence by anti-missile activists, and said they will ring the Parliament building today during the debate on an issue that has divided the country.

Chancellery spokesman Alexander Allardt declined to reveal what the letter from Andropov said. But the conservative Hamburg newspaper Bild am Sonntag said the Soviet president warned that the West German government must be prepared to "take the consequences" if it goes through with the missile deployment.

The first battery of nine Pershing 2 missiles could be placed in West Germany as early as Wednesday.

The letter was delivered to the chancellery Friday evening by Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Semynov, Allardt said.

Kohl wrote to Andropov Oct. 29 to ask that the Soviets make a new proposal at the Geneva arms talks on medium-range missiles.

Kohl will be the first speaker in the Parliament debate today. He is a staunch supporter of the deployment and his governing coalition has a 58-seat majority in Parliament, so the missile plan is expected to win approval. The chancellor says the parliament's 1981 approval was sufficient and this new vote — expected Tuesday — is not necessary.

At a Social Democratic conference Saturday the opposition party voted to reject the missiles, over the protests of former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who said the new deployment was the best way to convince the Soviets to stop what he called "one-sided, unprovoked armament."

Schmidt, whose party headed a coalition government from 1974 until late 1982, was one of the architects of the 1979 NATO plan to counter Soviet medium-range missiles.

NATO plans to station 572 nuclear-tipped missiles in Europe, including 204 in West Germany, and says they will go into place unless Soviet and U.S. negotiators reach an arms limitation agreement.

Reinforced police patrols fanned out through Bonn's government district Sunday to discourage anti-missile protesters from becoming violent.

Security plans called for riot police to ring Parliament today to keep away protesters who have threatened to blockade the building so deputies can't attend the two-day missile debate.

Polls have shown consistently that two out of three West Germans oppose the deployment. One million protesters demonstrated against the missiles in West Germany last month.

In Duesseldorf, an explosion smashed windows of state police headquarters Sunday and another bomb was defused in front of a U.S. company. Police in that city, 50 miles north of Bonn, did not rule out political motives. There were no injuries.

Police refused to identify the U.S. company. They said an anonymous caller tipped them that a bomb had been set there.

The Kohl government has long argued that parliamentary approval was not necessary for deployment to begin in West Germany.

Hall residents feast on Thanksgiving meal

By ANDY SCHROCK
Collegian Reporter

Feast.

Webster defines it as "a rich and elaborate meal."

"Rich and elaborate" would certainly describe the meal residence hall dwellers were treated to Thursday. Starched white tablecloths covered the tables while candles flickering softly provided an atmosphere of elegance for the annual Thanksgiving dinner.

The food itself was nothing less than what one would expect to find at a fine restaurant. Succulent slabs of sliced turkey, thick, meaty drumsticks, five kinds of salads, five varieties of rolls, marinated mushrooms, pumpkin and mince pies, red, yellow and orange garnishes and dessert tortes were the menu for the evening. Not the usual institutionalized meal, but a holiday treat.

The amount of food was also astounding.

"We used about 1,600 pounds of turkey breast, 1,300 pounds of drumsticks, 50 whole turkeys, 1,100 pounds of whipped potatoes, 650 pounds of dressing, 800 pounds of vegetables, 600 dozen rolls, 500 pies and 150 gallons of ice cream" to feed the approximately 4,000 students living in the residence halls, said John Pence, head of residence hall food service.

Preparation and cost of such a "rich and elaborate meal" is extensive, Pence said.

"We used around 100 extra hours of labor, and that was just for service. We also had 13 dietitians working on the meal. They started on it (Wednesday), but most of it was done (Thursday)," he said.

The meal was much more expensive than an average dinner at the halls, Pence said.

"A dinner usually costs about $4,300, whereas this meal cost between $6,000 and $9,000," he said.

Student reaction to the dinner was enthusiastic.

"It was real good. Much better than the regular meals," Randy Carligen, junior in animal sciences and industry and Marlatt Hall resident, said. "Everyone really looks forward to it. It's a pretty big deal."

Thanksgiving isn't the only time hall residents can look forward to an extra special meal. A prime rib dinner is planned for Christmas, and other above-average meals are served periodically throughout the year, Pence said.

"It's nice to be able to give the students something out of the ordinary every now and then," he said.

'Pizza sidewalk' to receive new toppings

By KRISTI NELSON
Collegian Reporter

The crumbled pizza will get a facelift as repair begins this week on the sidewalk composed of circular stones near King Hall which many students refer to as the pizza walk.

Some stones are cracked and broken, and several have sunken unevenly into the soil. The walk has been a hazard to walkers, especially when the ground is slippery due to rain or ice.

T.G. Lee, superintendent of grounds, said the maintenance crew will begin repair before Thanksgiving vacation. He said the crew will pour some replacement stones and allow them to become firmly set during vacation when there is little traffic on the walk.

"Pouring new stones is not the total answer, but until we decide if funds are available, we won't know when we can pour concrete to mount the circular stones," Lee said.

The stones are now set in a base of soil covered with sand, and Lee said a drainage problem with the slope north of King causes the sand to erode. He said because the sand "just won't hold," the department is discussing ways to make the sidewalk more stable.

Lee said the walk was designed by Alden Krider, a now-retired professor of architecture, as one of the art projects on campus.

He said a letter to the editor about the walk in the Nov. 16 Collegian did not initiate the repair. Several students have come to Lee to discuss the problem, and he said he has been aware of the problem for some time.

Look at the Facts ...

- When the SALT Talks began in November of 1969, we agreed to stop building our defenses and to begin to disarm what we had. Meanwhile, the Soviets were as busy as ever building up their weapons.
- Since that time, the Soviets have developed 21 new high technology systems, compared to the 2 that we have developed.
- In 1981, the Soviets outnumbered us 2 to 1 in tanks, 40 to 1 in surface to air missiles, and 3 to 1 in naval vessels.
- At one time, the U.S. was more advanced in its technology. Today the Soviets are almost equal if not equal.

Human Costs of Communism

Here are some figures on the human costs of Communism's worldwide expansionism and colonialism in just 66 years of history:

- Robert Conquest, the British historian, calculates that it cost between 21.5 million to 32.3 million lives to establish Communism in the USSR. This includes 5 million who died in the Soviet-inspired famine of 1932 and 12 million sent to their deaths in Stalin's labor camps.
- In Poland approximately 15,000 died in the Warsaw Uprising in 1944 when the Soviets allowed the German army to slaughter the Polish resistance.
- During the Hungarian Revolt of 1956 there were 15,000 casualties in Budapest alone with more than 200,000 Hungarian refugees fleeing to the West.
- In Czechoslovakia three years after the Communists seized power at least 152,000 Czechs had been executed or sent to slave-labor camps.

- In Bulgaria more than 16,000 citizens were liquidated or deported to labor camps during the first 15 years of Communist rule.

• In China, according to Richard Walker, director of the Institute for International Studies at the University of South Carolina, it is estimated that perhaps 64 million casualties can be attributed to Communism's coming to power. In the Political Liquidation Campaigns of 1949-1958 alone, some 30 million Chinese lost their lives. No figures are available on how many died in the Cultural Revolution shortly before Chairman Mao's death, but many experts think the figure is substantially large.

• In Vietnam, the "Land Reforms" of 1953-56 sent 500,000 persons to their deaths. Another 200,000 were liquidated in the "People's Tribunals" of 1956-1959.

• John Barron and Anthony Paul in their remarkable book Murder of a Gentle Land estimate between 1.2 to 2.5 million Cambodians were murdered during the first two years of Communist rule in that country.

• In Laos, with a population of fewer than 4 million, more than 200,000 Laotians have fled their country.

• The largest refugee population in the world today, estimated at close to 3 million, are Afghans who are living in wretched border camps in Pakistan.

• An unprecedented 5,000 Cuban refugees arrived in the U.S. in 1980 on a single day fleeing the Communist dictatorship of Fidel Castro. More than 124,000 came in one year, added to thousands who fled to the U.S. following the Communist takeover.

• The plight of the "boat people" of Southeast Asia continues.

Boeing 747 crash kills 183; officials still unsure of cause

By The Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Stunned relatives filed past rows of charred remains Sunday, seeking loved ones among the 183 people killed in the fiery crash of a Colombian Boeing 747. The crash was one of the 10 worst in aviation history.

The Avianca Airlines flight from Paris to Bogota crashed and exploded in a hilly area five miles east of Madrid's airport shortly after 1 a.m. Sunday.

Airport officials said the jumbo jet carried 170 passengers, 20 working crew members and four airline workers who were not on duty. Only 11 of the 194 people aboard survived the impact and inferno, and four of them were in very serious condition, the officials said.

Avianca officials said the plane, rented from Scandinavian Airlines System, had scheduled stops in Madrid and Caracas, Venezuela, and that many of those aboard were French and German citizens. It was not immediately known if there were any U.S. citizens aboard.

Among those reported dead was Peruvian poet Manuel Scorza — considered one of Latin America's best writers. He was on his way to a conference in Bogota.

Also among the reported dead were five Swedish couples on their way to Colombia to pick up five orphans for adoption, Swedish officials said. They said the children were waiting for their future parents at orphanages in different parts of Colombia.

A spokesman at the control tower said controllers lost radio contact with the plane four minutes before the crash. The plane was flying in clear skies and had been at an altitude of 1,000 feet when pilot Tulio Hernandez and co-pilot Edgard Ramirez communicated with Avianca officials 25 minutes before the crash.

There were unconfirmed reports that one of the plane's four engines caught fire before it plunged to earth at 1:04 a.m. (7:04 p.m. EST Saturday), but Transportation Minister Enrique Baron said 747s can land with two engines, especially when they are so close to an airport.

"It was like I was in another world," said passenger Carmen Novoa de Gorlich, 31, Venezuela, who escaped. Police said they found her, weeping, rushing away from the flaming wreckage and crying "747, 747."

"It was all so fast that it was impossible to explain," she said later at a hospital where she was taken for treatment of minor injuries.

Novoa said the plane started to fill with smoke after the crash. "Then I saw a boy who began to break a window of the plane with his feet and I helped him. I pushed and managed to get out of the plane and began to run like a crazy person."

Rescue parties using searchlights made their way past charred luggage and blackened pieces of metal to haul bodies away in bags and metal coffins. The bodies were taken by ambulance and helicopter to a hangar at the Madrid airport.

The explosion and fire left a chaotic field of metal, fabric, paper and flesh scattered among barren trees between two small rises. Portions of the jet remained recognizable — an engine, a wing, the nose — but they had been hurled apart by the crash and explosion.

Bulldozers shoved away the larger pieces of fuselage while police picked through the smaller to retrieve personal belongings.

Relatives of some of those aboard the plane gathered outside the makeshift morgue Sunday, waiting their turn to be led by officials past the bodies to identify their kin.

Baron, the transportation minister, told reporters the cause of the crash was not immediately known.

Van Zile to undergo renovation; construction slated for May 1984

By DAVE MANCHON
Collegian Reporter

After evaluation of campus buildings, Van Zile Hall has been scheduled to undergo renovation.

"The decision to renovate comes from the Department of Housing and the planning office at K-State," said Gene Cross, vice president of University Facilities. "They evaluate their buildings and then program them to be renovated over time."

The estimated total cost for the project is $1,013,287 to renovate the building's 53,921 square feet, according to the Program for the Van Zile Hall Renovation, a booklet published by the Van Zile Committee for Renovation.

"The cost of renovation will not have a noticeable effect on increasing student activity fees," said Thomas Frith, director of housing and chairman of the renovation committee.

Van Zile will be closed from May 1984 to August 1985, Frith said.

"Closing the hall will probably cause an inconvenience," he said.

But Frith said he believes this is an optimum year to begin renovation because enrollment figures are projected to decline until 1985.

According to the booklet, the purpose of renovation is to bring the building into compliance with existing fire codes, to convert existing food service areas for other use, to repair or replace those items or portions of the structure which are worn and damaged and to make facilities at Van Zile equal to or better than other residence halls.

"Van Zile is basically a sound structure. Renovation will be far less costly than constructing a new building offering similar facilities and square foot space," Frith said.

Van Zile, which currently houses 162 people, does not meet current fire codes.

"We're not renovating just to meet code," Frith said. "Many factors, such as the need for new wiring, plumbing and a waterproof basement, indicate the need to renovate."

"The architects will inspect the building and define what needs to be done in relation to the program. At that time, we'll decide what direction to go," Frith said. He said the architects will have the final plans completed and ready for bidding by February or March 1984.

The architectural firm that has been hired to work on the renovation is Ekdahl, Davis, Depew and Persson, who are all K-State graduates.

"I'm very pleased to have this group. They should have sensitivity to K-State, the students and the residence halls," Frith said. "I think they'll do a good job."

"Sometime in the distant future we will also renovate Boyd Hall and Putnam Hall. It will not be as extensive a renovation as we're doing in Van Zile."

He said such a renovation could take place while students are living in Boyd and Putnam.

Van Zile will continue to be used as a residence hall for single undergraduate male and female students, Cross said.

"We want to keep the outside as much like it is as we can. It's not going to be a dramatic change — basically it will be a residence hall when we're finished," Frith said.

Convocation cancelled

By The Collegian Staff

Transportation problems have forced Congressman Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., an expert on the Middle East, to cancel his scheduled appearance at a K-State convocation at 10:30 this morning in McCain Auditorium. Solarz was to speak about "U.S. Foreign Policy Perspective," but he was unable to reach Manhattan before this afternoon.

Solarz, who has represented the 13th district in Brooklyn, N.Y., called university officials Sunday night to tell them he would be unable to deliver his presentation as scheduled.

"He said he could be here tomorrow afternoon but we did not see how that would help," said Professor Philip Kirmser, chairman of the Convocations Committee. "We are going to try and reschedule him, he's willing to come at another time, but it may take a while to set up," Kirmser said.

Solarz, a strong supporter of human rights and the plight of refugees throughout the world, has used his congressional seat as a forum for focusing attention on the plight of Syrian Jews. In 1979 was appointed a member of the president's commission on the Holocaust.

Leaders predict veto of Greyhound contract

By The Associated Press

Greyhound union leaders were predicting Sunday that bus drivers and other employees on strike for 26 days will reject the company's latest contract offer when votes are counted nationwide today.

"Even though we provided for a secret ballot...a lot of them just didn't do it," J.W. Norman, president of Local 1315 of the Amalgamated Transit Union in Louisville, Ky., said Sunday.

Norman believes as much as 95 percent of the 250 members of his local voted against the contract, which reportedly is a three-year offer containing a 7.8 percent wage cut. The company and union have refused to discuss the contract publicly.

"I could tell how the vote was going just by our local reaction," said James Cawley, president of Local 1210 of the transit union in Philadelphia, where the 650 members voted on the contract offer last week.

"We set up a booth to vote last Monday, but only three people used the booth," Cawley said Saturday. "The others marked 'no' on the table without using it."

In Arizona, striking driver Tony Cutri said after last week's voting that he had "talked to a lot of people. I haven't talked to anyone who liked it." In Boston, union officials said they expected 100 percent rejection of the proposal.

And in Seattle, Warren Bovee, a union spokesman, said local union members voted Saturday afternoon on the company's contract proposal. "There's no doubt about it, we'll turn the contract down by 90 percent," Bovee said.

But at least one observer saw only defeat for the union in the strike, which has been marked by sporadic acts of violence and at least 59 arrests.

"It seems to me that the union would be very wise to admit it's going to lose, and seek the best it can," said Herbert Northrup, professor of industrial relations at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School. He said the union has been unable to generate public support.

"The union is going to lose, there is no way out of that," he said.

Pickets walked outside depots in cities from Boston to Los Angeles on Sunday as Greyhound continued to operate a limited schedule of service in 27 states, using non-union workers and new hires.

A company official in Philadelphia, who refused to be identified, said only 42 tickets were sold for 10 departures from Philadelphia on Friday, and about the same number were sold Thursday. Two of the 10 buses scheduled to leave Saturday were canceled due to lack of riders.

Greyhound's 12,700 drivers and other workers who belong to the Amalgamated Transit Union struck Nov. 2 over a proposed contract calling for at least 9.5 percent cuts in wages and benefits. Later the company issued a revised proposal that reportedly called for a 7.8 percent cut.

Delegates vote to open meetings

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Association of School Boards Sunday abandoned its long-standing support of allowing meetings to be closed when local school boards discuss new members to fill vacancies.

The KASB's delegate assembly voted 93-76 to remove from the association's legislative policies a provision requesting the Kansas Legislature to exempt from the state's Open Meetings Act the requirement that board meetings be open to the public and news media when candidates to fill board vacancies are interviewed or discussed.

Jo Ann Pottorff of Wichita, immediate past president of KASB and chairman of the organization's Committee on Legislation, urged abandonment of the policy supporting closed meetings at which local boards discuss possible replacements for members who die or resign.

The committee took note that efforts to persuade the legislature to exempt local school boards from provisions of the Open Meetings Act for such discussions have been unsuccessful, adding:

"There is a growing feeling, even among school board members, that candidates for appointment to school board vacancies should undergo the same public scrutiny as candidates for election to school board office."

The assembly also approved, 98-77, following lengthy debate a policy calling on the legislature to include in any property tax constitutional amendment submitted to voters a provision putting farm machinery and business aircraft back on the tax rolls.

Iranians say bomb attack killed 100 Iraqis

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran's official news agency said a suicide truck bomb attack by Iraqi underground members Sunday killed more than 100 Iraqi officials in Baghdad, and a second fatal bombing killed "tens" of military personnel. Iraq denied the report.

The official Iraqi news agency, INA, quoted an Iraqi spokesman as saying "such events did not take place in Baghdad today."

Iran's claim could not immediately be confirmed independently.

The Iranian agency, Irna, said Iraqi Islamic revolutionaries first struck the central headquarters of Iraq's intelligence services near Baghdad's Abyath palace.

It said a man named Ibrahim Salman smashed his explosives-laden vehicle into the building, "killing at least 100 Iraqi officials," and died in the attack.

The Iranian agency said the second attack was carried out by "Iraqi Mujahideen" who detonated a bomb inside an Iraqi military center in Baghdad's Bab-ul-Moatham area "killing tens of Iraqi military personnel."

Irna said the two bomb attacks were carried out to mark the anniversary of an anti-government demonstration seven years ago in the holy city of Karbala south of Baghdad. It said Iraqi troops killed scores of demonstrators when they broke up the demonstration.

Iran and Iraq have been locked in a border war for more than three years.

Colleges strive to satisfy curriculum demands

By The College Press Service

Student demand for certain career-oriented courses has outstripped colleges' ability to provide them, and soon only top students may be able to get into them, educators across the nation report.

"We have students back for a fifth year because they haven't been able to get all their required courses," said Harold Kidder, faculty chairman of West Virginia University.

To cope with student demand for business courses, the University of Illinois' business school now only lets in freshmen with high grade point averages.

"Students admitted this year are no longer guaranteed that they will be able to graduate in certain majors," said David Sprecher, provost of the University of California at Berkeley.

The university no longer allows students to declare majors in business economics, communications, computer science, economics and certain engineering specialties.

About one-third of the student body at the University of Nebraska at Omaha was affected by class closings this fall, according to a poll taken by the student government there.

Nevertheless, "it would be misleading to say thousands of students aren't getting an education because courses aren't there," said Jack Peltason of the American Council on Education. "We have many problems, but that's not a major one."

The problem seems less severe at private colleges, but a wide variety of public campuses are having trouble hiring enough professors to teach the "meal ticket" courses and finding ways of moving money from less popular courses.

"We just don't have as much flexibility as we would like," said Warren Haffner, registrar at Pennsylvania State University. "It's difficult when you're working with human resources."

Kathy Jones, assistant registrar at Iowa State University, said, "There simply has been a boom in business, computer science and some engineering areas. The demand is growing faster than the ability to fill it."

To fill it, universities must compete directly with private industries for computer scientists and engineers.

However, fewer people are going into teaching. A recent study by the Association for Computing Machinery, a national computer industry information center, found that only 13 percent of its members stayed in education after graduating.

The study also found that half of the graduates make $30,000 to $55,000 per year, while 27 percent of them make more than $50,000.

By contrast, college faculty members generally get starting salaries between $20,000 and $30,000. Schools are finding that to attract anyone to their high-demand departments, they have to pay more than $30,000.

When they do, the new recruits earn more than veteran faculty members in other departments, a situation which causes morale problems.

"We haven't been cutting dollars for faculty, but we haven't been able to keep pace with the increase in salaries," said Vernon Zimmerman, dean of the College of Commerce and Business Administration at Illinois. "Our money just doesn't buy as much."

He said the university has lost 12 faculty positions over the past five years because it cannot fund them.

"Many schools are having to evaluate their courses offerings in terms of volume," said J.D. Conner of the Association of College Registrars and Admissions Officers.

Some are doing more re-evaluating than others. Private colleges, which are generally more flexible and can more readily tap endowment funds, seem less drastically affected by the shift in course demand.

New committee to select Rhodes scholars

By The Collegian Staff

The 1983 Kansas Selection Committee for Rhodes Scholarships has been announced, and Oliver H. Hughes, chairman of Merchants Bancorporation of Topeka and Citizens National Bank and Trust Company of Emporia, will be the chairman for the second consecutive year. U.S. Circuit Judge James K. Logan of Olathe was reappointed secretary.

Other committee members are Kenneth C. Brown of Lakewood, Colo.; Daryl Koehn of Chicago; Professor Gilbert P. Haight Jr. of the University of Illinois at Urbana and Professor Donald W. Sutherland of the University of Iowa at Iowa City.

By tradition, the chairman of each state committee cannot have been a Rhodes Scholar, while the remaining members of the Kansas Committee were recipients of the award.

The committee will nominate two of the 17 Kansas applicants, and those selected will proceed to regional competition after personal interviews on Dec. 14.

The state applicants and the committee will meet at a reception in the Topeka Club hosted by Merchants

National Bank Dec. 13. A luncheon for the applicants will be sponsored by Capital Federal Savings Dec. 14.

The scholarship was provided for in the will of Cecil Rhodes, a British colonial pioneer and statesman who died in 1902. It is awarded to scholars from 17 countries and five continents, including 32 each year from the United States.

The scholars are awarded two years of graduate study at the University of Oxford, with the possibility of renewal for a third year. All educational, living and travel expenses are paid.

K-State math professor dies

By The Collegian Staff

Robert E. Williams, assistant professor of mathematics, was found dead shortly after 10 a.m. Nov. 18 at his home at 419 Kearney St. Williams, 48, apparently suffered an epileptic seizure.

Williams is survived by three children, Elizabeth Mathiot of 1215 Fair Lane; Daniel and Karen, of the home; and a granddaughter, Megan Mathiot. Also surviving are his father, Robert R. Williams of Tucson, Ariz.; two sisters, Esther Worthington of Cuba, Mo., and Frances Ballard of Amarillo, Texas; three brothers, David of Kirkwood, Mo., Thomas of Torrance, Calif., and Philip of St. Paul, Minn. His wife, the former Margaret Anne Armstead, died in 1972.

Williams was born Aug. 28, 1935, in Bloomfield, Mo., and earned his bachelor's, master's and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Missouri. He taught at the University of Missouri and was an assistant professor at Westminster College, Fulton, Mo., before joining the K-State faculty in 1965.

Williams was a member of the Mathematical Association of America, the American Mathematical Society, Pi Mu Epsilon, and the American Civil Liberties Union.

Plan may increase voting among poor

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A campaign has been started to register as many as 5 million poor people as voters when they go to government agencies to apply for benefits such as food stamps, unemployment compensation, health care and the like.

Most of the new registration would occur in the big industrial states that a presidential candidate usually has to carry to win.

William Greener, communications director for the Republican National Committee, says President Reagan has nothing to fear from the campaign if it is as nonpartisan as its sponsors claim.

Greener said Reagan can win his share of votes from the poor, who, he said, benefit just like everyone else from the sharp decline in the inflation rate that has occurred during his presidency.

Other voter registration campaigns are planned for 1984, including an attempt by the National Coalition on Black Voter Participation to add 2 million to 10 million blacks now registered.

But what is unusual about the program to register recipients of government services is the attempt to enlist the government workers who handle benefit applications as part-time voter registrars.

The poor would be signed up to vote at the time and place they go to get benefits. Just before election day, they would be encouraged by social service workers to vote.

If the idea catches on, Reagan's re-election prospects might suffer. The poor are not only those least likely to vote but they may be inclined to vote against the Republican candidate, especially one who has cut the budgets of programs that benefit the poor.

Greener says the GOP believes in 100 percent citizen participation in elections and has no objection to registration drives.

"But I think the taxpayers are going to take an awfully dim view of this if there is a belief that it is an attempt for partisan gain," he said.

Sixteen organizations that represent social service workers or agencies — from Planned Parenthood to the American Public Health Association — have endorsed the plan and are represented on a board of directors of a new group created to carry it out. They call the drive the Human Service Employees Registration, Voting and Education Campaign. Civil rights veteran Hulbert James is executive director.

So far, the organizers say they have raised $200,000 and plan to raise $200,000 more. The money came from human service workers themselves and in gifts from $2,500 to $30,000 from 15 foundations.

Richard Cloward, a professor at Columbia University's School of Social Work and one of the organizers, said he and James and Frances Fox Piven of the City University of New York came up with the idea.

Snow forces Glenn to cancel Kansas visit

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — A near-blizzard in Colorado forced Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, to cancel a scheduled campaign stop in Kansas Sunday, said his spokesman in Wichita.

The Democratic presidential hopeful spent the Thanksgiving holidays in Denver and had planned to leave for Kansas after a fundraiser Sunday morning. He was to arrive in Wichita at 4 p.m. CDT for a series of fundraisers and news conferences, then was to travel to Topeka for more activities Sunday night.

"The weather just isn't going to let us do it today," said campaign spokesman Arnett Walker. "I talked to the senator (at 1:15 p.m.) and he said the airports are going to be closed for another four to six hours. He thinks he'll have to do the Kansas thing another time."

Up to 20 inches of snow had fallen in Denver by Sunday afternoon, causing officials to declare a snow emergency. Several major highways, including Interstate 70 from Kansas to Denver, and the Stapleton Airport were closed.

A spokesman for Kansas Gov. John Carlin said attempts were made to bring Glenn to Kansas, despite the storm.

"He was coming into Wichita on a commercial flight," said Mike Swenson, Carlin's press secretary. "We tried to make arrangements to get another plane into Denver, but that didn't work either."

Swenson said the governor would try this week to reschedule the visit.

Beth Hartsook, who is coordinating Glenn's campaign in Kansas, said this would have been Glenn's third visit to the state. He was in Kansas May 14 and Aug. 14.

"I know he was looking forward to meeting all the volunteer workers," said Hartsook. "But I wasn't looking forward to going out to the airport today. It never occurred to me that he might be snowed in in Denver. I was more afraid of him landing in Wichita and then flying out tonight."

Israeli prime minister makes first U.S. visit

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Israel's new prime minister, Yitzhak Shamir, on Sunday began his first official visit to Washington at a time when the United States and Israel have resolved their disagreements over Lebanon and are ready to pursue newly defined "common interests."

Shamir arrived Sunday night in Washington and told reporters that the "situation in Lebanon and the Syrian threat to peace are the most urgent issues" for his talks with President Reagan and other top U.S. officials.

Referring to the recent terrorist attacks on American and Israeli soldiers in Lebanon, Shamir said, "shared interests, common goals and similar suffering have drawn us even closer together."

"Both nations have recently shared a painful experience of monstrous terrorist outrages against our soldiers," he added in a brief ceremony near the Washington Monument after a helicopter flight from Andrews Air Force Base.

Shamir was accompanied by Moshe Arens, Israel's defense minister and former ambassador to the United States.

"The situation in Lebanon and the Syrian threat to peace are the most urgent issues for which we must find some solutions in our common striving for stability and peace," Shamir said.

U.S. officials say the Reagan administration is likely to offer more aid for Israel's battered economy during the visit and also will explore ways of improving military cooperation between the two countries.

To underscore the resumption of the close relations between the two nations, Shamir will be given red-carpet treatment. He will have two meetings with President Reagan and with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, today and Tuesday. He also will lay a wreath at the tomb of the unknown soldier at Arlington Cemetery this morning and will address the National Press Club on Wednesday morning.

Israel's president, Chaim Herzog, was in Washington last week and conferred with Reagan and Shultz and addressed the National Press Club.

"We are now witness to a determined joint Syrian-Soviet strategy in the Middle East directed against the United States and Israel and which is designed to weaken them, to remove the United States from the region, to block the advance of the peace process and to build an armed force strong enough to threaten Israel's very existence," Herzog said.

Syria will be very much on the minds of both sides during discussions. While officials deny Syria's charges that the two countries are planning joint military actions against it, there is concern over the military buildup by Damascus and frustration over Syria's refusal to withdraw from Lebanon.

Storms may ground shuttle

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — "Questionable" weather here and in Europe threatened to delay Monday's launch of Columbia with the billion-dollar Spacelab, but NASA said it would fuel the shuttle's tanks and hope that skies would be clear.

The six-man crew, largest ever to fly into space together, was reported rested and ready for the 11 a.m. EST liftoff, which already has been postponed twice by technical problems.

NASA described the countdown as the smoothest yet in the shuttle program and said it would keep the clock ticking and would begin loading 500,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and oxygen at 5 a.m. EST Monday, hoping for a weather break.

Officials said they would make another weather evaluation at 5:30 a.m.

Stormy weather created potential problems both in the launch area and at emergency landing points in Spain and West Germany.

"The weather Monday is very questionable," a shuttle weather officer, Air Force Maj. Donald J. Greene, said Sunday. "It's touchy."

Greene said a low pressure front moving through the Southeast could produce thunderstorms and strong winds at Cape Canaveral at Columbia's scheduled blastoff time.

"It all depends on how fast that front moves in," he said.

NASA would not launch the shuttle during a storm because rain might damage its protective tiles, high winds might throw it off course, and clouds might hamper visibility should an emergency landing be attempted back at the Cape.

Winds up to 30 mph were predicted for the Spanish Air Force base at Zaragoza, Spain, which is the primary across-the-Atlantic landing site if the astronauts have to abort early in the flight. The backup site, Bonn-Cologne International Airport, reported "terrible" rain and cloud conditions Sunday, with the same in store today.

Greene said conditions don't look any better on Tuesday at any of the sites, with clearing predicted at all three on Wednesday.

NASA has only until Dec. 5 to launch the Spacelab, because several of the astronomy experiments must be operated in the dark phase of the moon to escape interference from lunar reflection. If Columbia can't get off the ground by then, it must wait until late February, because for other experiments the sun angles are bad and the cloud cover is too heavy during December and January.

A similar cliffhanger existed at the Cape during the countdown for the most recent shuttle flight in August. Rain and clouds forced a hold in the countdown in the final minutes. But a hole opened in the clouds, and Challenger departed Earth just 17 minutes late.

Accomplishment in Grenada?

The Reagan administration lied to us about the reasons for the invasion of Grenada, even after the invasion was history. This makes the operation indefensible, even though it did make at least one Central American country wary of allowing Cuban advisers inside their borders.

The Grenada invasion, coupled with U.S. military exercises in the Honduras, prompted Nicaragua to order all Cuban military advisers to leave. Friday, the Sandinista government ordered 1,000 Cuban military advisers and several Salvadoran guerrilla leaders to leave the country. This was done so the United States would have no excuse to invade Nicaragua.

There were other reasons for Nicaragua's action, but it is obvious the Grenada invasion did have direct influence. The invasion began a more justifiable fight against Cuban and Soviet involvement in the area. If the countries themselves act against the glut of Cuban military advisers in Central America, the Reagan administration will have to search for a new excuse to stage a Grenada repeat in Nicaragua or some other country.

Paul Hanson, Editor

To protect the freedoms we have in the United States, it is essential we monitor the activities in neighboring countries and act accordingly. Sometimes human rights will suffer from our actions, and often the best we can do is try to make sure the repression is temporary. But we can never justify continued support of repression just because a government is anti-Communist.

Rightist repression, such as we support in El Salvador and the Philippines, is no better than Communism, and in many cases is much less desirable. Such governments, when supported by the United States, give us a bad name and make the citizens of these nations more receptive to Communism.

If we must invade or threaten to invade a country to accomplish our objectives, perhaps we need to re-examine our objectives. And, if we find them justified, we should pursue them with whatever force necessary. But before we arm our weapons, we must be sure our cause is right. Our nation is not blessed by any divine providence, and saying we are right does not make us so.

Freshman representatives

WASHINGTON — It's the bane of every freshman to be treated like a child.

Freshmen are to be seen, not heard. When called upon to do chores, they must deliver. Hazing by upperclassmen must be suffered magnanimously.

In the House of Representatives, the expectations for freshmen are little different. In the House, however, when the kids become uppity, the reaction of older members rates national attention.

So it was two weeks ago as Congress fussed and grumbled its way to adjournment for the Thanksgiving recess. Among the most depressing issues on its last-minute agenda was the federal deficit in general and a vote to increase taxes by as much as $73 billion in particular. Had it not been for first-term House Democrats, Speaker Tip O'Neill might never have let that vote come to the floor.

One week earlier, about 12 Democratic representatives, many of them liberal freshmen, voted against a bill that would have kept the federal government running under continuing resolution. Their complaint was simple: continuing appropriations would allow election-conscious congressmen to avoid the revenue-raising (i.e. tax increase) requirement inherent in the 1984 budget. In protest, they were saying that even liberals can be committed to chopping the deficit.

House veterans responded with hostile condescension. Speaking for many of his fellow old-timers, Majority Leader Jim Wright subsequently proclaimed that he felt like a football player who, on his way toward a certain touchdown, is blindsided by a member of his own team. Nonetheless, the new members' action may have done more than any other to revive their colleagues' commitment to a vote on, if not passage on, a needed tax increase (Nov. 18).

Last week's vote was only the latest in a series of actions for which the freshman Democrats can take partial responsibility. For example, had it not been for their cohesive efforts to make last spring's jobs bill more equitable, many chronically poor districts might have gone without relief. It was soon thereafter that they threw themselves, as a unit, into the pits of federal budgetary, successfully lobbying for a tax increase pledge in the eventual budget resolution.

Out of 1982's freshman class have emerged several stalwarts who deserve all-star mention for level-headedness in their first year. Rising stars can fade as quickly as Guy Vander Jagt (remember the much-heralded rhetorician who was chosen the keynote the 1980 GOP convention and subsequently vanished?), but among the unconventional Democrats to watch are:

* Bruce Morrison of Connecticut, 39, a former chief of New Haven Legal Services. After serving as the first chairman of his freshman caucus, Morrison has continued to be one of its leading strategists.

* Richard Durbin of Illinois, 39, a former lieutenant governor and practicing attorney. The freshman caucus' current chairman, he played a significant role in delivering votes on the first budget resolution.

* Marcy Kaptur of Ohio, 37, an urban-planning expert and Carter White House aide. Like Morrison and others from long-struggling Northern cities, Kaptur contended that a jobs bill targeted strictly to unemployment rates missed those workers who had stopped looking for work.

* Jim Moody of Wisconsin, 48, a former Peace Corps official and university professor. Moody, who campaigned door-to-door to become a representative from economically-depressed Milwaukee, has become one of the freshman group's leaders on tax issues.

* Sander Levin of Michigan, 51, brother of his state's junior senator and an experienced politico in his own right. With Morrison, Levin helped to shift the jobs bill's emphasis to aid disillusioned workers in chronically-troubled cities such as him hometown, Detroit.

In the coming year, those freshmen and others plan to keep deficits in the forefront, even if their singlemindedness irks a few colleagues.

"We've been saying that we don't care how you do it," said Moody, citing the need to raise revenues and cut defense spending increases. Added Morrison: "We're going to make ours a highly visible effort...and (will) work with anyone who shares our concern."

Even if the youngsters in the House have little time to unite on other issues, their efforts on the deficit crisis could help Democrats as a whole in 1984 — barring a case of sophomore slump.

A matter of identity

Learning to count to 1,000 and when I was five years old started me down a path which I did not comprehend at the time. Nevertheless, it was a path I wanted to travel, one which would lead me to an eventual understanding and acceptance of my own identity.

Not that arithmetic and mathematics or other processes of numbering ever meant that much to me. Although attempting to explore all that when very young, I soon grew bored with abstract manipulation. On the other hand, the concept of trying to bring "order" into living has always been a compelling force in my actions.

Dalton Brewer (that man I called Uncle Dalton), the district government cattle inspector in Southern Rhodesia in 1927, took me back to my home at Matopo Mission after I rode down to his place on my small bicycle one Monday morning to tell him I could count to 1,000. He carried me on the handlebars of his larger bicycle, having strapped my smaller one on the back luggage carrier.

When my father talked with me later, I told him again I wanted to go to school — that I wanted to learn to really read, to really count.

"All right, you may go to school," he said. "We'll give you work to do each day. Your mother says she'll help you read. And I have an arithmetic book in which you can start working the problems. I'll go over these problems with you each night to see if you've done them correctly. We can do that right after dinner before we have evening prayers. How about that?"

"All right," I said.

Several times after that day, just as he had promised, Uncle Dalton took me with him to "help count the cattle" on his inspections. Those trips were filled with excitement. The dust thickening in my nostrils from the trampling cattle as they were herded into enclosures before being sent through the disinfecting dips; the feel of the sun burning on my face; the mixed sound of men shouting and dogs barking; the sight of granite rocks glittering in late afternoon sunlight.

JOEL CLIMENHAGA
Collegian Columnist

But the arithmetic book was a different matter. It soon became apparent that the problems in this book weren't nearly as simple as learning to count. Nor were they as exciting as cattle inspections.

One day I became impatient with the problems I had been assigned. So I turned to the section titled "Teacher's Guide" in the back of the book, quickly copying all the problems and correct answers. I remember thinking my father would be pleased that evening to see a completely correct set of answers from me. And I ran out of the house to play with my dog.

That night my father began as he always did by asking, "Do you have any questions about this assignment?"

"No," I answered.

He started examining my sheet of paper, but almost immediately handed it back to me, saying, "You didn't do these problems!"

"Yes, I did, too," I said.

"You copied them from the back of the book. I know you did because there isn't a single mistake or erasure on your paper."

"What's the matter with copying?" I asked. "All the right answers are there — and that's what I'm supposed to find."

"You didn't work out the answers yourself. Somebody else did that. And yet you gave this sheet of paper to me as if it was yours. That was lying, Joel!"

"I didn't mean to lie," I said very soberly.

His face became gentler. "Well, look, let me try to help you see what you've done," he said. "You wouldn't cut off your right arm — and then give it to someone else to throw a ball with — now would you?"

I laughed at the image. "Nobody else could throw a ball with my arm, if it was cut off!" I said.

"Well, even if someone else could — you still wouldn't cut off your own right arm, would you?"

"No," I said.

"And you wouldn't cut off your right leg, would you? Why, if you did that you couldn't ride your bike down to see Uncle Dalton. So would you cut off your right leg?"

"No," I said.

He quietly put his arms around my shoulders, drew me up on to his lap. I remember feeling his beard bristling against my face, as he said very softly, "Now, listen, Joel — this is the most important thing of all I'm trying to tell you. When you copied those answers out of the back of the book, you tried to cut out of your head your own brain! You as good as said to yourself that your own brain wasn't worth anything. And it was as if you tried to throw your own brain away. You wouldn't want to throw your brain away, would you?"

"No," I said.

"Well, then, I think you understand now. Tomorrow you do these problems yourself. Don't ever forget who you are — and that it's your brain and not somebody else's."

"All right," I said.

"There's one other thing," he went on, "that I think you're old enough to understand. Sometimes it is all right to copy down what some other person has done or said. But when you do that, you should always say so and tell where you got the information. It's like when I preach and I read a text from the Bible, you always hear me say the book and the chapter and the verse from which that text comes. It's all right to copy that way. Do you understand what I mean?"

"Yes, I do," I said.

K-State concert record still dismal

Editor,

Regarding Barbara Burke's comments in Nov. 17 Collegian article "Concert chances dwindle for next year," it is time to protest once again. The students obviously did not get the concert they wanted and UPC lost money again. When will you listen to the student? I don't know who you called in your telephone survey, but they were obviously the wrong people and definitely not enough of a sample.

We are not expecting the super groups like Journey or The Police. We know that is unrealistic. I'm certain that if you asked someone who they would like to see, they would respond with a super group. You need to ask them what they want to hear, but limit it to some group that would realistically come to K-State.

Using the fact that the Stray Cats sold out shows on both coasts as a factor in choosing the band to come to K-State was foolish. Musical tastes in the Midwest are a little more conservative and very different.

The financial flops of concerts here have eliminated most chances of getting a major band to come to K-State. You've got to look for a new band, a band that is just hitting the charts now and is looking for exposure. It will probably be less expensive and less of a financial risk. Either that or find a band that has shown willingness to do shows here in the past.

Finally, Barbara, your comments about Shooting Star not being able to draw 10,000 people is absurd. They have been touring the country for the past three years selling out such arenas as Kemper in Kansas City and the Checkerdome in St. Louis. In 1981 the band was in the same position as the Stray Cats this year. They only had two albums with a few hits and very little exposure. I am not saying we should get Shooting Star. I doubt very much that they would come back considering your extremely unsuccessful record of concert presentation.

Safety before dissent

Editor,

In the Nov. 15 Collegian, K. Varnamkhast, speaking about the current government in Iran, stated "If this government has not been satisfying the people, the people would not be standing behind it."

Perhaps the reason for no open dissent has been the citizens' desire to remain alive.

Show film to Russians

Editor,

Have we not all wondered in what way the sincerity of the Russians might be truly gauged, truly assured in any peace talks, and in any resulting treaties for arms controls and reductions? After watching the film "The Day After," a 12-year-old had what for me would seem the total answer: "Send a copy of the film to the Russians." That little youth said it all — no need for hot-aided political rhetoric on either side, simply let the Russian people have the opportunity to see the film (unedited, of course, aside from dubbing or subtitling). That by itself is completely adequate — they would then keep their word.

Apathy on foreign affairs

Editor,

RE: "The right to protest," in Nov. 17 Collegian.

I would like to thank Edee Dalke for helping me refine the point about apathy that I tried to make at the Protest Rally Nov. 16. She is right that most people can be apathetic on some issues and quite active on others. I was wrong if I implied that K-State students are apathetic on all fronts.

I, for example, am very apathetic about the greek system. In fact, the only things I know about it are my prejudices. Partly, for that reason, I do not go around insisting that the greek system be eliminated from campus, simply because I believe that it is not compatible with my life style.

If U.S. citizens are apathetic about Nicaragua, if they refuse to do their homework, if, as a group, only 20 percent of the people know which side is which in the conflict, then perhaps the United States should not assume it has the right to determine how or by whom that country should be governed. And Reagan certainly should not claim that he has the mandate of the people on that issue.

'Under Fire' actress was wild teen

HADDONFIELD, N.J. — Actress Joanna Cassidy, star of the movie "Under Fire," remembers being "a rowdy kid" at Haddonfield Memorial High School two decades ago.

Miss Cassidy told former classmates, who knew her as Joanne Caskey, "It's just me," as she arrived for her 20th high school reunion.

"I was a rowdy kid," she recalled Friday. "I remember leading a few rebellions. High school was a really good time, it wasn't a questioning time for me. And I certainly had no idea I would be an actress."

Fellow class of '63 member Ken Artis of Madison, Wis., who accompanied Miss Cassidy to the reunion, said he revels in her Hollywood success.

"There's only one problem. Every time she's in a movie, I have to go three times. The first time I say, that's Joanne. The second time I watch Joanna, and then I watch the movie," he said.

Egypt takes bids on nuclear plants

CAIRO, Egypt — Egypt has received five bids, including two from American companies, to build its first two nuclear power plants, the daily newspaper Al-Ahram said Sunday.

The paper quoted electricity and energy minister Maher Abaza as saying the five companies were Westinghouse Corp. and Bechtel Corp. of the United States, Kraftwerk Union of West Germany, Framatome Consortium of France and Brown-Boveri Corp. of Switzerland and West Germany.

Abaza said three committees were studying the bids and that it would be three to six months before a decision was made.

The plants, estimated to cost about $2.4 billion, are to be built by 1990 or 1991, in El-Dabaa, 100 miles west of the Mediterranean port of Alexandria. Construction will start next September.

Egypt hopes to produce 40 percent of its energy by nuclear power by the year 2000.

Burning ship holds explosive cargo

HAMBURG, West Germany — Firefighters steered other boats clear of a stricken Liberian container ship Sunday, fearing the ship's cargo — fireworks and cotton bales — would explode.

The Liberian ship Ever Level and the Brazilian freighter Itapage collided on the Elbe River on Friday, killing one crew member. A second crew member still was missing Sunday and five remained hospitalized, police said.

The collision on the North German river set the fireworks and cotton aflame and police predicted the blaze would burn for days.

The Liberian ship was towed into an inlet off the Elbe late Friday. The Brazilian ship returned to the Hamburg port under its own power.

Youngster helps J.C. save pennies

CORVALLIS, Ore. — When 13-year-old Tei Gordon types on a computer keyboard, some 50 corporate clients await his product.

The companies, including J.C. Penney Co. and General Mills, depend on Tei's information to conserve energy in thousands of buildings across the nation.

"By this time next year, my business will probably have quadrupled," said the Corvallis eighth-grader, who has kicked off an advertising campaign in magazines.

For more than a year, the youngster has used his father's computer to obtain climate data from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration each week.

Tei translates the information into readable form and mails it to his clients months before they could receive it directly from the government.

Mexico fights poverty along southern border

By The Associated Press

TUXTLA GUTIERREZ, Mexico — The Mexican government is pumping money into the impoverished southern state of Chiapas, concerned that poverty could be the seed for social unrest along the border with strife-plagued Central America.

"If there is a seedbed for revolution in Mexico, it is Chiapas," said a state official who asked not to be identified because of political reasons. "We have neglected this area for centuries, and there are great social problems that must be resolved."

The government has invested $900 million in development projects in Chiapas state this year — twice as much in dollar terms as in 1982. Officials say the effort is to improve communications and step up social services in an area affected by an influx of Central American refugees and by protests of Mexican leftist and peasant groups.

Much of the money is going to build roads into isolated mountain and jungle regions. Other funding goes to build schools, health clinics and to clear up longstanding land disputes. All over the state, signs advertise works of the so-called "Plan Chiapas," a development project set up by President Miguel de la Madrid in May.

The 30,000 square miles of state territory — about the size of South Carolina — are covered largely by mountains and tropical jungle.

Its 450-mile border with Guatemala to the east, once an unguarded stretch of jungle and coffee plantations, has become a tightly guarded zone against daily incursions by scores of fleeing Central Americans, mostly Guatemalans.

President Reagan told a joint session of Congress earlier this year that instability and leftist insurgency in Central America eventually could affect Mexico.

De la Madrid reacted strongly in public, saying "Mexico is a very strong domino and cannot be easily toppled over."

But privately, defense officials told their U.S. counterparts they would beef up the military presence on the border.

Officials acknowledge that the state's 2.2 million inhabitants — a third of them Indians speaking little or no Spanish — have been neglected since Chiapas became part of Mexico in 1824.

Chiapas has the second highest infant mortality rate — 94 per 1,000 live births — among the 32 Mexican states. The overall rate for Mexico is 44 per 1,000. Chiapas also has the fewest doctors per capita, and 36 percent of the people over 15 cannot read.

Traditional disputes over land occasional become violent. In March, 300 people were injured in violence after state elections. In the last three months there have been marches and demonstrations stemming from land disputes and from alleged police brutality.

Among the projects under "Plan Chiapas" is a 278-mile road that parallels the northern part of the Guatemalan border through the tropical Lacandon Forest.

Construction of the road, begun in 1980, has shot forward in the last six months and is expected to be completed within two years. Access to the area will permit oil exploration, tourism and control over the border by immigration authorities.

The state government spokesman, Daniel Flores Meneses, said the road, now about 70 percent complete, is being built to "open up an area of potential production in hydrocarbons...and to permit the conservation of archaeological sites."

But the road clearly has defense implications. According to one state official, who asked not to be identified, "Chiapas is a geopolitical area; we can no longer allow it to be unprotected."

Almost all the refugees are Guatemalans fleeing anti-guerrilla operations by the military government.

Guatemalan troops have crossed the border in pursuit of refugees who have been settled there, and Guatemalan helicopters frequently violate Mexican air space, said Ignacio Ortiz, the local representative of the government's Commission to Aid Refugees.

The commission provides aid to 40,000 Guatemalan refugees in 83 camps along the border, but restricts them to the camps. Immigration, relief and international observers estimate there are 40,000 to 60,000 additional refugees living illegally in Chiapas.

Mistakes plague 'Cats in Tribune tourney

By KEVIN DALE
Staff Writer

The K-State men's basketball team began its 78th season on a sour note as it dropped two games at the Tribune Charities Holiday Classic in Chicago.

The team began the tournament with a 71-62 loss to Loyola of Chicago on Friday and dropped a 63-53 decision to the University of Utah in the consolation game Saturday night.

In Friday's game against Loyola the 'Cats outscored the Ramblers by eight points from the field but sent them to the free-throw line 32 times. Loyola connected on 27 of the free shots.

K-State, on the other hand, only went to the charity stripe 17 times and made just 10.

Loyola, which is normally a running team, slowed the game down in the second half and used free throws to move to a 58-52 lead.

K-State shot a meager 59 percent from the line and only 46 percent from the field en route to the loss. In the consolation game, the 'Cats met the Runnin' Utes of Utah, who had been buried by Illinois 99-65.

The Wildcats never gave themselves a chance as they turned the ball over 24 times. K-State started the contest tough as it tied the score eight times in the first 10 minutes. The 'Cats then went 7:14 without scoring a point as they missed seven shots and turned the ball over five times.

Tom Alfaro hit two shots to get K-State within two points at halftime at 28-26 but the second half was a disaster as K-State came out with two for six shooting and turned the ball over nine times while Utah built a 42-30 lead.

The Runnin' Utes held on to grab third place and make K-State lose its first two games for the first time since 1968 when Cotton Fitzsimmons was head coach.

Next up for the Wildcats is Oral Roberts University Tuesday night at Ahearn Field House.

Holmes includes retirement as part of individual plans

By The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Larry Holmes, the unbeaten World Boxing Council heavyweight champion, said Saturday he will fight Gerrie Coetzee or he will never fight again.

"I'm semi-retired," the 34-year-old Holmes said after his victory at 2:57 of the first round over an enthusiastic, but badly outgunned Marvis Frazier Friday night.

"If the Coetzee fight doesn't come, I'll retire in March. If I don't fight Coetzee, I'll quit."

Coetzee, of South Africa, is the World Boxing Association champion.

Coetzee was at ringside Friday night. Earlier he said, "I would fight him for less money than he gets, much less money because I want to be champion. I don't mind that Holmes is generally recognized as champion."

Asked if he would fight Coetzee in South Africa, Holmes said he would, and cracked, for $100,000,027.95.

Holmes said he has received mail both for and against his fighting in South Africa, where apartheid — the policy of racial segregation — is practiced.

"The title is the people's title, and I'll represent the people and I'll represent America," he said.

Holmes is supposed to make a mandatory defense against top-ranked Greg Page in February or March. If he doesn't, the WBC would withdraw championship recognition from Holmes.

But he repeatedly has said he will not fight Page for the $2.5 million purse offered by promoter Don King. On Saturday, he said he didn't care about the WBC or the WBA.

The WBC did not sanction the Holmes-Frazier fight because the 23-year-old Frazier was not a top 10-ranked opponent.

However, Holmes could have lost the title, because the WBC said if Frazier won, it would declare the title vacant.

The WBC's decision rankled Holmes, but Frazier certainly didn't look like a ranked contender.

"I would say my pride was hurt more than anything," Frazier said of his embarrassing loss, in which he was knocked down once, then pummeled into submission in his corner.

"We'll take some time off and do what we want to," said Joe Frazier, the former heavyweight champion, who is Marvis' father, manager and trainer.

"We have no regrets at all. What happened last night can happen to anybody. I've been there a few times myself," said the man who twice was overwhelmed by George Foreman.

Then, Joe, graceful in defeat, as was his son, said the fight wasn't the only loss he suffered in this gambling capital.

"I've been here the last two weeks and got my butt whipped every day," said Smokin' Joe. "I'm going to get all these dealers and put them in the ring with Larry."

Wildcat forward Barbara Gilmore pressures a Central Missouri State player during K-State's 90-73 victory in the championship game of the Little Apple Classic this weekend.

Staff/David Stuckey

Women start year with 'Classic' win

By KEVIN DALE
Staff Writer

After a slow start, the ninth-ranked K-State women's basketball team rallied behind the outside shooting of Jennifer Jones and Barbara Gilmore to defeat the Central Missouri State Jennies 90-73 and capture the championship of the Fourth Annual Converse Little Apple Classic.

Gilmore, the only senior on the team, led all scorers with 22 points and Jones added 20 as the 'Cats fought off a first-half slump and a tough CMS defense to successfully defend their title. K-State defeated CMS 88-75 in last year's championship game.

"I don't like to play Central Missouri because they're scrappy and well coached," Lynn Hickey, Wildcat head coach, said. "We started slow, but played better in the second half."

The Jennies came out determined to stop 6-foot-1 junior center Angie Bonner and K-State's inside threat and the 'Cats had trouble holding onto the ball.

Central Missouri collapsed its 2-1-2 zone into the lane and forced K-State to take low percentage shots.

"I don't think the team was ready to play," Bonner said. "Central Missouri always plays hard against us. They really tried to control the inside. I was triple-teamed all night."

Jones, a 6-foot-1 sophomore forward, popped in 14 first-half points to keep K-State in the game and the Wildcats took a 41-39 lead into halftime as Gilmore hit a jump shot with 24 seconds left.

The 'Cats started the second half with fire in their eyes as they opened the game up with a 22-6 scoring binge.

Sophomore Sheronda Jenkins was the spark plug as she began to get the K-State offense untracked with her passing. The 5-foot-8 guard was tabbed the tournament's most valuable player. Jenkins began moving the ball around the perimeter and Gilmore started hitting the open shots. K-State never looked back after that.

"We played with more intensity in the second half," Hickey said. "We passed the ball better and played tough defense."

As K-State began hitting the outside shots, the Jennies' defense began to open up. The Wildcats began to run the ball up the court and with five minutes remaining K-State went up by 26 on a 20-foot jumper by freshman Susan Green.

The 'Cats coasted from there as CMS was unable to stop K-State's offense.

"They really played hard in the middle and forced the other players to shoot and they came through," Bonner said.

"The movement of the ball in the second half was the difference," Jenkins said. "We played tough defense and started running more. We have still got a lot of things to work on though."

K-State was clearly the best of the tournament as they embarrassed North Texas State 99-44, breaking the tournament single game scoring record of 98 points in the first round.

Bonner destroyed the Eagles as she dropped in 25 points and controlled the middle.

CMS downed Wyoming 72-59 in a come from behind victory to reach the finals. Wyoming captured third place as they defeated North Texas 56-55 in the consolation game.

K-State placed three players on the all-tournament team. Jones and Gilmore joined MVP Jenkins along with Wyoming's Elsa Gonzales and Central Missouri's Rosie Jones.

For the tournament, Jenkins had 23 points, 18 assists and five rebounds. Jones had 28 points and 10 rebounds while Gilmore added 33 points and 17 rebounds. The 'Cats broke the tournament scoring record with 192 points, surpassing the old record of 174 set last year by K-State.

Next up for the women is Wichita State University Tuesday night in Wichita.

Officials prepare for bowl games

By The Associated Press

Those ear-to-ear grins in Florida and Texas belong to relieved officials of the Orange and Cotton Bowls.

Just when the bowl committees were thinking of dialing their respective suicide hotlines, top-ranked Nebraska and No. 2 Texas came roaring from behind to complete unblemished regular seasons — the only major-college football teams to do so — and propel the Orange and Cotton Bowls into the Jan. 2 spotlight.

Nebraska, which trailed 14-7 and 21-14, was paced by record-breaking tailback Mike Rozier's 205 rushing yards, but needed touchdown runs of 1 yard by quarterback Turner Gill and 17 by fullback Mark Schellen in the final 5½ minutes of the third period to defeat arch-rival Oklahoma 28-21. The Cornhuskers will take a 12-0 record into the Orange Bowl against fifth-ranked Miami.

Texas trailed Texas A&M 13-0 early in the second period, but went ahead 14-13 by halftime and poured in on with 31 points in the third period to lock up a 45-13 triumph. Third-string quarterback Rick McIvor came off the bench and fired four touchdown passes to tie a school record.

The Longhorns will bring an 11-0 mark into the Cotton Bowl against seventh-ranked Georgia, which had the closest call of all. The Bulldogs, 9-1-1, trailed Georgia Tech 7-0 and 14-7, then snapped a 17-17 tie on John Lastinger's 4-yard pass to Kevin Harris in the third period and went on to edge the Yellow Jackets 27-24.

Meanwhile, there was good news and bad news for the Sun Bowl. Sixth-ranked Southern Methodist used a pair of touchdown passes by Lance McIlhenny to defeat Houston 34-12 in the seventh annual Mirage Bowl before 62,000 people in Tokyo. But on Friday, No. 13 Alabama lost to No. 15 Boston College 20-13 when fullback Bob Biestek scored twice in a span of 83 seconds late in the game to wipe out a 13-6 Alabama lead. Both touchdowns followed Alabama fumbles and came on a 5-yard pass from Doug Flutie and a 3-yard run.

In the weekend's only other game involving a bowl team, Tennessee, which meets No. 17 Maryland in the Florida Citrus Bowl, downed Vanderbilt 34-24. Johnnie Jones rushed for 248 yards, including touchdown romps of 41 and 70, and set a single-season school record of 1,116 yards.

A 62-yard gallop by Nebraska's Rozier, who became the second runner in NCAA history to rush for 2,000 in one season, set up Gill's quarterback sneak that tied the score 21-21 against Oklahoma with 5:29 left in the third quarter. Schellen, who also scored Nebraska's first touchdown on a 7-yard run, broke the tie with 35 seconds remaining in the period.

The game ended on a controversial note after Oklahoma drove 72 yards to the Nebraska 2-yard line in the final minute. On second-and-one, an illegal motion penalty set the Sooners back to the 7. Defensive end Bill Weber then nailed quarterback Danny Bradley for a 3-yard loss and two passes fell incomplete. On the first one, Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer claimed that wide receiver Derrick Shepard was interfered with by cornerback Neil Harris.

"We've got the slant play called to Shepard and they splat him right in the mouth with the ball in the air," Switzer growled. "Everybody saw it. Didn't y'all see it? The ball's in the air on the slant route and Shepard gets hit right in the face. The officials are looking right at it and they don't call it."

It was only Nebraska's second close game this season, the other a 14-10 squeaker over Oklahoma State.

Rozier became the top rusher in Big Eight history with 4,780 yards, and his 2,148 yards is the second best in NCAA history, surpassed only by 2,342 by Marcus Allen of Southern Cal in 1981. And his 3-yard run that tied the score 14-14 with 46 seconds left in the first half enabled him to tie the national record of 29 touchdowns by Penn State's Lydell Mitchell in 1971.

Texas A&M, playing for the first time in all-maroon uniforms and before a record College Station crowd of 76,751, jumped to a 13-0 lead over Texas on Roger Vick's 24-yard run and a pair of field goals by Alan Smith.

In the third quarter he added scoring strikes of 33 and 60 yards to Kelvin Epps, while a trick play — a pass off a reverse — produced a 41-yard TD toss from Bryant to Duhan.

Georgia withstood a 158-yard rushing effort by Georgia Tech's Robert Lavette, who scored on a 72-yard run and a 30-yard pass from John Dewberry, who tallied on a 25-yard scamper.

Nebraska ends season with perfect record

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Top-ranked Nebraska, led by record-breaking Mike Rozier's 205 yards rushing, stormed from behind with two touchdowns in the final 5½ minutes of the third period and completed a 12-0 regular season Saturday by defeating arch-rival Oklahoma 28-21.

A 62-yard gallop by Rozier, who became the second runner in NCAA history to rush for 2,000 yards in one season, set up Turner Gill's 1-yard quarterback sneak that tied the score 21-21 with 5:29 left in the third period.

Fullback Mark Schellen scored the winning touchdown on a 17-yard burst around right end with 35 seconds left in the quarter, capping an eight-play, 41-yard drive following Jeff Smith's 11-yard punt return.

Schellen also scored Nebraska's first touchdown on a 7-yard run that capped the Cornhuskers' first possession, while Rozier, who carried 32 times and set an NCAA record with 929 yards in his last four games, tied the score 14-14 with a 3-yard run 46 seconds before halftime.

Oklahoma reached the Nebraska 2-yard line in the final minute after a 72-yard drive. But an illegal procedure penalty set the Sooners back to the 7, defensive end Bill Weber nailed quarterback Danny Bradley for a 3-yard loss and two passes fell incomplete in the end zone. The last one was batted away from split end Buster Rhymes by cornerback Neil Harris.

The victory, which extended the nation's longest winning streak to 22 games, sends Nebraska into the Orange Bowl against fifth-ranked Miami as Big Eight champions for the third straight year. The Cornhuskers' 21-game Big Eight winning streak marks the first time a team has posted three straight unbeaten-untied seasons in conference play since Oklahoma's six straight from 1953-58.

The Sooners, who declined all bowl bids, are 7-4 and wind up their season next week at Hawaii. They finished in a second-place Big Eight tie with Missouri at 5-2.

Spencer Tillman, one of Oklahoma's two outstanding red-shirt freshman running backs, scored on runs of 39 and 18 yards. His second touchdown gave Oklahoma a short-lived 21-14 lead at 6:22 of the third period and came two plays after Bradley scrambled for 16 yards on fourth-and-one for a first down at the 18.

On its first possession, Nebraska drove 67 yards on 13 plays for a 7-0 lead. Schellen, the forgotten man in Nebraska's troika of backfield superstars, scored on a 7-yard burst up the middle at 8:07 and the sellout crowd of 75,008, which braved heavy rain plus a touch of snow, seemed to anticipate a blowout by the Cornhuskers, who had outscored their first 11 opponents by an average of 54-15.

The drive included a fourth-down, 8-yard shovel pass on a fake field goal from Gill, the holder, to blocker Tim Brungardt that gave the Huskers a first down at the 7.

But Oklahoma, a two-touchdown underdog for the first time in memory, battled on more than even terms for the rest of the first half, even though Tim Lashar missed field goal attempts of 37 and 47 yards.

It remained 7-0 until a three-touchdown explosion in the final 4:05 of the second period produced a 14-14 halftime standoff.

After Gill threw an incomplete pass on fourth-and-eight from the Oklahoma 31, the Sooners roared 69 yards in five plays and tied the score on Spencer Tillman's nifty 39-yard run with 4:05 left in the half.

Dawkins begins to live up to NBA 'potential'

By The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Big things have always been expected of Darryl Dawkins, whose 6-foot-11, 251-pound figure has always been more imposing than his National Basketball Association stats.

The Philadelphia 76ers expected big things from him, and traded him away when they felt they didn't get them.

Now in his second season with the New Jersey Nets, the mammoth center has been displaying the "potential" everyone said he had.

In the four-game stretch, Dawkins averaged 19 points, 10 rebounds and 5.2 blocks a game — all above his career marks.

"When he plays the position right," said Bob Lanier, Milwaukee's 35-year-old center, "he's an awfully awesome figure."

Added Mike Gminski, Dawkins' backup with the Nets: "I don't think he can ever become what people expect. They expect so damn much. But he's a force on the floor."

Perhaps the key to Dawkins' solid start this season is that he's committing less fouls. Last season, he was charged with a league-record 379 personal fouls and he fouled out of 23 games, three short of the NBA record.

Stan Albeck, the Nets' new coach, had a 12-minute film spliced with nothing but what he called Dawkins' "good, bad and phantom" fouls.

"The film has helped. I learned from it," said Dawkins, who twice this season set career highs in minutes played. "They've been trying to help me develop my talent, my potential."

Dawkins began his professional career in 1975 as an 18-year-old, fresh out of Maynard Evans High School in Orlando, Fla.

Faculty evaluations affect teaching methods, promotions

By KARRA PORTER
Collegian Reporter

When students fill out faculty evaluation forms near the end of each semester, many wonder if the results really make a difference in how the course is taught.

All non-tenured instructors are required to be evaluated in some way by students, University Provost Owen Koeppel said.

"The University, through its Faculty Senate, has a policy that prior to receiving tenure, all teaching faculty must have a certain amount of evaluation of their teaching by students," Koeppel said.

Although some departments within a college may have additional requirements, most participation by tenured faculty is voluntary.

In the Department of Clothing, Textiles and Interior Design in the College of Home Economics, the faculty approved a policy several years ago which incorporates student evaluations into overall department evaluations.

"In this department it is the policy that all faculty, tenured or untenured, new or experienced, will have at least one section of a class they teach evaluated by students, and the evaluation submitted for merit consideration," Department Head Mary Don Peterson said. "It is the faculty's decision that we do that."

In addition to the standard form which the department administers and reviews, Peterson said many faculty give additional evaluations to gather information for their own use.

The College of Engineering's Department of Industrial Engineering follows University policy which allows student evaluation of tenured faculty to be voluntary.

"In truth, though, most of our faculty—in fact, all of our faculty—do have evaluations done," said Frank Tillman, head of the department.

These evaluations are done for the benefit of the teacher and are also used in tenure and promotion consideration, Tillman said. When a faculty member is evaluated by students, the results become part of the department's overall evaluation of faculty members for merit consideration, he said.

Student evaluations play the same role in the Department of Pre-Design Professions in the College of Architecture and Design.

"We use them when we prepare recommendations for reappointment; we use them when we're looking at the question of merit increases, as part of the process. It's not the sole factor, but it is a factor," said James Jones, head of the department.

Jones said student evaluations are required for non-tenured faculty in the department and recommended to those with tenure. Even though there is no requirement, about 50 percent of the tenured faculty solicit student evaluations, he said.

The Department of Modern Languages in the College of Arts and Sciences asks each faculty member to provide at least one evaluation each for a beginning, intermediate and advanced-level course; they usually get many more.

"Most people do evaluate every class they teach," said Thomas O'Connor, department head.

Koeppel said that when he was teaching he appreciated student evaluations because they often gave him hints on how to improve his presentation.

"My feeling is that it is an extremely helpful thing for the faculty member as well as someone that is attempting to evaluate the faculty member's performance," he said.

"One year I was kind of upset that they said I didn't do very well in a certain part of my presentation. I was upset enough that I changed it, and the next year they said it was the best part," he said.

There have been instances where consistently low student ratings of a non-tenured teacher have led to a review and ultimately to that teacher's failure to receive tenure, Tillman said.

"We much more closely monitor what goes on in the classroom when problems arise, and we do that through student evaluations," he said, adding that they look for a trend rather than a one-time low rating.

Peterson believes negative evaluations can provide areas of possible change for instructors or, in some cases, indicate that an instructor might not be suited for that particular job.

"If it (the student evaluation) is doing its job, it might pinpoint those who might be better off in another field," she said. "A committed teacher would use the data results to try to make changes."

A trend of positive evaluations can also provide insights, O'Connor said.

"With experience with the instrument, people can see very, very clearly the strengths and weaknesses that a person has," he said. "It's consistency over the long run we're looking for."

Consistency in terms of student responses can be measured easily by the form which is most often used in evaluations, the Hoyt-Owens form. This form asks students to respond to nine statements about the instructor and the course, such as "The instructor presented the material in an interesting way." The responses range from "definitely false" to "definitely true."

Faculty in Peterson's department voted to adopt the nine-item form, developed by the Office of Educational Resources, Peterson said. Previously, the department had used a much longer form offered by OER, but it did not prove as appropriate for summary evaluations, she said.

Modern languages also switched to the nine-item form recently. The evaluation goals of the short form are clearer, O'Connor said.

"Its main goal is really evaluation of teaching effectiveness; it's not cluttered by many questions which seek to find out particulars about a person's teaching style," he said.

Koeppel said he believes the evaluations, particularly students' comments, are helpful but shouldn't be viewed as the final answer.

One reason for caution is the correlation that exists between a student's performance in a course and his evaluation of that course, he said. In addition, Koeppel said, a teacher's popularity, rather than his teaching performance, may be reflected in the evaluations.

"I think at times you can over-react to student evaluations. Popularity in teaching and the excellence of that teaching are not necessarily synonymous," he said. Jones has a similar concern.

"There are some implications in the wording of some of those questions which I find biased toward teaching as entertainment, with enthusiasm and all that," he said.

In addition, many of the classes offered in the pre-designs department are studios, and he said he believes the nine-item form to be oriented more toward lecture and recitation classes.

Jones also said he has concerns about the mathematical aspect of the evaluation form.

"If you put a quantity value to a response selected from a list of responses, it adds a certain character of mathematical precision that is not there in reality."

"It gives a weight in our faculty evaluations for reappointment, tenure and merit raises that seems almost a little too much. The other kinds of recommendations, from faculty members and department heads, are usually expressed in letter form, not in a comparative scale form," he said.

Tillman said one drawback he sees in student evaluations is that often only those students with complaints fill out the evaluations, resulting in a too-low rating for a course.

O'Connor added that the weak point in the evaluation process is that it only measures the opinion the student currently holds. A student may not realize until much later the effect a specific teacher had on him, so the evaluations don't reflect the teacher's true effectiveness, he said.

It is also true that some courses almost never get good evaluations, Koeppel said. Those classes are typically the larger lower-level classes—"tough, required, make-or-break courses in a curriculum that students don't like"—and the low evaluations are really reflections of the course in general rather than the instruction, he said.

Peterson said that although the evaluations do differ some among classes, such as between introductory-level and upper-level courses, students don't always give unfavorable ratings to the lower-level required courses.

"That isn't a hard and fast rule," she said, "because we've had some really super evaluations in some very large, required classes."

O'Connor said he believes the number of evaluation forms a student is asked to fill out during his college career may affect his responses if he becomes bored with the process.

Shoppers suffer winds, cold during wait for cloth dolls

By The Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — More than 300 shoppers from at least three states suffered biting winds and cold for up to five hours Sunday as they stood waiting to get their hands on cloth dolls that have caused near-riots in other cities this season.

"The grandchildren want them, what can I say?" said Clayton LaClair of Stoddard, one of the unlucky shoppers unable to buy any Cabbage Patch Kids, moon-faced cloth dolls with birth certificates, adoption papers, disposable diapers, detailed fingers and toes and individual facial features.

Auction school teaches bidding; stock arena serves as classroom

By RHONDA WESSEL
Agriculture Editor

Although the main objective of auctioneer school is to teach voice control and technique, another not so obvious aspect of the livestock sale is the technique of taking and offering a bid.

"We spent a lot of time practicing on taking bids. We learned to spot different types of bids and bidders," said Ray Sims, registered Angus auctioneer from Leawood.

Sims graduated from the Indiana School of Auctioneering in 1939 and he has been auctioning livestock in the Midwest since his graduation.

"I'm just auctioning registered Angus cattle now. This carries me to several states. I work mainly in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado and Kansas," Sims said.

Sims was the auctioneer for the annual K-Sale Nov. 22. He has auctioned three of the eight K-Sales. Each of the sales he has worked involved registered Angus cattle.

"Each individual has his own style of bidding. Some nod the head while others wink an eye or wave a catalog," he said.

Although the bidding gestures are sometimes only slight body movements, it is easy to distinguish between the gestures and a movement not be intended to be a bid, Sims said.

"We are trained to know what to look for so it's not hard to spot a bid," he said.

The way people bid involves a great deal of psychological warfare between each individual bidding on the same animal.

"Some people are very discrete in the way they bid so it is hard for others to determine who they are bidding against," Sims said.

"At the same time, those who bid aggressively want everyone to assume they are willing to bid until they purchase the animal no matter what the cost," he said.

Sims doesn't think a person's personality can be determined by the way he bids. However, others in the field indicated that some qualities of a person's personality show in the manner in which they bid.

"Those who bid aggressively are usually pretty positive-minded, decisive individuals. They usually bid by throwing their hats or waving the sale catalogs in the air," said Joe Rickabaugh, Western Kansas Livestock Association representative.

"Those who are more timid in their bidding are usually those who stop and think about things and question before they buy," Rickabaugh said. "These people usually move a finger or wink to place a bid."

Rickabaugh is a May 1981 graduate in animal sciences and industry. He worked as a bid taker on the sale ring floor at the K-Sale. He helped the auctioneer take bids and make sure those bids were seen and acknowledged.

Sometimes there are bidding disputes after the sale is closed. This usually happens when the auctioneer closes the sale, and he failed to see one of the bid takers on the floor still working with a buyer and placing his bid.

"I give preference to the man I recognized last," Sims said. "However, I always try to make sure that doesn't happen before the sale closes."

Rickabaugh, however, works bidding disputes from a different angle.

"I always stay on my bidders side if his bid was in last. You always have to keep the bidder on your side. After all, it's the bidder that I'm working for. I'm trying to get him the best buy possible," Rickabaugh said.

"The main thing in this situation is to try not to make the bidder mad," he said.

Although many people attend livestock sales with the sole intent to purchase livestock, many go to the sale for other reasons.

"Some go watch sales to get an idea of how the market is running so they can decide whether to sell what they have on the farm or ranch at home. Others just go to visit and see their friends," Sims said.

Winter storm paralyzes western Kansas

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Hundreds of stranded motorists filled motels to capacity, and National Guard armories were opened to handle the overflow Sunday as a blizzard packing 45-mph winds swept through western Kansas.

Authorities blamed the storm for at least two deaths.

At Garden City, National Guardsmen in halftracks — tank-size vehicles with wide tracks to cut through the snow — were dispatched to surrounding Finney County to rescue stranded motorists along U.S. highways 50 and 83.

"We can't get patrol cars or four-wheel drives out," said a spokesman for the Kansas Highway Patrol in Garden City. "We've got quite a few people (stranded) out there. It's like a giant parking lot."

U.S. 50 from Dodge City west to the Colorado state line was closed, as were many other highways in the western half of the state, the patrol said.

Strong winds had whipped the 4 to 6 inches of snow on the ground in Finney County into large drifts and had reduced visibility to zero, the patrol spokesman said.

National Guard armories in Garden City and Hays were opened Sunday after motels in each city were packed with motorists who chose to sit out the storm. About 170 motorists sought shelter at the Hays armory Sunday night, authorities said.

Snowfall amounts included 6 to 12 inches in the northwest, 2 to 5 inches in the southwest and up to 5 inches in parts of north-central Kansas, where freezing rain earlier Sunday coated roads, tree limbs and power lines with ice. Scattered power outages were reported.

The Kansas Highway Patrol said Otis E. Cross, 63, of Lincoln, Neb., and his wife, Ida I. Cross, 59, died Sunday when their car skidded into a pickup truck on snowpacked and slippery Kansas 177 in extreme southeastern Geary County.

The weather service said 1 foot of snow was reported at Goodland.

Reagan delays sale of helicopter parts to Guatemalans

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, upset over a resurgence of human rights violations in Guatemala, is delaying the sale of helicopter parts to the Central American nation's rightist military government, officials say.

State Department officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the delay in the sale reflects U.S. concern over the upturn in political violence — including attacks against employees of U.S.-funded educational programs.

The officials said an earlier approval for the sale is not formally under review, but some senior officials want it withdrawn and, in the meantime, final permission for a $2 million purchase of military helicopter parts is being held up to signal U.S. displeasure.

The latest chill in U.S.-Guatemalan relations also complicates President Reagan's strategy of drawing Guatemala more directly into regional efforts to reduce leftist influences in Central America. Before adjourning 10 days ago, Congress barred direct military and economic aid to Guatemala and 51 congressmen urged cancellation of the helicopter parts sale.

The delay on the helicopter parts sale also coincides with the return to the United States of Ambassador Frederic L. Chapin for the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays — an absence which, though officially characterized as "routine," is regarded as another sign of American displeasure.

Last January, the Reagan administration ended a five-year embargo on military assistance to Guatemala, approving the sale of $6 million in helicopter parts and citing "significant steps" by then-President Efraim Rios Montt to improve human rights.

But the Guatemalans said then they lacked the money to buy the parts and the deal did not go through. In February, an AID linguist and three companions were seized by soldiers and killed. That incident prompted a brief recall of Chapin to Washington.

On Aug. 8, Rios Montt was ousted by a coup led by his defense minister, Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores.

Although having supported Rios Montt, the Reagan administration praised the new government, which began working with Honduras, El Salvador and Panama to revive the Central American Defense Council, known by its Spanish acronym CONDECA, to counter leftist Nicaragua.

But on Oct. 18, another AID-sponsored linguist disappeared. His body along with those of a coworker and her daughter were reported by authorities to have been found buried in a car crash that foreign diplomats considered highly suspicious.

Snow cripples airports, cities in Midwest

By The Associated Press

A record November blizzard trapped thousands of travelers and brought Midwestern cities to a standstill with head-high drifts Monday while the death toll climbed to 56 from back-to-back snowstorms.

The storm closed major highways and key airports in seven states as heavy snow fell from Oklahoma and Colorado to upper Michigan. Snow accumulations of 2 feet or more in some areas were whipped into 9-foot drifts by 50-mph winds.

"There just isn't anything going on out there because you plain can't move," said a dispatcher for the Nebraska State Patrol.

The wind made it feel like 40 degrees below zero in some areas and residents were warned to stay home. Houses went dark and cold as power lines snapped under the weight of ice.

Schools, businesses and government offices closed in many cities such as Minneapolis, Omaha, Neb., and Sioux Falls, S.D.

Across the hardest hit states of Colorado, Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota, and Minnesota, motorists by the hundreds sought shelter in National Guard armories, churches and truck stops.

Nothing was moving in many towns except snowmobiles, some used to fetch food for the stranded.

Snowplows were mostly useless in the blowing snow, but a physician rode one to deliver a baby boy at a home in Limon, Colo., a town on Interstate 70 about halfway between Denver and the Kansas state line where an estimated 2,000 motorists were marooned.

About 3,000 people spent the night at Stapleton International Airport in Denver, where 22 inches of snow fell, but the airport began operating at 50 percent capacity by Monday morning.

Major highways across Colorado, Wyoming, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Minnesota and Iowa were closed early Monday. Drifts were up to 9 feet high in southwestern Nebraska, 8 feet in western Kansas and about 4 feet near the Twin Cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul.

It was the second storm to sweep across the Rockies into the Great Lakes area in a week. Forecasters said a third — but smaller — blow was expected in the mountains today.

Pell grants to increase; work study may suffer

By LEE WHITE
Collegian Reporter

Students on the top end of the Pell Grant scale can expect a $100 raise for the 1984-85 school year. President Reagan signed a bill Oct. 31 allowing the increase, but a possible cut in work-study funds still hangs in the balance.

The highest amount paid to Kansas residents living on campus is $1,688 and the highest for off-campus residents is $1,100. The former will see a $100 increase, but those off campus will receive Pell Grant increases of up to $500 due to cost of off-campus living increases, said Robert Evans, director of student financial assistance.

Non-residents living on or off campus will get $100 increases from $1,800. These figures are for the top of the Pell Grant award scale only, Evans said, but increases should come across the board.

"The wealth will be shared, what little there will be," Evans said.

Pell Grant funds at K-State will increase about $350,000, Evans said. Before this year is over, 3,900 students will have received Pell Grants, he said.

Cuts in student aid may come in the form of decreased work-study money. Reagan has yet to decide whether to decrease the funding.

For the current school year, $550 million has been allocated for work study. Part of the funding — $50 million from a jobs bill — will be cut if the president approves the plan.

Evans said the cuts shouldn't seriously affect the approximately 750 students who receive aid from the work-study program at K-State.

Congressman sees colors in financial future for U.S.

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — The government is planning to print money in pink, blue and other hues to replace the familiar greenbacks now in circulation, a congressman said Monday.

Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, said plans for the new bills were disclosed to him Nov. 3 in a meeting with Katherine Ortega, the nation's treasurer. Also at the meeting were representatives of the Federal Reserve and the Secret Service, and members of the House subcommittee on coinage and consumer affairs, of which Paul is a member.

In Washington, a spokesman at the Treasury said any changes under consideration were designed to cope with counterfeiting.

Besides changing the color, Paul said the bills would carry a metallic strip running vertically next to the face on the bill, to allow authorities to determine whether bills were being taken out of the country. Presumably, a large number of bills could be detected by electronic devices.

The colors of the bills had not yet been decided, he said, although each denomination would be a different color and each bill would be only one color.

Salaries hold key to better education

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A veteran Kansas local school board member who served on the National Commission on Excellence in Education and Gov. John Carlin both said Monday higher teacher salaries are the key to improving the state's educational system.

Both addressed the annual convention of the Kansas Association of School Boards, which concludes today when Ruth Ann Hackler, a member of the board of education of Unified School District No. 233 at Olathe, succeeds Wanda Reed of USD 438 at Skyline as president.

Hackler will serve until next year's convention, when Jacques Oakes of USD 366 at Yates Center moves up to president. She was named president-elect Sunday.

Dr. Robert V. Haderlein of Girard, a member of the national commission, called it "a sad condition" that the latest average pay for beginning teachers with college degrees is only $12,769 a year, and after 12 years of experience the average is just $17,000.

Carlin calls for higher wages

Largely because of those salaries, Haderlein said, only five percent of the high school students taking the Scholastic Aptitude Test in 1982 indicated they planned to become teachers, and now there are predictions of an elementary teacher shortage later in this decade, he said.

Carlin also stressed inadequate base salaries for teachers in his speech to the convention, saying he was pleased that most school board members he has talked to around Kansas agree with him.

"I feel a lot more confident knowing many of you also agree that it's very difficult to implement any kind of meaningful merit pay system when our base salary is not where it should be," said Carlin.

Haderlein urged his fellow board members to make the unpopular decisions needed to improve the quality of American education.

"It's up to you, the school board members, to bite the bullet and make the decisions that must be made, and in most instances it's not going to be a popular decision," he said.

Haderlein, a member of the school board at Girard for more than 30 years and a past president of both the KASB and the National School Boards Association, served on the national commission which produced the much-discussed report, "A Nation at Risk," detailing shortcomings of the U.S. public education system.

He acknowledged the report has been the most "scrutinized, eulogized and criticized" document on American education since the late 1950s, when the Soviet Union beat the United States into space by launching Sputnik.

But the report can be a very positive force for the future of education in this country, if local school boards will study it, see what portions of it are applicable to their own school systems and make improvements based on the recommendations which fit their situation, Haderlein told board members from across Kansas.

He said he is optimistic that "school districts will make decisions that will strengthen their programs."

Carlin said the education program he will submit to the 1984 Legislature in January will be basically the same as the one he offered a year ago.

U.S., Israel support closer military cooperation in Mideast

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir raised Israeli proposals with President Reagan on Monday to strengthen U.S.-Israeli military and economic ties and to counter what both nations say is a Soviet-backed threat in Lebanon.

U.S. and Israeli officials said they expected agreement on closer military cooperation, such as building a U.S. arms depot in Israel and joint military exercises, as a signal to Syria and its Soviet sponsors that they won't be given a free hand in Lebanon.

After an initial 20-minute meeting with Reagan and his key advisers in the Oval Office, Shamir told reporters that he had "very friendly and good talks."

A second meeting between the two leaders was scheduled for Tuesday, preceding the arrival in Washington on Wednesday of Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, who also is expected to seek more U.S. aid.

White House Spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan stressed to Shamir, "We will continue to improve our cooperation with Israel while at the same time continuing our relations with moderate Arab states."

He said Reagan reiterated to Shamir that the president's Sept. 1, 1982 speech calling for a Palestinian entity under Jordanian supervision on the West Bank "remains the key item in U.S. policy" in the region.

Speakes characterized the talks as "straightforward, friendly."

A senior U.S. official, insisting on anonymity, said Syria "is going to have to take into account" closer U.S.-Israeli cooperation in deciding its moves in Lebanon. The United States reportedly is asking Israel to show itself as a viable deterrent to what the official called the growing "Syrian strength and assertiveness."

The Israelis believe they are in a better bargaining position for increased U.S. aid than they have been for years, perceiving a declining U.S. interest in courting Syria and U.S. disappointment with the pro-Western Arab regimes in helping to resolve the Lebanon crisis.

Israel is asking for easier terms in its $2.6 billion aid package from Washington and for permission to resell U.S. components used in Israeli weapons, which they say would open new arms markets in the Third World. Defense Minister Moshe Arens, accompanying Shamir, was expected to return to Washington next week to conclude specific agreements on military aspects of the talks.

U.S. officials, refusing to be identified, said Washington would consider Israel's requests "in a sympathetic mood," but they said Reagan and Secretary of State George P. Shultz would stress the value of U.S. ties in the Arab world in "strengthening the fabric of stability and security in the entire region."

Currently, Israel has to repay only $870 million of its $1.7 billion in U.S. military aid. None of the $910 million in this year's economic assistance is repayable. Israel is the largest recipient of American financial support.

Good as the terms are, Israel wants to repay an even smaller percentage of what it receives next year, administration officials said. Inflation is running close to 200 percent in economically beset Israel.

The administration was likely to seek an Israeli softening of its opposition to an 8,300-member Jordanian strike force, U.S. armed and trained, to operate in emergencies in the oil-rich Persian Gulf. Congress has refused to provide money for the project, but the administration has not dropped the idea.

Conflict was expected on Jordan's potential role and what moves could be made to encourage King Hussein to bolt the Arab line and talk peace.

The United States is believed to be seeking an Israeli gesture of good faith to Hussein, such as a freeze on the construction of new Jewish settlements in occupied territory.

Shamir, in an interview Saturday in Israel, ruled out any change in Israel's settlement policy, arguing that Hussein was stopped in the past from talking to Israel by Arab pressure, not by Israeli policy.

Gemayel, the Lebanese president, also will be seeking more U.S. aid when he sees Reagan on Thursday and Shultz on Friday.

But he will not be trying to revise Lebanon's agreement with Israel for the withdrawal of Israeli troops, a U.S. official, requesting anonymity, said.

Syria has objected to terms that give Israel a security presence in southern Lebanon and could point the way to diplomatic and economic relations between the two countries. Syria has declined to work out arrangements for a withdrawal of its forces. As a result, the Israeli troops have also remained in Lebanon.

A Lebanese delegation headed by Wadi Haddad, the Lebanese national security adviser, arrived Saturday and has met with Richard Murphy, the assistant secretary of state for the Near East.

Donnerstein, the author of several books, has researched media effects on behavior and attitudes, pornography and mass media violence and human aggression.

Bar issue to top agenda of city commission meeting

By The Collegian Staff

The recent controversy surrounding Charlie's Neighborhood Bar will be the sole agenda item at the City Commission work session today. The meeting is scheduled for 4 p.m. in the City Commission meeting room at City Hall.

The bar would be located in the First Center, Claflin Road and Denison Avenue, which is within 200 feet of the Institute of Religion. A city ordinance bans the issuance of a license for consumption of cereal malt beverages within 200 feet of a city or parochial school. The institute, which is owned and operated by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is in opposition to licensing of the bar as are some residents living in the vicinity.

The issue was discussed at the Nov. 1 and Nov. 15 City Commission meetings but no decision was made.

Engineers face salary, job decline

By College Press Service

The job market for recent engineering graduates has been cut in half, and starting salaries given to those who do get jobs have leveled off or declined, according to a new study by the Scientific Manpower Commission.

"The grads of '82 could pretty much name their jobs and their prices," SMC's Eleanor Babco said.

"But job offers are down by about 50 percent for last spring's graduates," she said, "and we've even seen some drops in salaries for new engineers."

"We don't know if it was primarily the recession or if (last spring's grads) were just taking the first offers they got and not waiting for higher offers," she said.

"Recruiting was down tremendously for the last school year," she said, "so we think it was more that the number of job offers was actually down."

Among chemical engineers, for instance, the number of job offers has declined from 30,816 in 1982 to 26,736 for 1983.

Starting salaries for chemical engineers also dropped, Babco said, as did starting pay for civil and geological engineers.

Job offers as well as salaries were down for chemistry, agriculture, and other physical and earth science majors, the report also states. Salaries increased for math, biology and computer science majors.

'Two-China' policy imperils Reagan visit

By The Associated Press

PEKING — Two measures in the U.S. Congress which support Taiwan have disturbed Chinese-U.S. relations and cast some doubt on President Reagan's plans to visit China in April.

Reagan is expected to sign an appropriations bill, passed by Congress in mid-November, which backs Communist China's application to join the Asian Development Bank. But the bill also says that Taiwan — which still claims to be the legitimate government of all China — should remain a full member of the bank.

The vote prompted a formal protest from the Chinese government on Nov. 25, the second in a week, warning of "grave consequences" for relations with the United States.

The first time U.S. Ambassador Arthur W. Hummel was summoned by Zhu Qichen, assistant Chinese foreign minister, was Nov. 18. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee had passed a resolution saying Taiwan's future should be settled "peacefully, free of coercion and in a manner acceptable to the people on Taiwan."

Peking, which claims Taiwan as one of its 22 provinces, said both votes betrayed a lingering "two-Chinas" policy in Washington and infringed on China's internal affairs.

Hu Yaobang, secretary-general of the Chinese Communist Party, said that without an acceptable U.S. response to the protests, Reagan's visit might be canceled, as would Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang's planned trip to the United States in January.

However, it might be significant that China chose an assistant foreign minister — two rungs from the top — to make the protests.

At a banquet for visiting Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau of Canada Monday night, Zhao indicated he planned to make at least the Canada leg of his North American trip.

When the vice-foreign minister, Qian Qichen, who is one step higher than Zhu, was asked how China would react if Reagan signed the appropriations bill, he replied, "You'll just have to wait and see."

U.S. jets fly missions over Beirut area

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — U.S. jets thundered over Beirut Monday after two overnight attacks on American Marines, and gunners shelled the capital's harbor for the first time since the summer of 1982.

In Tripoli, besieged PLO chief Yasser Arafat accused Syria of massing troops near the port city.

The American jets flew reconnaissance sorties over Beirut and nearby hills after the attacks on Marine positions. The shooting caused no casualties to the Marines and only minor damage to the Beirut airport where the Marines are stationed.

But the 15-minute bombardment of the port wounded four construction workers shortly after noon. Police were unable to determine who was responsible for the first shelling of the harbor area since Israel's 1982 summer invasion of Lebanon.

One salvo of five shells and rockets slammed into the harbor area about a mile east of the U.S. Embassy on West Beirut's seafloor.

"Nothing fell close enough to alarm us," said embassy spokesman John Stewart.

The artillery and rocket-propelled grenade attacks on the U.S. Marine contingent at Beirut's international airport came before midnight and at daybreak, said a Marine spokesman, Maj. Dennis Brooks.

A grenade and some small arms fire hit the southern perimeter of the base, said Brooks. He said Marines returned the fire with small arms and machine guns.

At daybreak, two artillery rounds hit the airport runway. Brooks said the origin of those shells was not determined.

In southern Lebanon, 12 Israeli tanks crossed the Awali River, which has been the self-imposed front line for Israel. The tanks apparently were a warning to warring Druse and Christian militiamen in Lebanon's Chouf Mountains to stop fighting, Lebanese reporters in the area said.

Reporters said that quiet prevailed shortly after the Israeli intervention, which followed two days of artillery and rocket exchanges that left eight combatants dead and five wounded.

In Damascus, Syria, municipal leaders of Tripoli joined talks on the evacuation of warring Palestine Liberation Organization forces. No agreement on an evacuation timetable has been announced.

While inspecting his troops in Tripoli, Arafat refused to say when he planned to leave. He also claimed Syria had moved one parachute battalion to new positions north of Tripoli late Sunday and had redeployed about 40 tanks near villages to the east.

A leader of an insurgent PLO faction continued to insist that his troops would not leave the Palestinian refugee camps near Tripoli which they captured from Arafat. Col. Saeed Mousa insisted the camps are not part of the Tripoli area.

The cease-fire agreement mediated by Syria and Saudi Arabia calls for all PLO forces to leave the Tripoli region.

Greyhound strikers soundly reject wage offer

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Striking Greyhound bus drivers and other workers resoundingly rejected a company proposal to reduce wages by 7.8 percent, with 96 percent voting against the contract offer, union officials said Monday.

But Harry Rosenblum, acting president of the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions, said he didn't think "we'd be that far from a settlement" if the company and union resolved certain other issues in the three-year contract, such as a proposed reduction in pension benefits.

Rosenblum, who told the company's chief negotiator the results of the vote, expressed optimism that talks would resume soon.

But when asked the company's reaction, he said:

"They play good poker."

Greyhound Lines planned to comment today, when John W. Teets, chairman of the parent Greyhound

Corp., holds a news conference in Phoenix to "announce important plans regarding Greyhound Lines."

Dorothy Lorant, Greyhound's vice president for public relations, said Teets would discuss the union's election results and other matters. She declined to elaborate.

The Amalgamated Transit Union, which represents 12,700 Greyhound workers, struck Nov. 2 over a proposed contract calling for a 9.8 percent salary cut. Greyhound said it needed the pay cuts to remain competitive with deregulated airlines and other bus lines.

Rosenblum said the company's argument that many of the drivers would be willing to come back had been rebuffed by the voting.

"They turned down the first contract offer by a margin of 98.3 percent and the 96 percent vote on this offer doesn't show that much erosion," said Rosenblum.

The official tally was 9,522 to 325 against the company offer.

Back in 1983

The year is 1999.
You are a senior in high school and are considering K-State for college. You visit K-State and are taken on a campus tour.

Of course the first thing you notice is the beautiful campus. You are told that back in 1983 they had a beautification project. That's when they planted the 20,000 flowers in the 18 flower beds that you see and the green grass that you're walking on. Neat white chain fences outline several sidewalks. They tell you that back in 1983 they started the uniform sign system which cost an estimated $15,000 to make the campus signs match.

After that you are taken to the K-State Coliseum. They tell you it's 11 years old. They say that back in 1983 they launched a campaign to raise the money and that all the students "chipped in" $16.50 per semester so that students like you could enjoy it in the future.

They take you to KSU Stadium. They tell you that back in 1983 six new 15-ton stadium lights were installed for $415,560 so that more football games could be televised. But they tell you that there have not been any football games this year because Coach Darrell Dickey decided to redshirt the entire team. They say that the slogan for the year is "Lack of Track."

You are also taken through Durland Mall...er, Hall. The building is still impressive even if it was finished back in 1983 costing $7.1 million. The fact that they could use so much space for a lobby amazes you. You think, "nowadays we wouldn't be able to build something like that because we have to save energy and use all the space available." You think, "I guess they had money to burn, back in 1983."

Then you go to Nichols Hall. They say that it was burned out in the 1960s. (Those were the days when your grandfather was at K-State.) They say back in 1983 they began to renovate it at a cost of $6.1 million. It has been finished for 14 years now. They tell you that the Department of Speech got cut from the K-State curriculum so now it only houses the "College of Computer Science."

In the lobby of Nichols you notice a 10-foot tall statue of Mickey Mouse with the inscription, "We just HAD to find SOMETHING to spend the $10,000 on" — Student Senate Nichols

Hall Art Committee."

They take you to Holton Hall. They say that it houses all the student services. They say its renovation was finished nine years ago costing $780,000 and that starting back in 1983, the students all "chipped in" and gave $3 each semester to fund it.

They take you through Anderson Hall, the administrative building for many years. They tell you that University President Lori Leu recently tore out the walnut paneling from her office, paneling which a University president had spent $100,000 on (in 1979.) They couldn't remember the name of that president and just referred to him as "the short one."

They take you past the newest building on campus; the Tom Downing Art Gallery, dedicated to a K-State alumnus who received national attention when directing the play, "Equus," by using elephants instead of horses.

They take you to a few other new buildings. Willard and Weber halls. They tell you that Willard's old roof was nearly blown off by a chemistry experiment shortly after the roof of Weber collapsed. They said that both halls had been somewhere on the priority list, back in 1983.

They take you to the housing department and tell you about K-State housing alternatives. They say you could live in Smith House, but the University is trying to turn it into a "co-operative" tavern because it "just isn't earning enough revenue" for the University. They say that back in 1983 they closed Smith House down but protests made them re-open it.

They tell you that you could live in a greek house. They say that a few are co-ed. They tell you that one "quiet one" is located right next to Harlie's Neighborhood Barbeque.

They say that you could choose to live in the ONE residence hall and that ever since back in 1983 there are unfilled rooms, especially on "Smurthwaite" floor.

They say that you could also live off campus but that you must realize that bicycles are outlawed on campus due to increased problems of cyclists running over pedestrians, which began back in 1983.

And as you walk through the tour of K-State you sense something missing. Suddenly you realize you haven't seen any students; you haven't been told about the educational programs that K-State offers. You decide to ask.

You are told that actually there are very few students attending K-State. In fact, most students are on the basketball and football team (scholarships). They admit that tuition was increased 20 percent each year starting back in 1983 and students finally couldn't afford to come back to school. At the same time, they say, all the education budgets were continuously cut, but now the "volunteer" faculty are having bake sales to buy materials and 1999 is looking up.

They tell you that things started improving after Gov. Jerry Katlin "vetoed" the Board of Regents budget proposal. And now they are hoping for enough students next year so the football players won't have to double as basketball players again.

They explain that, back in 1983, they had their "priority list" and the priority was to build, build, build and rebuild. They say that growth and expansion is where the money must flow...er, go. They say, "our college is as sound as that stone fence over there"...which happened to cost $20,000 back in 1983. Now THAT'S important to the overall University appearance...er, excellence.

They mention to you that there ARE programs in reading, writing and arithmetic but even those "have suffered drastic budget cuts."

But they shake your hand and say, come to Kansas State University. We have the best buildings, the most beautiful campus, a wonderful coliseum...what more could a student want?

The International News Awards

It's that time of year again.

The television networks are in "sweeps month," a time when large ratings mean large amounts of money can be charged for commercial time slots. Ratings points are sought after with gusto. Networks show their best programs — but it seems that the ones you want to watch are all on at the same time.

College football is also in a "sweeps month." The top teams are set to go to bowl games. Awards will be given to the top players in the sport.

But the news doesn't seem to get many awards this time of year. With this in mind, I decided to give awards to people and events which have made the news.

The Blanket Award. This award goes to the Reagan administration, for not allowing the media to be with the Marines when Grenada was invaded.

The Sitting Duck Award. The Marines are awarded again — this time, it's for their participation in keeping peace in Beirut...even if they are stuck between two warring factions.

The Three-Day Beard Award. Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, wins this award, to be shared by the current Collegian editor, for facial growth of hair.

The Mystery Man Award. Yuri Andropov, Soviet premier, can come pick up this award...if he is ever seen again. He hasn't been seen for a while. Rumors are afloat that Andropov had a heart attack, an operation, a kidney transplant or he was shot. Talk about medical problems...

The Foot-in-Mouth Award. No doubt about the winner of this award. James Watt, former secretary of the Interior, wins, even though he has resigned from Reagan's Cabinet. His blubs added something to the news — it made one forget what Reagan was up to.

The Back Brace Award. Gov. John Carlin wins this award, unfortunately, because of a Sept. 29 traffic accident in Washington.

The Lazarus Award. This award goes to Smith House and its alumni, for reviving the scholarship house after it had been closed by the Department of Housing.

The Blood is Cheap Award. Iran and Iraq receive this award for their never ending border war. The Philippines comes in second for its unrest and political murders.

The "Look, Up in the Sky" Award. This award goes to the Soviet Union, for shooting down Korean Air Lines Flight 007 after it had strayed into Soviet air space.

The Royal Jail Award. Willie Wilson, Willie Aikens and Jerry Martin win this award for their part in being arrested and convicted of attempting to purchase cocaine. May major league baseball forever check the rosin bag.

The Wet Your Whistle Award. If it ever opens, Charlie's Neighborhood Bar will receive this award for being close to the north end of campus, despite being less than 200 feet from the Institute of Religion, operated by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The Beat the Bureaucracy Award. Manhattan city officials and Forest City Enterprises win this award for getting a federal grant to build a downtown mall, despite numerous setbacks and legal red tape battles.

The "Here's Tar in Your Eye" Award. This sticky award goes to the New York Yankees, for making such a big deal about 18 inches of pine tar on George Brett's bat after his July 24 home run, which gave the Kansas City Royals a 5-4 lead. After all was said and done, the Royals won the game, 5-4.

The "Reach-Out-and-Pay" Award. This award can go only to Ma Bell...or, more appropriately, Ma Bell and her offspring, for higher phone rates in the near future.

Obviously, a list like this can have future additions. You may even want to add a few of your own.

Now then, what's on the tube tonight?

Arms research at the university

WASHINGTON — When 27 University of Michigan students occupied a campus radiation laboratory two weeks ago, they vowed to remain until the administration ceased its participation in military- and defense-related research. Just 48 hours later, the students ended their vigil voluntarily — and unsuccessfully.

Though the protest may have seemed a throwback to more turbulent times, it had a relevant purpose. Military-related research dollars comprise a growing share of campus research funds. In addition to discomfort about the ends of military research, students and faculty worry that institutions of higher education have adopted the Pentagon as their chief lifeline.

Of course, the Ann Arbor school's refusal to surrender to the "Progressive Student Network" was no surprise. In 1982 alone, the University of Michigan enjoyed more than $4.09 million in contracts with the Department of Defense.

But according to an annual Pentagon report, more than 250 colleges and universities received a total of $1.5 billion in project money last year. Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and Boston's Massachusetts Institute of Technology topped the list by a wide margin, with contracts totaling $235 million and $216 million, respectively. Even small schools such as Ohio's Denison University were on the take ($40,000).

Meanwhile, according to Stanford University President Donald Kennedy, non-defense research dollars, the vast majority of which come from Uncle Sam, have decreased 40 percent since 1968. Kennedy believes that the trend must be reversed for the sake of "hardheaded national interest."

One man's national security is another man's idea of economic shortsightedness. Have we rejiggered our research priorities at the expense of beneficial civilian programs?

A private group, the Scientific Manpower Commission, flashed a warning recently to those who believe the nation's ills can be solved by simply channeling young minds into science and engineering. The group reported that job offers for bachelor of science degree holders fell by one-third in 1983 from the level of the year before. What's more, doctorate holders in science and engineering who teach earn the lowest salaries among their peers.

The current peace between the Reagan administration and environmental groups is only a temporary cease-fire. Activists say they'll take aim in January at Richard Francis, the president's choice to lead the Solar Energy and Conservation Board, created in 1980 to help subsidize solar and energy conservation projects.

"It's the same old story," said Scott Sklar, political director of Solar Lobby, an interest group here. "The president nominates a man who wants to destroy the agency he's been hired to save."

Judy Goldsmith's National Organization for Women has declared an all-out war on the Allstate Insurance Co. Last week, charging that Allstate pays its female employees and agents less than their male counterparts, NOW announced a nationwide boycott of the Sears, Roebuck subsidiary. Picketing has already begun in Indiana.

Last year, NOW blamed defeat on the Equal Rights Amendment on insurance industry opposition and subsequently pledged to pass federal legislation banning sex-based insurance rates.

ARMS SALES UPDATE: Uncle Sam peddled $18.3 billion in weapons to 74 foreign countries and NATO in fiscal year 1983, the Pentagon announced last week. While the '83 tally was less than last year's record-setting level, it is expected to fall short of the 1984 total.

One of the Reagan administration's most reliable customers has been Lebanon, which has bought more than $600 million worth of arms and may soon purchase $150 million more. According to analysts, the Lebanese have made the great majority of their purchases in cash — not with credits, as is the case with most other countries.

RIGHT OF WAY: Everyone has a favorite story about Washington's absurdities. Here's ours: It was 21 years ago that local and federal governments opened Dulles Airport in Virginia, about 25 miles from downtown Washington. It is just this week that a direct road from downtown to the airport is being opened.

While airport customers can use the road at any time of the day, rush-hour commuters must travel in vehicles carrying three or more occupants; single-passenger autos must carry a special $2 orange sticker. A computer at Dulles will monitor vehicles to distinguish commuters from travelers.

The saving grace? Both the Federal Aviation Administration, which owns the airport and the road, and the Virginia Highway Patrol say they lack the manpower to stop errant vehicles.

Despite all the fanfare associated with his latest appointment, Interior Secretary William Clark may have some politicking to do at his new agency. When a visitor to Interior recently asked an employee for the whereabouts of Clark's office, the employee responded, "Secretary Clark? Why don't you try the seventh floor?" Clark's office is on the sixth floor.

The real reason behind poor ticket sales

Editor,
There has been much speculation concerning the sales of group reserved basketball tickets and the Stray Cats concert; specifically, why were the ticket sales so gosh-darned slow? Each function has pointed its finger at the other in turn, each needing someone to blame for their lack of sell-out — and finding only each other. Later, incredulously enough, the beginning of pheasant season was added as a scapegoat.

We have followed these exchanges with some amusement, debating on whether or not we should clue everyone in to the truth. It should be obvious, but it seems those involved haven't opened their eyes quite wide enough. Really folks, how could anyone choose basketball or the Stray Cats over PEE WEE HERMAN at the Uptown in Kansas City?

Ad was misleading

Editor,
On Nov. 21, the Collegian ran a huge ad which stated that it was "sponsored by Joe Cohen, freshman in pre-law and all those who support a free America." This ad was certainly NOT sponsored by "all those who support a free America." The

Transplant patient lives hearty life

MARSEILLE, France — The world's longest surviving heart transplant patient, Emmanuel Vitria, on Monday celebrated the 15th anniversary of his life-saving operation.

"I think I'll die at 100 years of age, shot by a jealous husband," the 62-year-old Vitria told reporters.

The survival rate for transplant patients has gone up recently, with about 30 percent of the patients surviving into their third year. But the average survival rate is only about two to three years, doctors say.

Vitria received his new heart Nov. 28, 1968. The operation was performed at the Salvator Hospital in Marseille by Professor Edmond Henry, who died last year of a heart attack. Vitria goes to the hospital for a checkup twice a month, and rides a bicycle and swims regularly.

"I've become kind of a good luck symbol for the people I visit in hospitals," he said. "It's a task I do willingly."

Beatle's Bentley on bidding block

HOUSTON — George Carrow of Waco was willing to spend $115,000 for a car once owned by the late Beatle John Lennon. But that wasn't enough to satisfy the vehicle's owner.

The object of Carrow's affection is a 1966 Bentley. The owner, Kansas City real estate developer Steve Wells, wants at least $180,000.

"That doesn't bother me none because I'm gonna get that car," Carrow said. "She's really a sight to behold."

The wildly painted purple and pink car, complete with ripped purple leather seats, stained pink shag carpet and soiled paisley print curtain, was put on the auction block Sunday at the Houston Autorama car show.

Carrow will get another shot at the vehicle in January when it goes on the block again in Scottsdale, Ariz. Carrow wants the car to be the showpiece of a restaurant he plans to fill with Beatles memorabilia.

Puppeteering pay proves profitable

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — When Don Devet was a child growing up in Columbia, S.C., he played with puppets like other children.

But Devet didn't stop playing with puppets when he grew up. He became a professional puppeteer.

Devet's Charlotte-based puppet company, Grey Seal Productions, travels all over the country putting on puppet shows. Devet, 35, and his partner Drew Allison, 24, are two of a handful of professional puppeteers in North Carolina and South Carolina.

"I started out like other kids playing with puppets," said Devet, a member of the national Puppeteers of America. "But I didn't give them up when I got older. I discovered they were more than children's toys."

Devet's basement workshop is filled with puppets of all sizes and in various stages of construction. His collection of hand-built puppets now includes 300 characters including Rip Van Winkle, Rumplestiltskin and a host of fairy-tale and folk-tale inhabitants.

Devet and Allison handle all the puppets during a show, which can involve as many as 40 characters, and do the voices for the characters. They don't use scripts, only outlines.

"It's a challenge because we really have to pay attention to what each other is saying," Devet said.

Exiled Pakistani leader to call for democracy

By The Collegian Staff

Hafeez Pirzada, an exiled Pakistani opposition leader, is expected to call for a return to democratic government in his country when he speaks on "The Current Crisis in Pakistan" at 11 a.m. today in the Union Big Eight Room. His remarks will be the only public statement made during a one week visit to the United States.

Pirzada, 48, is a leading member of the People's Party, Pakistan's largest political party which was banned in 1981 by the country's military leader, General Mohammed Zia ul-Haq.

Until his exile a year ago to have heart surgery in the United States, Pirzada had been imprisoned or under house arrest since a military overthrow of former Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto's government, said William Richter, professor of political science and an expert on South Asian political affairs. Pirzada was Bhutto's minister of education and law.

"Pirzada is on the steering committee of the Movement for Restoration of Democracy in Pakistan. The group is a coalition of the defunct political parties. Opposition leaders are striving for an end of military rule in Pakistan, free elections and resumption of the country's 1973 constitution," Richter said.

"If his exile was lifted and free elections returned to Pakistan, I speculate Pirzada would be a leading contender for the office of prime minister. He is immensely popular among the people," Richter said.

The campus visit is sponsored by the Department of Political Science and the South Asia Center.

Scholarship plan may attract 'best' students to education

By College Press Service

To help attract qualified students to the teaching profession, U.S. Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., is lobbying for an educational scholarship fund that would pay students' tuition in return for two years of teaching in public schools after they graduate.

"The concern we're addressing in the bill is that the best and brightest are not looking at the education and teaching fields," a Wyden aide said.

While the bill is still in "the planning stages," the aide said, the idea does have the support of the National Education Association and the American Federation of Teachers.

Both groups are conferring with Wyden's office to nail down details for the proposal, which the congressman plans to introduce when the House reconvenes in January.

"The final legislation might well be different," the aide said, "but it will essentially be a federally funded, state-administered program that would provide scholarships for students who agree to teach for a certain number of years upon graduation."

Wyden's plan calls for as many as 10,000 such scholarships a year, and is expected to receive general support from the Reagan administration as well as other teachers' associations and education groups.

'Doll mania' crosses nation

By The Associated Press

Stores tried Monday to keep crowds at bay after thousands of people knocked over displays and each other on the first weekend of the holiday season while trying to buy "Cabbage Patch Kids," the cuddly dolls with computer-designed faces.

A Toyland department store manager in Frederick, Md., handed out numbered cards before the store opened, and six police officers with a bullhorn kept order in a crowd of 200 shoppers waiting to buy the dolls Monday in Hagerstown, Md.

In Star City, W.Va., the Hills department store let shoppers inside only in manageable groups of 10, even though some had waited since 3 a.m. All 120 dolls were bought in 30 minutes.

An estimated 5,000 shoppers had mobbed a Hills store in Charleston, W.Va., the day before.

"They knocked over tables, they were fighting with each other — there were people in mid-air," said manager Scott Belcher. Grown men snatched dolls from the hands of little boys and women and children were knocked to the floor.

As the magnitude of the demand for the Cabbage Patch dolls became clear, buyers and sellers alike began trying to think of ways to avoid the pandemonium that prompted police to come out Sunday in Concord, N.H., and Milwaukee.

The Rowe-Manse Emporium in Clifton, N.J., a specialty department store, is serving as a broker between people who have the dolls and those who are desperately trying to buy them. Olga Vapner, manager of the store, said Rowe-Manse is buying the dolls for $40, roughly twice the going price, and selling them for $50.

"They are becoming collector's items," said Vapner.

All the fuss is over 16-inch dolls that have yarn hair and outstretched arms and come with birth certificates, adoption papers, disposable diapers and detailed fingers and toes. Computer-designed features give each doll a unique appearance.

"It is a great, great gimmick; even if your neighbor has that doll, yours is different," said Barbara Wruck, spokeswoman for the distributor, Coleco Industries Inc. of West Hartford, Conn.

Coleco has stepped up production and expects to ship 2.5 million of the dolls by year's end, said Wruck.

The dolls are derived from hand-made dolls that Xavier Roberts began making in 1977. Roberts' dolls are still on sale in some stores, but they sell for up to $250. Roberts approached Coleco in 1982 to help make and market the dolls and expand the product line.

Lafayette Watkins is comfortable coming off the bench and he may provide added depth to the men's basketball team.

Watkins accepts bench role to provide depth, scoring

By TIM FILBY
Collegian Reporter

Junior forward Lafayette Watkins returns to the K-State basketball team as the squad's most experienced player.

Watkins came to K-State a highly recruited player from Julian Percy High in Chicago. Two years ago, Watkins showed flashes of brilliance as he was named K-State's freshman of the year in 1982.

However, Watkins suffered through a disappointing 1982-83 season, averaging 4.6 points and three rebounds per game. This year, as K-State's only returning two-year letterman, Watkins is expected to be one of the team's leading players.

Although Watkins is the most experienced member of the team as a junior, he said he doesn't feel like a team leader.

"Everybody on the team this year is in charge," he said. "Everyone has been here for a while and knows the system pretty well so there should be a balance of leadership."

This season Watkins looks to come off the bench to provide the team with some scoring punch.

"Lafayette is very offensive minded," Jack Hartman, head coach, said. "He is very aggressive when he gets the ball and we will definitely need him to do a lot of scoring for us this season."

Watkins said he is comfortable in this role.

"I feel confident coming off the bench," he said. "I'll do whatever I can to help the team. If the opportunity comes, I'll score more this year."

Although Watkins is comfortable with his role off the bench, he still is working for a starting spot.

"My defense is what has kept me from starting. It is the weakest part of my game," he said. "But I've really worked on it, so it should be improved."

When Watkins first came to K-State he tried to convert to a guard from his natural forward position. However, this season Watkins anticipates filling in at the forward spot.

"I feel a lot more comfortable playing forward than I do playing guard. We have enough guards this year so I'm glad I can move back to forward again."

Watkins said although he feels optimistic before every season, he feels good about this year's team.

"We are much more aware of each other on the court this year than we were last year," he said. "We've really been working hard on our games and the chemistry is a lot better for this team."

Watkins said he disagrees with polls that pick the Wildcats as low as last in the Big Eight Conference this season.

"The polls I've seen show us seventh or eighth but I consider us as one of the top teams in the conference," he said. "I think we have the ability to go inside with bigger teams and we have better shooting."

Watkins said the addition of juco transfers Eric Watson and Tom Alfaro should give the team a big boost.

"With Eric playing guard and Tom at forward, they are going to be a big factor in us winning this year," Watkins said. "As a team we're good shooters and Watson and Alfaro have helped us a lot."

"Toward the end of last year, we started playing well and we plan to start that way this year," Watkins said of the upcoming season. "I think we'll be a better team than we were last year. We have a lot more experience this year which should help us to be better."

Chicago memories lift Kings' forward

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Eddie Johnson has come a long way from the wrong part of Chicago, and it is West Side memories that are pushing him higher.

Johnson, small forward for the Kansas City Kings, watched as an older brother died after getting tangled up with drugs, and a second brother with basketball talent washed out of college. He was determined it wouldn't happen to him.

He followed a straight path from Chicago's Westinghouse High, where he played with Dallas' Mark Aguirre, to the University of Illinois to the National Basketball Association.

Johnson started this NBA season — his third — with 40 points against Seattle, and followed up with 39 against Golden State. His play and 30-point average have been the bright spot as the Kings have struggled.

"But I know I couldn't have done all this without my brothers," said Johnson, who drives home to the suburbs in a Mercedes. "I don't think I would have had the motivation to get where I am without living in a city, in a poor atmosphere."

Eddie Johnson idolized older brother Phillip, who helped protect him on the streets. Phillip died of a brain hemorrhage while Eddie was away at Illinois.

"Without him, I wouldn't have grown up without getting hurt," Eddie said of Phillip. "I saw him in gangs and messed up with drugs, and I knew it wasn't good. That's why I stayed away from those things."

The other brother, Michael, was also a pretty good basketball player, and was rated one of the top Southwest Conference newcomers after his first year at Texas A&M.

He ran into grade trouble, dropped off the team and transferred to a junior college in Texas. He wound up at Grambling, but couldn't get along with the coach. Michael Johnson now plays for the Washington Generals, the team that serves as the foil for the Harlem Globetrotters.

"I learned from Michael," said Eddie Johnson. "He depended on coaches to help him get grades. He wanted help from everybody. He didn't want to do it by himself. It's not that he's lazy — he just didn't know any better."

Johnson learned the lessons, and was taken in the second-round draft by the Kings in 1981. Kansas City thinks it got a steal in a player others considered too small to play power forward and too slow to play small forward.

Silzer places 32nd, misses national honor

By TIM FILBY
Collegian Reporter

Competing against some of the top runners in the country might inspire a sense of awe for some, but for K-Stater Betsy Silzer, a 32nd place finish at the NCAA cross country national championship meet left her a bit disappointed.

"I didn't run a good race," Silzer said. "Some girls that I've been beating all year finished ahead of me in this race. I think I could have done better."

Silzer, a sophomore, narrowly missed being tabbed an All-American in the race, held in Lehigh, Pa., Saturday. To be chosen an All-American Silzer needed to be among the top 25 American finishers. Silzer placed 26th, one-tenth of a second behind the 25th finisher.

"We were both depressed about her missing out on being an All-American," Steve Miller, cross country coach, said. "Aside from that, though, the meet was a positive experience for her. When you stop and think that she placed 32nd in the nation, that's quite an accomplishment."

Miller said he figured Silzer could place in the top 25 in the race so her finish was near where he expected it to be.

Being in a big meet with so many competitors might have contributed to her below-par race, Silzer said, but she didn't think nerves were a big factor.

"I was nervous for the meet but I was just as nervous for regionals and I did OK there. I was happy to get to the nationals coming out of a district as tough as ours was."

Silzer qualified for the nationals after placing third in the District V meet Nov. 12 at Ames, Iowa.

Although the runners at the meet were college's best, Silzer wasn't awe-struck with their talent.

"The runners were good, but I think I can compete with them," Silzer said. "I wasn't really impressed."

Silzer said the course used for the meet was easy, which would favor quick runners.

"The course was flat and the weather was nice. It wasn't hard," Silzer said. "Difficult courses suit me better but I'm not sure if that's the style I like best."

Miller said Silzer was one of the top underclassmen finishers in the race, which means she is a force to be reckoned with in the future at national meets.

"I'm looking forward to years to come," Silzer said. "I hope someday I might be able to be among the best."

Redskins, Riggins clinch playoff spot

By The Associated Press

The defending Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins had just clinched an NFL playoff berth, and fullback John Riggins sought to be gracious about the vanquished.

"Philadelphia's not as bad a team as everybody gives them credit for," Riggins said. "If anybody needs an affidavit that they came to play, I would be the first one to sign it."

Riggins scored two touchdowns, and Joe Theismann threw a pair of touchdown passes Sunday to give the Redskins a 28-24 victory over Philadelphia in a game that caused Theismann to rue his choice of footwear.

By halftime, the score was 28-21, and the Washington quarterback was reminded of a 48-47 loss to the Green Bay Packers seven weeks ago.

"I thought it was going to be a Green Bay Packer shootout," Theismann said. "I didn't bring my roller skates, so I was glad it didn't go that way. We have three games left. If we lose one, we lose everything we've worked for."

Philadelphia could manage only a 52-yard Tony Franklin field goal in the second half while holding Washington scoreless, and Theismann didn't need the wheels.

The Redskins, who have won seven straight, and the Dallas Cowboys both have 11-2 records and are the only two teams with a chance to win the NFC East. Dallas beat St. Louis 35-17 on Thanksgiving Day.

The team that fails to win the division will get the NFC wild-card berth, so the only thing left at stake is the home-field advantage, which the Redskins used to beat Miami 27-17 in Super Bowl XVII. Dallas won the first meeting this year of the two teams, and they play again in two weeks.

Riggins gained 99 yards for 1,049 on the season. His two TDs gave him 21 for the season, breaking the NFL record of 19 he shared with Jim Taylor, Chuck Muncie, Eric Dickerson and Earl Campbell.

The Los Angeles Raiders, meanwhile, trimmed their magic number to one for clinching the American Conference West. With a 27-12 victory over the New York Giants, the 10-3 Raiders could have clinched if Seattle had lost to Kansas City.

But, in the third highest-scoring game in NFL history, the Seahawks defeated the Chiefs 51-48 in overtime and upped their record to 7-6, three games back of the Raiders with three games to play. Denver also was 7-6 after losing to San Diego, 31-7, but only the Seahawks — by virtue of their two victories over the Raiders — stood to profit by a tie since head-to-head competition is the first division tiebreaker. Denver lost to the Raiders twice this season.

In the NFC West, the Los Angeles Rams broke a first-place tie with San Francisco by beating Buffalo 41-17 while the 49ers were beaten by Chicago 13-3.

Minnesota lost 17-16 to New Orleans and dropped into a first-place tie in the NFC Central with Detroit, both teams at 7-6. Green Bay failed to take advantage of the Vikings' loss, losing 47-41 in overtime to Atlanta, and the Packers stood one game back at 6-7.

Cleveland, 8-5, moved within one game of Pittsburgh in the AFC Central with a 41-23 victory over Baltimore. The Steelers lost to Detroit, 45-3, on Thanksgiving Day.

U.S. investor finds success with Salvadoran export firm

By The Associated Press

SANTA TECLA, El Salvador — At 6 feet 7 inches, American businessman Phil Hand is a big presence in this small, war-torn land, and not just because of his height.

Dozens of other Americans conducting business here and many well-to-do Salvadorans abandoned El Salvador when leftist rebels and rightist death squads intensified their campaigns of urban terrorism in 1980.

The 36-year-old Hand decided to stay despite the civil war. In 1981, he invested much of his savings in a small canned food company and took over as its manager.

"People think I'm a crazy gringo for investing in El Salvador. My American and Salvadoran friends questioned my judgment," he said, smiling. "But I had a lot of faith that in the long run the Salvadorans would solve their problems."

In 1982 the Committee of Salvadoran Exporters recognized Hand's efforts by naming him exporter of the year, the first foreigner so honored.

Hand, originally from the San Francisco Bay area, arrived in El Salvador in 1975 as an accountant with a British tobacco company after having spent five years with the firm in Honduras.

Once here, he fell in love with the country's beaches and lakes, its year-round warm weather and, most of all, its "pleasant, hard-working" people. Knowing the tobacco company would transfer him one day, he began looking for a way to stay.

The opportunity came in January 1981 when he and a Salvadoran business associate bought a small canning plant, renamed it Bon Appetit and expanded production.

Besides meeting local demand for specialty items no longer imported because of lack of dollars, the company also began exporting palm hearts, baby corn, ketchup and other products. Most of the exports go to the United States.

"It was the right moment to do it. I'm a firm believer that every problem presents opportunities. You just have to find them," Hand said.

But Hand admitted there are times when he has doubts.

"At times I ask myself what I'm doing here — wouldn't it be easier to be accountant for General Motors in the States?"

Those thoughts usually come after his plant has been shut down all day by a power blackout or when he's having difficulty getting the dollars needed to import bottles and cans.

Guerrilla attacks on the nation's power grid are part of the rebels' campaign to sabotage the economy. The country is also strapped for foreign exchange to finance imports.

Bon Appetit's gross sales this year will be around $800,000, twice last year's figure, but the net profit after three years is less than $5,000.

"What I'd like to do is get it into a nice, medium-sized, well-managed company. I don't have plans to be super-rich. I enjoy what I'm doing right now. I'd just like to be able to live off it," he said.

Hand, with a neatly trimmed beard and thinning, sandy-colored hair, has a lean, athletic build. He keeps in shape by playing in an industrial basketball league.

His participation in the league is a sign of the close involvement with the Salvadoran people that sets him apart from other foreign businessmen. Another sign is his marriage in October to a Salvadoran.

"I thought by staying around I would encourage Salvadorans to stay," he said.

He also takes pride in his company's small contribution to improving the war-wrecked economy.

"It gives me great satisfaction that we've got 35 to 50 people working — there's so much unemployment here," he said.

Hand has never been the target of any threats and only twice has he had run-ins with the leftist guerrillas who have been fighting for four years to overthrow the U.S.-backed conservative government.

Both times occurred at roadblocks outside the capital. Both times he made a "contribution" to the rebel cause and was allowed to pass.

"I don't take a fatalistic attitude, but at the same time you have to maintain a certain faith that things will work out for the best," he said.

For Hand, that faith means going out to dinner at night without looking over his shoulder to see who's following him. It means carrying no gun and not using an armored car.

Bill may ban 'unfair' tax method

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — An interim legislative committee on Monday refrained from recommending action on a bill filed by state Sen. Dan Thiessen. The bill would bar the Department of Revenue from using trending factors to determine the fair market value of business equipment for property tax purposes.

Thiessen, R-Independence, told the Special Committee on Assessment and Taxation the trending factors were being used by revenue officials as a way to "force property classification through the Legislature" and it should be stopped.

Harley Duncan, secretary of the Department of Revenue, said Thiessen's claim about ulterior motives related to the classification proposal were false and said his department was simply carrying out its "statutory responsibility."

"No, it's not true," Duncan said. "There is a clear statutory mandate for us to provide guidelines for determining the fair market value of business machinery and property and that's what we're doing."

Thiessen said the trending factor method used in figuring the property tax a business must pay is unfair and inequitable. For that reason he introduced a bill that would abolish the trending factors.

"I introduced this bill because of the effect this kind of valuation will have on industries in this state," Thiessen said. "We have to keep our property taxes in line with other states. That's why my bill says they cannot use trending factors."

"I think the use of (trending factors) is just a drive to force classification through the Legislature. I think that is what's behind it."

However, the committee didn't feel it had enough time or information on the bill to make any recommendation to the 1984 Legislature and opted to encourage further study of the issue in upcoming months.

Some lawmakers advocate a change in the Kansas Constitution to allow the classification of property for tax purposes. The change would allow different classes of property to be taxed at different rates.

Currently, property must be taxed on a uniform and equal basis at 30 percent of its fair market value. However, most lawmakers concede that inequities have developed and not all property is assessed at the 30 percent rate. In fact, most agree that residential property is valued at about 8 percent of its fair market value and agricultural land at 4-5 percent.

It's been two decades since the last time real estate was appraised statewide and the values updated. Gov. John Carlin has warned that statewide reappraisal, without a change in the constitution to allow classification, will cause massive tax shifts and property tax increases because the taxes on residential and agricultural property will be jumped to the 30 percent level — equal to rates charged to commercial and industrial property.

"The trending factor system is unfair because it doesn't come up with the fair market value," Thiessen said. "Sometimes it comes up with values that are way too high."

Thiessen warned that various businesses and industries have already voiced their strong displeasure at the new system for determining the value of business machinery and some companies are considering abandoning their Kansas operations and moving to states with more lenient tax policies.

"We know of several companies that won't be here very long if we keep this kind of tax," Thiessen said. "It's causing huge tax increases for some companies, increases that rock an industry. And it raises a question of whether they will stay in Kansas."

The Board of Tax Appeals has ruled that the trending factors ensure uniformity and equality in determining property taxes. And other testimony before the committee showed that more equipment was being taxed than in the past.

"In the past we've penalized the honest person to the benefit of the dishonest," said Sen. Paul "Bud" Burke, R-Leawood. "This method turns up equipment that was not reported before and I think that is meritorious."

Fewer foreign students enroll in U.S.

By College Press Service

For the first time in a decade, foreign student enrollment on American campuses has leveled off, the Institute of International Education reported.

Some observers attribute the population change to political adventurism in Iran and Libya.

For the last 10 years, foreign student enrollment here has been growing at least 10 percent a year. The growth rate in some years went as high as 16 percent.

But new figures indicate foreign student enrollment grew by a mere 3.3 percent in the 1982-83 school year.

"I think (the foreign student population) is basically peaking because of the decrease in (the number of) Iranian students," observes Alfred Jullian, research associate for the IIE's just-released

Iran, Libya share decline

"Open Doors" survey of enrollment.

The Iranian student population — still the largest contingent of foreign students from any one foreign country — has dropped from a high of 51,310 in the 1979-80 school year to only 26,760 in 1982-83.

"The Libyan student population has also declined by 26.9 percent," Jullian said, "from 2,900 for the previous school year to 2,120 for 1982-83."

"I think probably political upheaval in Libya and Iran could account for some of the decline in students from those two countries," he said.

"In the case of Iranian students, for the last couple of years it has been difficult for them to get exit permits (from the Iranian government), and then they had to go to a third country to get U.S. visas because there is no U.S. embassy in Iran," said Georgia Stewart of the National Association of Foreign Student Advisers in Washington, D.C.

But more Iranians may come to American campuses in the next few years, she said. The Iranian government "may be lifting some of its restrictions on exit permits. I've heard from a number of institutions who have noted increases in the number of applications from Iranian students."

While the number of Iranian and Libyan students decreased last year, however, more foreign students are coming from Europe, Asia and South America, the survey said.

The increase in South American students is due mainly to an influx of Venezuelan students, Jullian said. The number of students from that country rose by 11 percent, he said, because of the country's oil exporting profits.

A rise in the number of foreign students from Malaysia, Jullian notes, helped increase the Asian student enrollment on U.S. campuses. There were also smaller increases in the number of Korean and Chinese students coming here.

"We know there is a trend of increases from the Asian countries in the last two or three years," said Stewart. "With the Malaysian students, we had an awfully big increase when the British government raised tuition for foreign students."

Columbia lifts off despite weather in first flight with non-American

By The Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Columbia blasted into orbit Monday carrying six astronauts who quickly put the $1 billion Spacelab to work, beginning one of the most ambitious scientific expeditions ever undertaken — nine days of non-stop experiments that will study the heavens, the Earth and man himself.

Astronauts Owen K. Garriott and Byron Lichtenberg started turning on equipment in the 23-foot-long Spacelab, in the cargo bay of Columbia, just three hours after they and four crewmates were launched from the Kennedy Space Center.

The launch was precisely on time, 11 a.m. EST, despite a looming weather front that threatened a two-day delay. Columbia carried into space the largest crew ever — six astronauts — and was the first U.S. launch to include a non-American, West German Ulf Merbold.

Mission commander John Young, 53-year-old veteran making his a record sixth flight, sounded like a rookie as Columbia orbited 155 miles above the Earth.

"It is so neat up here," he said. "It is really something." Earlier he noted: "Things don't change any."

"It's a beautiful flying machine," radioed pilot Brewster H. Shaw Jr., 38, who was making his first flight. "It's really some ride. It's the smoothest way to go you ever saw."

The crew had a bit of trouble opening the hatch that covers the tunnel from Columbia's cabin to Spacelab. NASA beamed down TV pictures that showed the astronauts tugging and yanking to no avail for several minutes, until finally they freed a recalcitrant latch and the hatch swung free.

Then Garriott, Lichtenberg and Merbold floated through the 19-foot tunnel and made a joint entry into Spacelab, smiling broadly and shaking hands all around. They turned on the lights and quickly set to work activating the experiments. Young also paid a brief visit before returning to the cabin.

"Welcome to Spacelab," capsule communicator Franklin Chang told them.

Young and Shaw will fly Columbia, performing some 192 maneuvers, while Garriott, 53, Lichtenberg, 35, Merbold, 42, and Robert A. R. Parker, 46, operate more than 70 experiments designed by scientists from 14 countries.

Powerful telescopes and sensors will probe the life and death of distant stars and gauge the energy exploding from the Earth's own star, the sun.

Other sensors and cameras will focus on the Earth, mapping the land surface and electronically sniffing the planet's atmosphere and gauging its magnetic fields.

A keen-eyed German camera, capable of capturing views with a resolution of 32 feet, will take pictures not before possible, while a radar sensor will penetrate clouds to probe the surface.

Sixteen experiments will study how life forms from Earth, including man himself, react to the weightless environment of space. Included are investigations into the space sickness phenomena that has affected nearly half of the 26 shuttle astronauts. The tests include the response of human blood cells and of the immune system to zero gravity. The astronauts will take and analyze blood samples throughout the mission.

There also will be studies on the growth in space of sunflower seedlings, a fungus and four types of microbes.

Exotic metal mixes will be melted and crystals will be grown in three Spacelab furnaces. These are experiments that scientists hope will determine the practicality of orbiting factories that could produce products not possible in the gravity of Earth.

Spacelab was designed and built by the European Space Agency at a cost of about $1 billion. It is a 23-foot by 14-foot chamber housed in Columbia's cargo bay that the astronauts enter from the space cabin by moving through a 19-foot tunnel.

Merbold and Lichtenberg are the first of a new breed of astronauts — the mission specialists. They are not career astronauts, but are scientists who were trained to operate the science instruments on this mission. Merbold, who fled his native village in East Germany to become a scientist in West Germany, was selected for the mission by the ESA.

The mission is the first for Columbia in a year. The craft was renovated for the Spacelab mission, with the laboratory installed in the cargo bay and equipment to accommodate the large crew installed in the cabin.

Spacelab 1 is a cooperative mission by the United States and the 10 nations that make up the European Space Agency. ESA gave the Spacelab to NASA and is sponsoring half the experiments. Other experiments are from scientists in Canada, Japan and the United States.

The mission will fly over parts of the Earth not seen from previous shuttle flights. The launch carried Columbia north, parallel to the U.S. East Coast, and then over Northern Europe. Its orbital path will cover points farther north and south than previous missions, giving the astronauts views of all of South America, Africa, Australia, all of the United States except Alaska, and most of Europe, Asia and the Soviet Union.

Gift Certificates are now available for the holiday season and are usable in many different combinations.

The Most Sophisticated Training Ground For Nuclear Engineering Isn't On The Ground.

It's on a Navy ship.

The Navy has more than 1,900 reactor-years of nuclear power experience — more than anyone else in America. The Navy has the most sophisticated nuclear equipment in the world. And the Navy operates over half of the nuclear reactors in America.

With a nuclear program like that, you know the Navy also offers the most comprehensive and sophisticated nuclear training.

Every officer in the Nuclear Navy completes a full year of graduate level technical training. Outside the Navy, this kind of program would cost you thousands. In the Navy, you're paid while you learn.

Then, as a nuclear-trained officer, you supervise highly trained personnel in the operation of the most advanced nuclear propulsion plants ever developed. You get a level of technical and management experience unequalled anywhere else.

You get important responsibilities and you get them fast. Because in the Navy, as your knowledge grows, so do your responsibilities.

Today's Nuclear Navy is one of the most challenging and rewarding career choices a man can make. And that choice can pay off while you're still in school. Qualified juniors and seniors earn approximately $1,000 per month while they finish school.

As a nuclear-trained officer, after 4 years with regular promotions and pay increases, you can be earning as much as $40,500. That's on top of a full benefits package that includes medical and dental care, and 30 days' vacation earned each year.

As a nuclear-trained officer, you also earn a place among this nation's most qualified and respected professionals. So, if you're majoring in math, engineering or the physical sciences, send in the coupon. Find out more about the most sophisticated training ground for nuclear engineering. Today's Nuclear Navy.

Reagan signs dairy cutback legislation

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, consigning his free-market philosophy to a back seat, late Tuesday signed legislation that for the first time will give dairy farmers government checks not to produce milk, the White House announced.

The signing came just two hours after the president met with a small bipartisan group of House and Senate members who lobbied for the bill, saying it was far preferable to the current failed dairy policy that has led to huge government stockpiles of surplus milk products.

Reagan signed the bill despite warnings that he might appear to be bowing to dairy interests and contradicting his stated preference for free-market solutions to economic problems.

Other critics have warned the 15-month dairy program could further escalate the cost of farm programs, which reached a record $22 billion this year. And they said with no ceiling on the amount dairy farmers can be paid, a few large producers could get individual government checks of up to $4.5 million.

Jesse Helms, R-N.C., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, said the president was faced with "a choice between this bill, and something worse." Helms contended the dairy legislation, which also contains tobacco provisions, would save taxpayers more than $1 billion compared to current law.

The new law, which goes into effect in January, is an attempt to slow the overproduction of the nation's dairy farmers. That has led to massive stockpiles of government-owned cheese, butter and dried milk. Government purchases, made to prop milk prices to their guaranteed minimum levels, cost more than $2.6 billion this year.

Current law, which has failed to cut surpluses, assesses farmers $1 for every hundred pounds of milk they produce. It also would have called for a $1 increase in the guaranteed minimum price next year.

Under the new law, that assessment would drop to 50 cents per hundred pounds, the equivalent of about 12.5 gallons. The price support level also would be trimmed by 50 cents, to $12.60 per hundred pounds.

Center helps children overcome difficulties

By CATHY KARLIN
Features Editor

(This is the first of a three-part series about the programs and services offered to the developmentally disabled by Big Lakes Developmental Center.)

A tire swing casts shadows on the playground turf, crowded with sand piles, two cement tunnels and a jungle gym. In the nearby building, there were toys, books and short-legged tables and chairs just right for children. At first glance, there was nothing special about this child care center — except for the children.

The children who come to this center are part of the developmentally disabled community served by Big Lakes Developmental Center. The children's disabilities are not given labels, but are called delays — in areas such as emotional, physical, cognitive and social development.

Located in Junction City, this child care center is the largest of three such centers belonging to Big Lakes Developmental Center. Big Lakes is a private, non-profit agency which serves the developmentally disabled in Riley, Geary, Clay and Pottawatomie counties from its base in Manhattan. The agency is supported by county, state and federal funds.

For adults, ages 16 and older, Big Lakes offers work training, job readiness and residential living programs. For children from birth to seven years old, the agency provides evaluation and developmental services at its Child Developmental Centers, which are called preschools.

"Our biggest goal is to provide early stimulation in hopes that the child can be mainstreamed into regular classes," Norene Sylvester, center supervisor and program coordinator, said.

Lori Bladow, graduate in family and child development, works at the Junction City preschool every weekday morning. Bladow, who also works with children at the Hoeflin Stone House Child Care Center in Manhattan, explained the differences between the two centers.

"The biggest difference between working with non-handicapped and handicapped children is that you have to be really responsive to their (disabled children's) needs," she said.

"You need to be a lot more rewarding for even really little things, like even when they put their own shoes on. You have to let them know you realized it was hard and it was good they did that."

The children at the Big Lakes preschool have a much wider range of abilities than at the Stone House, she said.

Another difference Bladow noted was that at Big Lakes, children work on individual goals rather than learning as a group.

Each child who attends Big Lakes preschools are observed and evaluated during his or her first 30 days at the center. Each child is then assessed in the areas of cognitive, self-help, social-emotional, communication and sensory-motor development. At a meeting with Big Lakes staff, the child's parents, therapists and any involved friend or relative set goals for the child's development by establishing his or her Individual Program Plan.

The child then works at the goals on a daily basis at the center and at home. A monthly criteria check determines if the goals are being met. After six months, the child's progress is assessed and evaluated, and then a new IPP is created.

"A lot of parents come in knowing something is wrong with their child. After the first IPP, they know more specifics. We can tell them specific areas to work on," Sylvester said.

"The first IPP can be hard on the parents, because it just shows where the child is at. At the second or third IPP, they can see some progress, which is a lot more encouraging," she explained.

Parents are welcome to volunteer at the center and to visit with the preschool teachers any time, Sylvester said. Parent-comment forms are sent out monthly as another way parents can communicate their concerns or questions to Big Lakes.

"Most of all we encourage consistency, that the children do the same types of things here and at home. If the child can do it here, he can do it at home too — such as putting away his toys," Sylvester said.

Terry Thompson of Fort Riley has been bringing his daughter Tiana to the Junction City preschool for the past two years.

"She loves it. She learns coordination, how to work with other kids, and a lot of words. The people here work with you and set certain goals you work with at home and here," Thompson said.

In addition to the three full-time Big Lakes staff members and occasional student help, a speech therapist and occupational therapist offer services to clients twice a week. Walkers, parallel bars and other adaptive equipment, such as a corner chair, which helps a child sit up straight, are provided by the center.

Though Sylvester admitted that at times, working with disabled children "gets harder because I'd like to see more progress," she said she never suffers from job "burnout."

"A big thing is having fun with the children, seeing each as an individual and not seeing what they're not doing, but seeing what they are doing," she said.

Wolf Creek customers face drastic rate hike

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Customers of Kansas Gas and Electric Co. should brace for "one of the worst rate shocks in the nation" because of the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant, a member of the Kansas Corporation Commission warned Tuesday.

Commissioner Phillip Dick said potential rate increases in the future from Wolf Creek will be among the highest experienced by any utility in the country. Those increases will be particularly sharp for customers of KG&E because the company is relatively small compared with other electric utilities owning nuclear power plants.

"KG&E is going to have one of the worst rate shocks in the nation because it is such a small utility," Dick told the KCC's Consumer Information Board, a group of citizens which provide consumer input and education in the regulatory process.

Dick did not speculate how much rates could increase because of Wolf Creek, but it was noted that other nuclear power plants across the country have resulted in rate increases of more than 40 percent.

In a related development, the KCC said it was soliciting bids from consulting firms to do a three-part analysis of Wolf Creek in preparation for expected rate cases involving the nuclear power plant. The project is to cost $974,000, and should begin early next year. It will track cost overruns at the plant, determine their causes, and investigate the need for the plant's generating capacity and develop costs for decommissioning the facility.

"This is really our first concrete step moving toward a rate request," said Tom Taylor, a KCC spokesman. "We'll need that information for our staff to develop its recommendations in a rate case on what should or shouldn't be allowed."

Wolf Creek is under construction near Burlington in east-central Kansas, and is about 90 percent complete. It is expected to begin operation commercially in the spring of 1985, possibly by February 1985. The plant is projected to cost $2.67 billion.

Dick, who is viewed as the most conservative of the three members of the KCC, also said he expects a rate increase request stemming from Wolf Creek to be filed soon with the commission.

Under state law, a utility can charge customers for the costs of building a power plant one year before the facility begins operation. Dick noted that could mean a rate increase for "construction work in progress" at Wolf Creek during the spring of 1984. Still, Dick cautioned that he had no information from the plant owners that any such rate increase will be filed with the KCC.

KCPL serves nearly 125,000 customers in Kansas and 222,000 in Missouri.

Pakistani speaker calls for democracy

By KAREN BELLUS
Collegian Reporter

Hafeez Pirzada, former education minister and law minister of Pakistan, called for a return of democracy in Pakistan and restoration of "fundamental and natural rights" to the people of that country during a speech Tuesday before approximately 30 people in the Union Big Eight Room.

Pirzada, 48, was a minister for Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto and a leading member of the People's Party, Pakistan's largest political party. In 1977, the Bhutto government was overthrown by a military coup led by General Mohammed Zia ul-Huq, and in 1981, all political parties were banned under Zia's rule.

Under this military regime, Bhutto was executed, all political parties were declared outlawed, thousands of civilians were imprisoned, military courts were established, the government gained control of the media and institutional corruption became widespread, Pirzada said.

Pirzada was imprisoned for several years before he was allowed to leave the country to undergo heart surgery in the United States. He is now living in exile in the United Kingdom.

"Their (Pakistan's) only hope for the future is that someone will speak out on their behalf. We deem it our duty to bring the situation to the attention of the American people. Jails hold no horrors for us now. If it would serve any purpose, I would go back," he said.

Pirzada said he believes the only stable government for Pakistan is a democratic one. He said the current military regime is not right for the country.

"Only with the return of democracy can Pakistan find stability, peace and tranquility. It is my belief that a democratic government supported by its people is much stronger than a narrow-based, unpopular military regime."

The present military regime has increased defense spending from $900 million to $3.5 billion since 1977, Pirzada said.

"This is more than the total revenue for the country. Over 70 percent of the budget is spent on hardware and there is hardly anything left for developmental programs in the country," he said.

Pirzada said one of the reasons the regime has lasted so long is because Pakistan has been fortunate regarding recent agricultural harvests and weather conditions, thus easing the economic conditions that could stir discontent.

However, there is rising opposition within Pakistan to the military regime and the oppressed conditions of the people. Women, who under Zia's regime have been excluded from any social or political activity, along with intellectuals and laborers, are opposing the government. More than 200 Pakistani lawyers recently participated in a hunger strike to protest policies under the regime.

"The agitation (against the regime) has not been crushed. Temporarily, it has been controlled by the sheer weight of numbers and strength of the army. There is a new quality of opposition in which the people are no longer taking to the streets to directly confront the army. They are showing their dissatisfaction in other ways," he said, with hunger strikes and demonstrations.

Pirzada said the only hope for restoration of democracy in Pakistan is for world organizations and countries to exert moral pressure and condemn the military government.

Supreme Court OKs execution

By The Associated Press

STARKE, Fla. — The U.S. Supreme Court and a federal appeals panel refused Tuesday to spare the life of convicted murderer Robert Sullivan, clearing the way for his execution this morning.

The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals first vacated a stay of execution that had been issued on Monday, and the case went to the high court, which refused to issue a stay on Tuesday evening. It was the third time the Supreme Court had rejected his case.

Acker says enrollment warrants aid increase

By DEE ANNE THOMAS
News Editor

The University has requested a $483,000 appropriation from the 1984 Kansas Legislature as part of its reaction to fiscal recommendations made recently by Gov. John Carlin's budget staff, said President Duane Acker at a press conference Tuesday.

The funds would be used this fiscal year to replace fee income lost due to a decrease in enrollment. They would be used for faculty salaries and to purchase equipment and supplies.

Acker said the Kansas Board of Regents has already decided on the budget it will request from the Legislature for operations of the regents schools, and currently the governor is in the process of establishing his budget proposals. As part of this process, his budget staff has made recommendations to him. It is these recommendations to which the University has reacted.

"The 1983 Legislature established expenditure totals for K-State (for this fiscal year), and they were composed of two parts, tax money from the (state) general fund and student fee income," Acker said. "It has been traditional in the University system that the Legislature carries some of that responsibility (to supply monies needed for the University to operate). We have emphasized this to the governor and his staff."

Since the appropriation would be approximately 17 percent of the University's budget for this year, Acker said there would be a reduction of personnel or operating funds next semester if the funds are not granted.

"We would not lay off those who are already employed," he said. He said positions would be held open instead.

In its reaction to the governor's staff's recommendations, the University has also emphasized the need for a 7 percent increase in faculty salaries. The governor's staff has recommended a 5 percent increase, Acker said.

The University's proposed budget for the 1984 fiscal year emphasizes other operating expenses (OOE), rather than personnel, more strongly than in recent years, Acker said. "Over the years we've supported, and the Legislature has respected, the need for increases in faculty salaries," Acker said. He said fringe benefit payments for employees and the University's contribution to Social Security has also increased recently.

"We've tried to put emphasis on OOE and hold steady on personnel requests," he said.

Acker said Carlin will make his final budget recommendations to the Legislature in January near the beginning of the spring semester.

Acker also announced that the University's inclement weather policy is that "classes will be held and offices will be open."

"It's an exceedingly rare instance that we would close classes and offices at K-State," he said. He said if the University cancels classes, announcements would be made through local media.

He said because most students live on or close to campus and because campus employees make sacrifices to keep residence halls and offices running during poor weather, it would be "a waste of resources" to close the University.

A change in the state education system towards increased quality was the emphasis of a speech given by Gov. John Carlin Tuesday afternoon at the second of three President's Seminars scheduled for this school year.

The seminar, addressing the expectations of the Board of Regents system and especially K-State, was at the Holidome and was attended by about 50 department heads and other University administrators. The third seminar has been scheduled for April 24.
